"The first paragraph of a joint statement issued last Friday night by the University of North Carolina and Wake Forest College did not appear in the Saturday morning newspapers carrying an account of the statement. That paragraph pointed that 'both institutions regret and deplore the occurence.'

"To me, the main point is that unsportsmanlike behavior occurred in the game involving members of both teams.

"I have retracted my statements inplying that coaches at the University of North Carolina encouaged or condoned unsportsmanlike behavior. This I was glad to do. I am glad that we are to play the freshman game (the freshman game betwen UNC and Wake Forest was postponed due to Hurricane Hazel on Oct. 15, and the varsity game was played on Oct. 23). I am glad that we are to continue athletic relations. Both schools have repudiated the display of bad sportsmanship exhibited at Chapel Hill.

"The two schools and the conference should see to it that this sort of thing shall not occur again. It is of utmost importance that all athletic relations and contests be conducted in accordance with good educational philosophy and practice. I suggest now that we close the chapter on this deplorable incident, and get on with the business of fostering better athletics in the context of better education."

The original joint statement which was agreed upon by Dr. Tribble and Chancellor Robert B. House was as foliows:

"The Wake Forest College and University of North Carolina freshman football game which was scheduled for Friday, Oct. 15, was cancelled because of Hurricane Hazel. Subsequently the Wake Forest-North Carolina varsity game was played at Chapel Hill on Oct. 23.

"This game was marred by an unfortunate incident involving players from both institutions as well as spectators and others. Both institutions regret and deplore the occurance.

"Following this game, President Harold W. Tribble ad Coach Tom Rogers made public statements charging or implying that the University coach condoned or encouraged unsportsmanlike conduct on the part of players. They now voluntarily retract these charges or implications. The officials of the university welcome and accept this retraction.

"The officials of the University of North Carolina and of Wake Forest College feel that the long standing athletic relationships between the two institutions should continue. And that such relationships, in good feeling, can enrich other more precious areas of their common task. Accordingly, both institutions feel that the freshman game should be played in Wilson on Nov. 12."

Hodges Against State's Acting On Problem

RALEIGH (AP)—Gov. Hodges indicated yesterday he feels the Legislature should not act on the school segregation problem until the U. S. Supreme Court has taken further action on the subject.

The Governor was asked at his news conference his opinion of a statement made Tuesday by State Sen. Luther Barnhardt who is expected to preside over the 1955 State Senate. Barnhardt said he thought the Legislature would be "leaping in the dark" if it acts on the problem before the Supreme Court hands down a decree to put into effect its decision that school segregation is unconstitutional.

"I think that is a very sensible statement to make," said Hodges. He said that did not mean the subject "should not be discussed" nor that bills dealing with the issue will not be introduced.

He said he thinks that before North Carolina reaches "any final conclusions as to what this state should do, I think we should know the effect of our brief and the other states' briefs on the Supreme Court."

The Governor also discussed conferences he has held recently with the Advisory Budget Commission and with Barnhardt and Rep. Larry I. Moore of Wilson, who is expected to be speaker of the house in the 1955 session.

Crises Cause Headaches, Says White

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Emotional crises and muscular tension are more often the cause of periodic headachees than physical illness, Dr. Kerr L. White said yesterday at the closing sessions of a seminar on neurology held here this week.

Dr. White, who is assistant professor of medicine, UNC Medical School, was one of eight lecturers in the third day's sessions of the postgraduate medical course, attended by general practioners from various parts of the state.

Discussnng the "Diagnosis and Treatment of Headaches," Dr. White said: "Periodic headaches are important sources of personal, domestic and occupational morbidity. Infections, injuries and brain tumors produce a small proportion of all headaches but rarely do they cause recurrent, periodic headaches."

He added that, contrary to popular opinion, "eye strain and sinusitis" only occasionally cause this condition.

Most headaches are the result of several contributing factors, including "changes in the blood vessels and circulatory system of the brain: muscular tension; bony abnormalities in the neck; and overly-conscientious, strict and hard-driving personality structure, and disturbing problems and situations in life."

Dr. White said that headache treatment is based on "careful physical and psychological evaluation of all these elements. Frequently the most important aid to recovery is a change in the patient's way of life and his attitude toward life."

Petition Is Still In Circulation

Dr. W. C. George, originator of a campaign against integration of the races in the state's public schools, said yesterday that the petition is still in circulation and will soon reach Governor Hodges' desk.

Dr. George, when asked how many names had been signed to the petition, replied that the list was "still out in the field, and would not be released except by the Governor himself."

The petition, drawn up by Dr. George and "a few other people," deplored the "efforts of some people to identify a program of integration of the races with Christianity."

"It is rather a biological and social problem. There are vital reasons why destruction of the white and colored races should not be promoted. It is unbelievable that we should passively accept such an outcome by edict," it stated.

In explaining the biology involved, Dr. George said, "no cattle breeder would want to cross up his productive stock with a stock with an unproven record. We should do all in our power to develop their (the Negroes') capacities but not destroy ours . . . When you cross up different breeds of animals, including man, you spoil the breed."

The professor declared he did not wish "to come into public notice over this issue, but I think the other side should be told. I have come out of seclusion to promote it."

Geographer Calls For Trade-Sense

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Geographers should devote more attention to research in "cost geography" and more time to application of their knowledge in solving business problems, the president of the Association of American Geographers said last night in a dinner address here.

Dr. Joseph A. Russell of the University of Illinois in Urbana, spoke before the annual banquet at the ninth annual meeting of the southeastern division, AAG, being held at the Unversty ths weekend.

"If geography is to remain a dynamic and growing discipline, it must subject its philosophies, facts and techniques to testing in the caldron of the business world," Dr. Russell said.

He added that "in no other way can the influence of geographic thinking, which we as geographers believe to be valuable, penetrate broadly through the fabric of society."

Although many geographers have contributed to land-planning, resource development and conservation, and military planning, he explained, only a few have entered the business field as professional

'Three For Tonight' Stars

MARGE AND GOWER CHAMPION, popular dancing stars, are shown as they will appear in "Three for Tonight," popular musical revue which will be presented in Memorial Hall Dec. 9-10. A Paul Gregory-Charles Laughton production, the show also stars Harry Belafonte and the Voices of Walter Schumann. The "fourth hit in a row" for Gregory and Laughton, the performance is being brought to Chapel Hill by The Carolina Playmakers.

Seats Are Now Available For '3 For Tonight'

The dancing team of Marge and Gower Champion will head a company of 40 performers in "Three for Tonight," a Paul Gregory-Charles Laughton production which will be given here on Thursday and Friday evenings, Dec. 9-10.

Sponsored in their local appearance by the Carolina Playmakers, "Three for Tonight" is a new type presentation which combines music, drama and dance, blending them into one impression of sound, motion and color.

Both performances, set for 8:30 p. m., will be given in Memorial Auditorium. Tickets are now available now through the Carolina Playmakers Business Office in Abernethy Hall.

Stars, in addition to the Champions, will be Harry Belafonte, actor and singer from Broadway and Hollywood, and the Voices of Walter Schumann.

Belafonte, who achieved stardom last winter in "John Murray Anderson's Almanac" on Broadway, has had leading roles in two soon-to-be released movies, "Bright Road" and "Carmen Jones."

The Schrumann choral group worked with Director Gregory in his production of "John Brown's Body." Gregory also produced "Don Juan in Hell," "The Fabulous Redhead," "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial" and the current motion picture, "Night of the Hunter," which is directed by Charles Laughton.

All music in "Three for Tonight" was composed and written by Schumann, with arrangements by Nathan Scott. Gower Champion has charge of choreography and dramatic staging, and Robert Wells arranged the special effects.

Matter Is 'Closed' Tribble

"I consider the matter closed," said Dr. Harold W. Tribble, president of Wake Forest College, in a telephone interview yesterday concerning the fight which flared up during the North Carolina — Wake Forest football game on Oct. 23.

"Let's not go into it any further. We have had a deans' conference. The issue is settled as far as we are concerned. I am happy that it is settled, and I am hoping we can go on to future happy relations between Wake Forest and UNC., said Dr. Tribble.

According to a story appearing in the Wake Forest newspaper, Dr. Tribble told students in chapel on Nov. 12 that he was "convinced" Carolina men instigated the brawl. He expressed the opinion that Consoles was "slugged," apparently "with an elbow."

Dr. Tribble also urged Wake Forest students against wanting retaliatory action, according to the story.

Smith Act Catches Confessed Commie

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—Bespectacled, baby-faced Junius Scales, accused of being the underground Communist chief of Tennessee and the Carolinas, was held under $100,000 bond yesterday.

Scales, grandnephew of a former North Carolina governor, was arrested Thursday night as he stood at a bus stop on the rain-swept corner of a quiet residential street.

The FBI declined to comment, but it seemed certain agents had had Scales in sight for some time. His arrest came only 5½ hours after he was indicted by a federal grand jury in Wilkesboro, N. C.

Scales, 34, was charged under the membership provisions of the Smith Act, which outlaws any conspiracy to teach or advocate the overthrow of the U. S. government.

In Washington, J. Edgar Hoover, FBI director, said Scales lived at Carrboro, N. C., until he "went underground"—began secret activity in October, 1951.

Agents announced only the barest details of Scales' arrest. His activities over the past three years, if known, were not disclosed.

A. U. S. commissioner's hearing resumes next Tuesday.

C. E. Weeks, specail agent in charge at the Memphis FBI office, said Scales had been "running over the Southern states recently" and was "just passing through" Memphis.

Scales' great uncle, A. M. Scales, was governor of North Carolina from 1885 to 1889.

Maximum penalty possible upon conviction of the Smtih Act charge is 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

SCALES AT CAROLINA

Junius Scales attended the University of North Carolina about 10 years ago. He entered UNC in 1936, dropped out in 1939 and returned in 1946.

He resided at 36 Carr St, Carrboro, for some time, but was not seen after Oct. 6, 1951.

In October, 1947, Scales gave to The Daily Tar Heel a photostated, notorized copy of a statement signed by him.

The statement follows:

"I have been associated with the Communist Party for a number of years. I am speaking in the name of my Party in the hope that I may in a small way dispell some of the dangerous illusions and falsehoods about the Communists which are being used to distract us from the real problems which we must solve: a decent living standard for all the people, a peaceful world, a more democratic American without race discrimination.

"I have had an opportunity of meeting many outstanding Communists, and I can say from long experience and close association that the Communists are the most human, the most principled, the most courageous, the most selfless people I have ever known.

"I am proud to be a member of a party which is democratic both in its own structure and in its outlook. As a Southerner, I am especially glad to belong to the only organization which fights for the full and complete equality of the Negro people.

"Finally, I am glad that my party's patriotism expresses itself, not in hostility toward other countries, not in slavish veneration of the economic status quo, but in practical struggle for the present needs and future welfare of the American people."

The document was signed,

"Junius Scales."

Carolina Is Favored 2 Tallies Over U Va.

By BERNIE WEISS

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—Carolina's Tar Heels, needing victories in their next two games to claim their first winning season since 1949, meet the University of Virginia Cavaliers here this afternoon.

The contest is Carolina's next-to-last, and the team now has a 3-4-1 record. Wins against Virginia and Duke (the latter game Nov. 27) will do the trick for the Tar Heels.

Coach George Barclay has predicted a win for the locals, who seek to get back on the winning side of the ledger after last week's humbling by Notre Dame, 42-13. Oddsmakers favor Carolina by two touchdowns.

Barclay said, "We should be up for this game and we should take them."

Although North Carolina will be without the services of quarterback Albert Long and fullback Marshall Newman, the picture is brightened somewhat by the return of soph halfback Ed Sutton. Sutton came up with a sprained ankle in practice nearly four weeks ago and missed the Tennessee, South Carolina and Notre Dame encounters, but trainer Doc White says the speedy groundgainer will be in form today, though not up to his usual swiftness.

Sutton has been drilling with the team this week and says he feels much better and "ready."

According to scouting reports, the Tar Heels do not have much to fear from the Cavaliers in the way of a ground attack. Coach Ralph Floyd, who has done the scouting for this game, reports however, that the Cavaliers have a highly potent aerial game, directed by a bright quarterback—Rives Bailey.

Virginia's only ground threat comes through halfback Herb Hartwell, who likes to drive up the middle and off tackles.

CAVALIERS LETHAL

The Cavaliers are a slightly underestimated team. They came within one point of beating Army on the Cadets' home field, which shows what they can do when "up" for a game. Their other wins have been recorded over slightly less imposing elevens—Lehigh, George Washington and VMI. Coach Ned McDonald has seen his team drop contests to Penn State, VPI and South Carolina.

South Carolina, incidentally, has been the only common opponent. Carolina edged the Gamecocks in the closing minutes of play, 21-19, while the Columbia gridders whitewashed U.Va., 33-0.

The game will be broadcast over Radio Station WRAL, with Ray Reeve doing the play-by-play on the Tobacco Sports Network. WCHL here will also broadcast the tilt.

Council Member Katzenstein Comments On Honor Editorials

By MILDRED SCROGGS

An editorial in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel pointing out "The weak links in the Honor System" brought varied reactions from a member of the Men's Honor Council yesterday.

Four points aimed at "adequately protecting the rights of the defendant" were presented in the editorial.

They were: (1) The accused should hear all of the testimony against him. (2) The accused should be supplied with counsel. (3) The accused should have the right to subpoena witnesses through the court. (4) The accused should have the right to open trial.

Charles Katzenstein, a member of the Men's Council, said "all four points on the surface seem reasonable," when asked his reaction to them.

In reply to the first point that the accused should hear all testimony against him, Katzenstein said the defendant did hear the testimony through the members of the council. He said that the Council's practice of hearing separate testimony from the defendant and accuser is to save the persons involved from embarrassment.

"It takes a certain amount of guts to report a person for violating the Honor Code, and if the accuser knew he would have to testify before the defendant he would probably never report him in the first place," said Katzenstein."

He said that if the testimonies conflicted in any way the accuser and the accused were brought together to testify. "I haven't heard any complaints on the parts of the defendants."

In reply to the point that the counsel should be supplied for the accused, Katzenstein said the person accused could ask a member

Fund Is Growing

Nearly 300 applications for Christmas help through the Junior Service League's Empty Stocking Fund have already been received.

Mrs. Gran Childress, chairman of the annual project, said that requests for "adoption," in the form of personalized assistance by civic and church groups, as well as individuals, are still coming in. The great need at present, she said, was for more groups and persons to give direct help to needy families. The Junior Service League is acting as the referral agency.

County Welfare Superintendent Mrs. Jane Parder this week gave complete endorsement to the woman's civic club's plan. Mrs. Parker said that many people had come in her office to let them know they wanted Christmas help from the Empty Stocking Fund.

The purpose of the Empty Stocking Fund is to help those needy families who depend on a basket from someone for their only Christmas.

Names and addresses of needy persons should be referred to Mr. Childress by Dec. 8 at 9-9303. Also persons interested in "adopting" a needy family have been urged to call Mrs. Childress at the same number.

Air Force Renews Tie With N.C.S.

RALEIGH—The U. S. Air Force has renewed a contract with the School of Engineering at North Carolina State College for research work concerning the vibratory compaction of metals and ceramic powders and their heat treatments, bringing the total amount in contracts for the project to approximately $60,000, officials said yesterday.

The project, which has been in progress since April, 1952, has gone into a new phase recently, expanding to include investigation of thermal treatment techniques of cemented carbides, cermets and pure oxides, compositions which are important as components in jets and rockets.

Dr. W. C. Bell, research professor of ceramic engineering at State college, is technical director of the project.

Pre-Registration Set

Pre-registration for General College students will begin Dec. 1 and extend through Dec. 17.

At State Student Legislature:

UNC Resolution Passes

By RUTH DALTON

RALEIGH — After five hours of hot debate the House of Representatives of the 18th State Student Legislature passed a resolution implementing the cause of academic freedom, introduced by the Carolina delegation.

Debate on the measure began at 11 a.m. yesterday and continued until late in the afternoon.

House Speaker Joel Fleishman left his chair for the first time since the session began to speak on behalf of the measure.

W. P. Brandon, professor of political science at Lenoir Rhyne College, was granted the House floor to speak on the proposed act and said his teaching colleagues, "I do not believe that one-half of one per cent of us is dangerous."

Prof. Brandon also said, "You are the inheriters of a long line of individuals who have not been afraid. 'Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free'."

Several amendments were offered to the resolution, only one of which passed. The two discussed articles in the measure were as follows:

Article II: College instructors shall not be censured, fired or intimidated in any manner for their beliefs, ideals or teachings; unless it can be proven that they are conspiring to overthrow the United States Government or that their teachings are of an immoral nature.

Article V: Colleges shall be permitted to set up courses in communism and all forms of totalitarianism, including the practices of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party in this country.

The Anti-Segregation Bills:

'But This Year It's Different'

By LOUIS KRAAR

RALEIGH — "It seems to me that you folks are trying to stir up something," the slight, dark-haired man told Carolina students Sue Fink and Bob Young outside the House here in the Capitol.

The man, Prof William P. Brandon of Lenoir Rhyne, was referring to a resolution implementing the Supreme Court's segregation ruling, which UNC will introduce here at the State Student Legislature.

"Now you students have passed anti-segregation bills every year, and I'm not criticizing you," the professor said, tapping the heel of his black shoes on the Rotunda railing nervously.

"But this year it's different," Prof Brandon added.

Young pointed out to the teacher that UNC's resolution merely recommends a plan of gradual integration to comply with the segregation ruling.

"Look, sir, there's no sense in our passing anything asking the end of segregation. The Supreme Court has already done that. We just have a plan on how to end it," Young said.

"You understand," the professor said, "I'm not telling you what to do. I agree with what you do, but it just won't sound right in the state."

Leniency bill originator David Reid took to the Senate floor yesterday afternoon to speak for a bill to abolish capital punishment in the state.

Reid faced the Senate with him on the issue, and he managed to get a leniency bill passed.

As this reporter was writing his story in the Capitol press room, a janitor stuck his head in the door.

"Is the Student Legislature going to be meeting tonight?" he asked.

He was told that it would.

"Well, how about asking them to pass a bill to raise my salary and lower my work?" the janitor requested.

After working hours, Carolina's delegation relaxes in the plush Governor's Suite of the Sir Walter.

Jim Turner, who is in charge of the suite, published a book of popular college songs that sells for 25 cents.

"I may break even on this legislature yet," remarked Turner as his books sold rapidly.

Segregation, Biology, & Dr. George

Dr. W. C. George, at 66, has served this University for over 40 years as zoology and anatomy professor. He is one of the reserved, respected teachers who, by outstanding work in their fields, have brought the University to such prominence in this century.

Dr. George's name is in "Who's Who" but it had been in few headlines before his pro-segregation petition to the Governor reached the front pages this week. As he himself put it, "I did not wish to come into public notice over this issue, but I think the other side should be told. I came out of seclusion to promote it." This is no rabble-rouser, but a scientist, an intellectual.

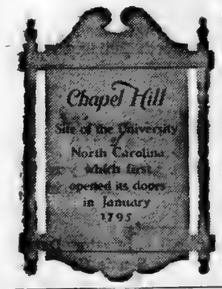
The position thus becomes all the more saddening. When a man of the stature of Dr. George speaks on segregation, people are likely to listen. And when he says segregation is necessary to "protect both races from destruction," many people are likely to believe him.

Segregation, as we pointed out yesterday, is a legal question and a social, moral and economic question, but not a biological one. However, since Dr. George has raised the specter of a "spoiled breed", it seems necessary to follow that theory out the window.

Dr. George stands against almost all anthropologists and geneticists with his breed-spoiling theory. Virtually the whole body of material pertinent to the question of race differences has indicated the lack of evidence for the superiority of one race over another. Moreover, no race today is "pure" in any strict anthropological sense and racial purity is impossible of attainment.

Inherent personality and intelligence differences between races have never been demonstratd, and no valid argument has been advanced to show that race mixture diminishes these traits.

The Daily Tar Heel still maintains that the whole discussion of biology is off the subject. No wholesale miscegnation has taken place in places where races are allowed to intermarry. We see no indication that intermarriage would follow de-segregation in the schools, certainly not in the foreseeable future. Dr. George has simply come up with an intellectual variant of the old red-necked question, "You're for integrated schools, huh? Would you want your daughter to marry a Negro?"



Our only point for this discussion of biological factors with regard to race is this: Just because Dr. George is a scientist does not mean he is on the side of science in this controversy.

Even if the social difficulties that ending public school segregation will bring upon the South were all that Dr. George had based his petition on, we would still oppose it. The legal tide is clear; "separate but equal", the Court has wisely said, is a meaningless phrase. Segregation, no matter who sets his face against it or with what arguments, is about to end because, whatever else it is, it is legally and morally wrong.

Dr. George could have done his state far greater service if he had recognized that fact and had lent his counsel to those North Carolinians who are attempting to bring segregation to an end with acceptance and calm.

YOU Said It: How Come Credits Don't Transfer?

Nobody Told Me

Editor:

I am a junior at the University of North Carolina in the field of medical technology. I went to WCUNC for two years with the idea of transferring to the Chapel Hill unit of the University for my junior and senior years, as that school is connected with a hospital and its students of medical technology become registered with the American Medical Association when they receive their BS degree. During my freshman year I began corresponding with UNC officials and on two occasions came to Chapel Hill regarding this matter. I was led to believe by conferences, correspondence, and literature furnished me that this plan of study was available to me.

Upon registered at UNC on September 14, 1954, I was informed that this course was not available to me as I had transferred. I fail to understand why this is true since I transferred with the same major and since, technically, I did not transfer, but moved from one part of the Consolidated University to another.

Needless to say, I am very unhappy about this situation as it will be necessary for me to work a year under a pathologist after graduation before I can become registered if I am unable to follow this program of study. If I had been informed of this when I first made my intentions known to this institution, I could have made arrangements to transfer to a school where this course was available to me, but as I previously stated, this possibility was not entertained by me until I was in the act of registering here this term.

Name withheld by request

Editor:

I wonder how many people are as disgusted as I am with the muddle this University's in?

It was bad enough when a girl lost credits transferring inside the "Consolidated University", mind you, when it was on the quarter system here, but when credits don't transfer when both WC and UNC are on the semester system it seems as though everything's a bit loused up. Not only do we have to repeat courses we have already taken, not only are we hourly deficient, as both schools don't give the same hourly credit, but also after we get here we are mis-advised by some uninterested person in our department.

We are told that we are given credit for this, that we don't have to take that and that the other isn't required. Then, in the middle of our first semester, senior year, we are informed that one course doesn't average out with another, that we are deficient in this, that and the other, that we have to repeat three or four courses which we hated the first time, and that one course has just been re-classified, or was classified (it really doesn't matter) as a freshman course. No credit.

How nice! Only one and a half more years plus the three and a half we have already put in at these "institutions of higher learning." Then, no doubt, they'll change again and we'll have to start all over.

I recommend that all students thinking of transferring not transfer to Carolina. You'll be living on Social Security before you graduate.

I also see no reason for advisers. I'm sure we students could make just as bad a mess of things with just a little effort.

A most disgusted ex-WC girl who wishes she had stayed there!

'Apartheid' On Med School Hill'

Editor:

This is an open letter to Dr. W. C. George:

"I think you must have been feeding on Madison Grant, Stoddard and some of the other pseudo-scientists. I know of no anthropologist or any scientist of any repute who talks in terms of the superiority of the Great White Race. Give Negroes a chance for economic and educational mingling with the Great White Race and you will see that our aloofness has kept them from exercising their potentialities. I object to your Malan "apartheid" philosophy in our educated country.

Mundy: 'Unfair, Biased, Uninformed'

Editor:

For five and one-half years I have read The Daily Tar Heel every day, agreeing with writers sometimes, and disagreeing other times. Now I want to sound off.

Mr. Mundy, in his Friday column on Senator Sam Ervin, accuses him of jumping on the bandwagon in his attack on Senator McCarthy. There are also many other insinuating and derogatory remarks about Senator Ervin. I would like to point out that to many Tar Heels, both in this University and in the state at large, Senator Ervin is one of the most qualified men in the Senate. A long and honorable career as a lawyer, Superior Court judge and Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina preceeded his entrance into the Senate. During this period Senator Ervin showed his ability to think for himself.

Senator Ervin expressed his views on Senator McCarthy upon receiving his appointment to the Senate. As a member of the committee to investigate McCarthy, Senator Ervin did so as was his duty, in a fair manner, reserving judgement upon the facts. But all this is history, which obviously was never known, forgotten, or overlooked by Mr. Mundy when he wrote his defense of McCarthy.

Now, a word to Mr. Mundy. You as a writer owe me as a reader a duty to give me something decent to read. That article was not only unfair, biased, and uninformed, it was a unreasonable and cynical attack on a fine man. As a writer, you have the right to express your individual views, but I think that I also have the right to say that I think your opinion of Senator Ervin is reflected by a small minority of your fellow students.

Reid, Mundy Fight It Out In Raleigh

Louis Kraar

RALEIGH—All three telephones in the governor's suite at the Sir Walter Hotel jangled his reporter awake yesterday morning.

That's how a day at the State Student Legislature begins here for UNC students.

First thing I heard yesterday morning—after the phone trio—was the clacking of a typewriter in the corner. Charlie Dean was up early preparing a bill. Jim Turner prompted room-service over one of the phones. And unexpected breakfast guests from other schools trickled into the suite's dining rom.

From the hotel, it was a short stroll down misty Fayetteville Street to the Capitol and student debate.

CONSERVATIVE DAVID Mundy, a member of the House of Representatives here, and liberal David Reid stole the show in the House as the session began.

Mundy introduced a resolution praising the achievements of the Republican Party in the last two years. That started it off. A speech praising the GOP did the rest.

Representative Gordon Forester assailed the Republican Party—and Mundy. Then David Reid, a Senator, was called over to the House to finish the job.

"The Republican Party is like a great hydra, not knowing which head is doing what," Reid started off.

"The Republican Party is led by a glorified drill sergeant," Reid boomed out, shaking a hand over in Mundy's direction.

Dick Albert, a Carolina student, told Speaker Joel Fleishman that call Eisenhower a "glorified drill sergeant" was disrespectful to the Army. And the House applauded for a full minute Fleishman finally pounded them to silence with his gavel.

"The arrogance and audacity of anyone objecting to being called an enlisted man in our great Army," Reid shouted.

Lewis Brumfield, also a UNC man, sprinted down the aisle of the House at this point, looking like a football player busting through a line. "Mr. Speaker, that is a lie!" Brumfield yelled.

Speaker Fleishman's gavel cracked out over the noise in the hall. It took some moments to quiet the group. "Will the sergeant-at-arms please remove Mr. Brumfield?" said Fleishman quietly. And Reid went on with his talk against the Republicans.

Reid lit into the Dixon-Yates contract, and Mundy rose to a point of order "because Reid speaks of corruption."

"Precisely sir," Reid said. And Mundy asked permission to leave until "this libel is over."

Finally—after Reid predicted doom for the GOP "by that glorified drill sergeant"—the House refused to vote approval of the Republican Party, 72-22.

Reid went back to the Senate, which soon voted against GOP approval too, 32-13.

GOVERNOR HODGES, perhaps, put his finger on the real meaning of this mock legislature when he addresed the group.

Hodges recalled his days at Chapel Hill and a mock peace conference after World War I. "I was Lloyd George if England. And, if I remember correctly, we settled the peace conference more quickly and better than the real one did," Hodges said.

"You will probably do the same thing here. The difference is that you do not have to assume the responsibility for carrying out your legislation," the governor explained.

Nevertheless, student delegates question their contemporaries on the practicality of various measures. And the blind idealism that we all find ourselves guilty of here in school is tempered by careful thinking.

'Is There Somewhere Else To Go?'

Lennon Got Burned

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON—Here are the hard-core Republican Senators who Joe McCarthy expects will vote for him: Bricker, Ohio; Bridges, N. H.; Butler, Md.; Dirksen, Ill.; Goldwater, Ariz.; Jenner, Ind.; Malone, Nev.; Mundt, S. D., and Welker, Idaho.

Here are other Republicans who may either go along with Joe or favor a compromise: Capehart, Ind.; Hickenlooper, Iowa; Knowland, Calif:; Langer, N. D.; Martin, Pa.; Schoeppel, Kans., and Wiley, Wisc. Others who are wavering include Barrett, Wyo.; Beall, Md., and Dworshak, Idaho.

If McCarthy gets two Democrats, as he claims privately, they'll probably be Eastland of Mississippi and Daniels of Texas. Another Democrat, Lennon of North Carolina, made some pro-McCarthy cracks when he arirved in Washington, but got burned by them; while Holland of Florida is another who might possibly stray from the Democratic fold.

Army Favors Ebasco

Congressman Chet Holifield of California has run across some interesting connections between the Army, the public utility lobby and the Atomic Energy Commission. His discoveries made it appear that the Army engineers are hand in glove with Electric Bond and Share, the big holding company which is behind the Dixon-Yates contract.

Holifield also pointed up the fact that Atomic Energy Commission is now dominated by military men, though Congress carefully passed a law providing for civilian control of the atom.

What Holifield discovered was a letter from Maj. Gen. B. L. Robinson of the army engineers to another general, Kenneth Nichols, manager of the Atomic Energy Commission. It read: "Dear Ken—for your information, herewith is a copy of a letter from Johnny Hardin verifying his position with relation to the location of the Dixon-Yates steam plant." The letter was signed, "Robby."

General Robinson enclosed another letter from Gen. John Hardin, also of the army engineers, who had written "Robby" (Robinson) about meeting with "Representatives of Ebasco" Electric Bond and Share) on a proposed site for the plant near west Memphis, Tenn.

Then General Hardin added some interesting intelligence in a postscript: "They (Ebasco representatives)," he said, "seemed pleased with the conference. We aimed to be helpful, rather than obstructive."

While Republican committee members fidgeted, Congressman Holifield pressed General Nichols for an explanation of that unusual language. He maintained that the Army engineers should have been neutral, rather than either "helpful" or "obstructive."

'Obstructive' General

Nichols, however, hedged: "I do not know the meaning of that."

Holifield was not satisfied.

"When I read this letter," he said, "I wondered about the postscript, because it so happens that I was chairman of the Military Housing Subcommittee in Alaska when General Hardin was in the Pentagon, and the particulars I I received from General Hardin and the difficulty I had then indicated to me that he must have looked upon my inquiry with a little bit different opinion than he did yours.

"I attach special significance to this," continued Holifield, "and think that in the future, if I have to deal with Johnny, I will come to Ken and ask Ken to give me a letter."

The humor was lost completely on Gen. "Ken" Nichols."

"I would be pleased to do that, sir," he replied stiffly.

"As I look at this (the Dixon-Yates contract)," continued Holifield, "I could almost believe that it is a military operation. We have General Johnny and General Robby and Colonel Mitcham and General Kenneth. And we have the Commander-in-Chief, General Eisenhower, and Admiral Strauss (chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission).

"So it looks like a military operation, and I wonder if the cooperation had anything to do with the conception of the line of command."

By this time, even Republican committee colleagues were laughing. But General Nichols just did not think there was anything funny about it at all.

Note — The giant Electric Bond and Share Corporation, which the Army Engineers seemed to favor, was investigated by Hugo Black before he left the Senate for the Supreme Court and was one reason for passage of the holding corporation act to disband the big holding companies and their grip on local utilities. The Dixon-Yates investigation has shown that Electric Bond and Share still dominates local utilities in the South, despite the Holding Corporation Act.

Outside Interference

Undersecretary of Agriculture True D. Morse is sorry he let himself be talked into campaigning against fiery Democrat Wayne Hays, Congressman from Ohio's 14th district.

Safely re-elected, Hays phoned Morse last week and sarcastically told him: "I'm sorry I wasn't around to return the greeting when you came to say hello last month, but I was busy campaigning."

Morse was duly embarrassed and mumbled something about "nothing personal."

"I thought you'd like to know," Hays continued, "that this was the first election in which I carried the county where you spoke. Before, it had always gone Republican.

"You're welcome any time you want to visit," Hays concluded cheerily.

Note — Ironically, Undersecretary Morse didn't want to get mixed up in the Ohio campaign and did so only after much urging from GOP Chairman Len Hall.

Washington Pipeline

General Motors' much-publicized expansion plans, which were supposed to be a sign of GM's faith in the American economy, actually are intended largely for Europe. GM has already drawn up blueprints for $200,000,000 worth of new facilities in England, Germany, Belgium and Switzerland . . . By building overseas, GM's labor costs will be lower and profits higher . . . Secretary of Agriculture Benson has succeeded in whittling down the government's mountain of butter from 466,000,000 to 393,000,000 pounds. One method has been to increase GI consumption. He has dumped nearly 36,000,000 pounds of surplus butter on the Army, has also persuaded the Army to raise the daily milk ration by half a pint. Now he's negotiating with the Navy and Air Force to use up more surplus dairy products . . . Tax Boss T. Coleman Andrews now writes tough letters to newspaper editors when he's criticized in print. (Andrews has the power to investigate anyone's taxes, but he'll find editors aren't easily intimidated.)

Credo

Colin Knew He'd Better Not Contest

Dick Creed

Colin McMillan was all hush Thursday as to why he chose not to contest the election in Town Men's I in which his name was left off the ballot.

"The main reason" he gave was that "I'm a member of the University Party and I ran on its ticket."

He said he didn't contest the election because he thought it would be in the best interest of the party if he didn't.

There is an interesting story as to how McMillan reached this decision.

The story has it that on the night of the election (Tuesday), when the UP saw that it had won four Legislature seats in the district to the SP's one, Tom Creasy, UP President of the Student Body, went to the Phi Kappa Sigma house and accosted their brother in politics McMillan.

Creasy was fearful that if the election were contested and a revote called, the Student Party would carry on an extensive campaign there and win all or some of the four seats the UP had copped.

According to the story, Creasy aided by Hartwell Conklin and Wally O'Neal, strong UP members of Phi Kap, succeeded in persuading McMillan that it would be in his own personal interest and in the interest of the party if he didn't contest the election. Creasy promised him that if a vacancy occurred in the Legislature, he, McMillan would be appointed to fill it.

Since then, according to the story, McMillan has said he would have liked to have contested the election, but wouldn't because of the pressure it would bring upon him from the party.

While the Student Council was deciding the other day whether to grant a re-vote in the district on an appeal by the SP, McMillan, contacted at the Phi Kap house, said that this story "as a whole" was not true. He declined to say which parts of it were true and which were not.

Meanwhile, various UP leaders, Chairman Rueben Leonard among them, were saying that it was not fear for his personal political career that prompted McMillan's decision.

Creasy, according to Leonard, urged McMillan to do "whatever would make him feel right" about the matter. Creasy reportedly urged him that it was his privilege to call for a re-vote in the district.

The SP's bid for a re-vote, made for exactly the same reasons the UP feared a re-vote, has been turned down by the Student Council. So the whole thing is probably over.

But latest reports have it that McMillan "doesn't feel right" about not contesting the election.

I suspect that the Phi Kap trist was dominated by Creasy's usual apologetic "I sincere feel" ad "Let's do what's right about this thing" and "It is my honest opinion . . . ."

But all the sincere feelings and honest opinions not withstanding, McMillan knew that he'd just better not contest that election.

Ohio State-Michigan Heads Slate Of Saturday Contests

Cross Country Team At DavidsonForAAUMeet

By RAY LINKER

The North Carolina varsity will be one of seven teams competing in the Carolina's AAU cross country championship at Davidson College at 11:00 o'clock this morning.

Other teams besides the Tar Heels that are entered are N. C. State, Davidson, Belmont Abbey, Presbyterian, the Burlington Running Club, and Myers Park High School of Charlotte.

All of the 50-odd entrants are not running with a team, however, as there are some who will run unattached.

A. Heath Whittle, Davidson cross country coach and chairman of the Carolinas' AAU long distance running committe, is in charge of the event. The first five runners to complete the four-mile course will receive gold medals, the next five will get silver, and the following five will pick up bronze. The team which has five numbers cross the line before a like number of another team will receive a plaque for its top performance.

Tar Heels entered are Bob Barden, Tony Houghton, Scotty Hester, Glenn Nanney, Boyd Newnam, Don Wright, and Marion Griffin. The team's top runner and champion of the ACC, Jim Beatty, will not compete, as he leaves by plane today to run in the NCAA cross country championship at Michigan State College, East Lansing, Michigan, on Monday morning at 11:30 (CST).

Barden will be the main threat for Carolina. He finished fourth in the recent ACC run, behind third-placer Dave Miller of State. Pete Ashcraft, Davidson's top harrier who copped second in the Southern Conference last Monday, will also be out for the individual crown.

Although the Tar Heels will be without the services of Beatty, the state meet held at Raleigh on November 8 should be a good indication of how the race will turn out. In this meet, which Carolina won over N. C. State by 31-34, Beatty was first, Barden second, Miller third, Bob Jones of State fourth, and Pete Ashcraft fifth.

Traditional Contests Set For Remainder Of Nation

Ohio State and Michigan meet Saturday with the Big 10 championship, a place in the Rose Bowl and possibly the national football title at stake and, for once, everybody will get a chance to see the game.

The NCAA television committee, which picked this "Game of the Week" last summer, really hit the jackpot with the choice. And the impact on attendance hasn't been noticeable in Columbus, where the 82-000-seat stadium is completely sold out and fans are hopefully bidding $30 or so for tickets.

There probably won't be much effect on attendance elsewhere, even though this is the top game in national interest. At Los Angeles, UCLA and Southern California come together to decide the Pacific Coast Conference title before 102,000 spectators and at Iowa City, Notre Dame and Iowa meet before a sellout crowd in a replay of last year's most controversial game.

Ohio State, winner of eight straight games, needs only a victory or a tie against its most respected rival to win the Big 10 title and the Rose Bowl bid. Southern California already has clinched the other place in the Rose Bowl, since UCLA isn't eligible.

These two games could have a considerable impact on the national rankings. Last week's Associated Press ranking poll put Ohio State on top by the thinnest possible margin over UCLA and, if they both win handily, the voting figures to be close again.

If they don't win, Oklahoma, a strong third, and Notre Dame will demand consideration. Oklahoma plays Nebraska while Notre Dame is out to erase the "fainting" stigma from last year's 14-14 tie with Iowa. That was the game which a couple of injuries to Notre Dame players—or was it good acting—gave the Irish the time they needed to tie the score. But the tie cost them a perfect season and the top ranking.

Oklahoma, also ineligible for a bowl game this year, has the opportunity to knock Nebraska out of an Orange Bowl bid. The expected defeat for Nebraska coupled with a Kansas State victory over Colorado, would leave those two teams tied for second place in the Big Seven Conference. Kansas State probably would get the bowl trip because of its 7-3 victory over Nebraska.

Elsewhere in the comparatively light schedule, the bowl games are tied up with the Southern Methodist-Baylor and Duke-South Carolina contests, but they're not likely to decide any of the New Year's Day contestants.

SMU can eliminate Baylor from any chance to tie for the Southwest Conference championship, but it still must deal with Texas Christian next week to clinch a bid to the Cotton Bowl. Arkansas, with a 5-1 record for the conference season, which it has completed, turns to outside competition against Louisiana State this week and Houston next week.

Duke, winner of its two Atlantic Coast Conference games, also has another game after meeting South Carolina. Maryland, hopeful of returning to the Orange Bowl, has finished its conference season with four victories and a tie. Maryland takes on its neighbor, George Washington.

Harvard-Yale

In the East, Yale and Harvard meet for the 71st time and the interest this game has stirred up hardly indicates that Ivy League football has been de-emphasized. Yale, somewhat battered in last week's loss to Princeton, can win the unofficial Ivy championship by beating Harvard. Harvard can win the Big Three title, something regarded even more highly than league honors by the colleges involved.

Minnesota only a half game behind Michigan in the Big 10 race, concludes its season against Wisconsin. Northwestern-Illinois, Indiana-Purdue and Marquette-Michigan State are important only as traditional rivalries.

Tradition also holds sway in the East with Penn State-Pittsburgh, Dartmouth-Princeton, Rutgers-Columbia, Syracuse-Fordham and Lafayette-Lehigh among the headliners.

With the top teams of the Southeastern Conference idle, the standout Southern games are Tennessee-Kentucky, Clemson-Auburn, North Carolina-Virginia, North Carolina State-West Virginia and Wake Forest-William and Mary.

The Southwest offers Texas Christian-Rice and Wyoming-Tulsa and the Far West Stanford-California, Oregon-Oregon State, Washington-Washington State, Utah-Montana, Brigham Young-Idaho and Arizona State-Arizona.

Duke Favored To Down S. C.

Duke is a touchdown favorite to win its third straight Atlantic Coast Conference game. Duke leads the conference with a 2-0 record.

Second place Maryland has finished its league season with a 4-0-1 record, have been tied by Wake orest which Duke toppled last week. Duke closes its season next week against old rival North Carolina.

South Carolina has the No. 1 man in the conference on total offense and passing in soph quarterback Mackie Prickett. Duke will counter with three backs who rate in the top nine—halfbacks Bob Pascal, No. 4; quarterback Jerry Barger, No. 8, and fullback Bryant Aldridge, No. 9.

Duke-ACC Rushing Leaders

Duke has the best conference rushing record and South Carolina is tops in passing, thanks to Prickett's 52 completions in 89 attempts for 559 yards. However, Duke has the best pass defense record and should furnish the supreme test for Prickett.

On play against their only common opponent, Army, South Carolina should rate a decided edge. The Gamecocks opened their season at West Point with a stunning 34-20 upset of the Cadets as Prickett directed the attack and speedy halfbacks Mike Caskey and Carl Brazell each scored twice.

Duke met Army at Durham three weeks later and was soundly spanked 28-14 by a vastly improved Army unit.

South Carolina won the first two games of the series in 1930-31, but since then hasn't beaten Duke as the Blue Devils have piled up nine victories and one tie. Last year it was 20-7.

Game time is 2 p.m. EST.

Pan American Road Race Claims 3 American Lives

OAXACA, Mexico, Nov. 19—(AP)—Three Americans were added to the death list in the Pan-American road race today as the drivers from all parts of the world hurled their machines over the mountainous backbone of Southern Mexico in the opening day of the 1954 competition.

Earlier in the day the Mexican highway police said David Ramsey of El Paso, Tex., had been killed during the night as he drove a Jaguar service car. His companion Ed Shelton, was injured. The accident happened near Tehuantepac, a dangerous stretch of road where eight persons lost their lives in last year's race.

DEATH TOTAL FIVE

Today's trio of deaths raised the 1954 toll to five, two Argentine drivers having been killed last weekend as they made a trial spin over a part of the murderous 1,908 mile route that stretches from the southern border of Mexico to Juarez, opposite Laredo, Tex., on Tuesday.

Originally 164 drivers registered to compete but many failed to arrive and this morning 15 entries in the small U. S. stock car class failed to start because of engine trouble. Others, including much-married Porfirio Rubirosa, were eliminated when they failed to make the 239.3 miles of today's lap in the required five hours.

Mickey Thompson of Del Monte, Calif., in a Ford, was the official leader in the small U. S. stock car class—the Fords, Chevrolets and Dodges. He was timed in 4 hours, 18 minutes, 6 seconds. Four minutes, 11 seconds behind him came Tommy Drisdale of El Paso Tex., in a Dodge. Dan Morgan of Pueblo, Colo., originally listed as the leader in this division, was shunted to third on a revision of times. His time was 4:24:11. He is driving a Ford.

Phil Hill of Santa Monica, Calif., Ferrari, had the fastest time of the day and was the leader in the sports car class. He was clocked in 3 hours, 25 minutes, 16 seconds—an average of 94 miles an hour over the mountain roads where death lurks at every curve.

Intramural Spotlight Shifts To Volleyball

With the end of the Intramural Tag Football season last week, the spotlight on campus Intramural athletics shifts to volleyball.

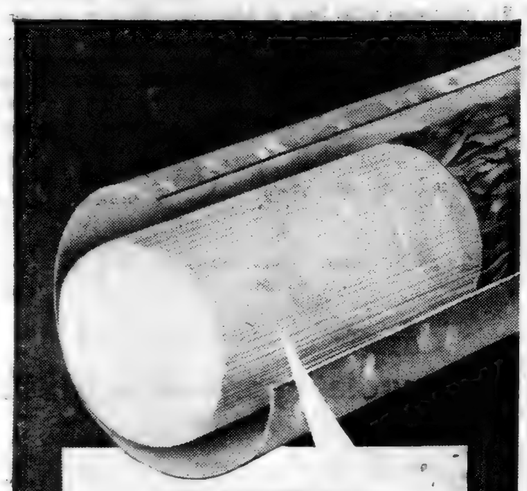
Med School copped the Dormitory Division crown, by downing Law School—2, 15-2 and 15.11. Zeta—1 and Sig Ep meet in one section of the Fraternity League semi-finals, while Phi Gam— and SAE—2 meet in the other section, to determine the participants in the Fraternity finals. The finals are slated for Monday in Wollen Gymnasium. The following day, the Campus finals will be held.

Entries for the round-robin basketball tournament will close November 30th. Each organization is encouraged to enter as many teams as possible, to allow a large number of students to participate.

Rules for the basketball games will come from the National Intercollegiate Basketball Rules, with the following exceptions. The game shall consist of two eighten minute halves, with a five minute intermission between halves. The ten second back-court rule is not enforced in the four small courts on the main floor of the gym and the two small courts in the Tin Can. Unlimited substitutions are permitted.

Entries for Table Tennis and handball close on November 30th, with play beginning December 6th. Competition will be conducted on a single elimination basis for both sports. Organizations will be permitted to enter as many teams as they wish, with the table tennis teams to be composed of four players each and the handball teams to consist of five players each.

There will be an important managers' meeting for both Fraternity and Dormitory managers on Tuesday, November 30th at 7:00 p.m. in room 301-A of Woollen Gym. It is urged that all managers be present, as pictures will be taken at this time.



Davidson Seeks Seventh Win In Contest With Elon

DAVIDSON, N. C., Nov. 19 (AP) Davidson and Elon close their football seasons here tomorrow, with the home team seeking its seventh victory in nine starts. Davidson can match the victory total of its 1926 team by beating the visitors.

The schools last met in football in 1948 when Davidson won, 25-0, to make it 15 in a row over the Christians, who have never scored a touchdown against the Wildcats. The 1933 Elon team tallied a safety for the only Elon points against Davidson.

Coach Bill Dole will send seven Davidson seniors into battle for the last time. Included in the group are two fine backs from Georgia, halfback Jimmy Thacker and fullback Henry Brown.

University Enters Pact

The University has entered into a three-year contract with the Institute of Inter-American Affairs of the U. S. Foreign Operations Administration for the purpose of strengthening the sanitary engineering educational and research programs in the National School of Engineering of Peru.

The contract, which will call for the expenditure of some $185,000, will be administered by the University's School of Public Health through its Department of Sanitary Engineering.

Announcement of the project was made yesterday by Chancellor Robert B. House and Dean Edward G. McGavran, of the School of Public Health.

Dean McGavran visited Peru last spring to determine the needs to be met under the program.

Among the purposes of the project is the integration of laboratory teaching into the five-year sanitary engineering program of the National School of Engineering and the initiation and development of sanitary engineering research work, Dean McGavran said. This will require the participating of the University faculty in the preparation of curricula, equipping of laboratories, and training of teachers and research workers.

It is also planned to develop field demonstration projects in public health and sanitary engineering.

The first professor will go to Peru the latter part of November. He will be Prof. Emil T. Chanlett who will specialize in the field of environmental sanitation. Thereafter other faculty members of the Department of Sanitary Engineering will participate in the program, including Prof. Marvin L. Granstrom, who will be involved in work in sanitary chemistry and biology, and Prof. Daniel A. Okun, who will consult on hydraulics and sanitary engineering.

Other members of the public health faculty will participate later in the program.

Faculty and engineers from Peru will also come to the United States under this project for training so that they may return to Peru and continue the developments initiated.

There are two Peruvian engineers enrolled in the Department of Sanitary Engineering at the University of North Carolina now: Miss Alcira Florez, who will return to take charge of the sanitary engineering laboratory in the College of Engineering in Lima; and Alfonso Zavala, Engineer with the Servicio Cooperativo de Salud Publica, the local agency of the Institute of Inter-American Affairs.

Principals In Engineering Meeting

RALEIGH — (AP) — Attny. Gen. Harry McMullan asserted yesterday it was the legislature and not a ruling from his office which makes it possible for relatives of a voter to apply for an absentee ballot for the voter.

McMullan thus took issue with Samuel H. Still of Washington, counsel for a special House committee who is in Raleigh investigating absentee ballots issued in the 9th Congressional District during the Nov. 2 general election campaign.

Still had stated Thursday that a ruling from the attorney general had "wiped out all the safeguards" North Carolina had in its election laws. He said that since relatives can apply for absentee ballots, "anyone can go" to a county elections board, "claim he is a relative and get an absentee ballot." Still said he had found evidence that persons other than voters or their relatives had filled out applications for absentee votes.

McMullan said that Still conferred with Asst. Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton yesterday and was told that the ruling closely follows the language of the law. He said the law states that the voter seeking to vote absentee "shall make application, in person, by some member of his or her immediate family, husband and wife, brother and sister, parent and child, only or by mail, in writing, to the chairman of his county board of elections of his county for an official ballot to be voted i nsuch general election."

McMullan added, "if any safeguards of the absentee law have been wiped out, as stated by Mr. Still, it has been done by the statute itself and not by ruling of this office."

In the election being investigated by Still, Democrat Hugh Q. Alexander defeated Republican William E. Stevens Jr. 54,103 to 49,555. A probe by the Special House Committee on Election Expenditures was requested by Stevens' supporters.

Still also stated Thursday that he is trying to determine if there is sufficient evidence of irregularities in the election to justify the committee in coming to North Carolina for hearings. He said he had found evidence of widespread violations in absentee voting.

Here in Raleigh, Still has been studying the absentee ballot applications for the 9th District which, in accordance with state law, were sent to Raleigh just prior to the election. Yesterday he told Raymond C. Maxwell, executive secretary of the State Board of Elections, that he wants to take the applications back to the 9th District to check them against local records. He wanted to leave with the ballots yesterday, but Maxwell said he had agreed to wait until the state board meets next Tuesday to request that the applications be turned over to him.

"Among the applications of geographic research to business is the selection of industrial sites, since industrial costs and ultimate profits are subject to geographical variation."

Eight states are represented at the meeting, which officially got under way Friday morning with an assembly in Hanes Hall. The division steering committee held a pre-session conference here on Thursday night.

of the council to help prepare his case and that this council member did not vote in the decision.

The third point that a student should have the right to subpoena witnesses already exists within the Honor Council, according to Katzenstein.

He said the defendant may have character witnesses. He added that council members investigated to see if there were witnesses to violations and asked these witnesses to testify before the council. "Nobody has refused to testify yet, to my knowledge," said Katzenstein.

"Nobody has ever asked for an open trial and if they wanted one it would probably be granted, was Katzenstein's reply to the question of open trial. He said that proceedings were kept confidential to save the defendant from embarrassment.

He said that the average person was embarrassed to have to go before the council even if he were innocent because of the publicity he might receive.

"If a person is dissatisfied with the decision of the Council he may appeal the case to the Student Council," was Katzenstein's final statement on the four points.

Men's Honor Council President Herb Browne could not be reached for comment.

Members of the women's Honor Council declined to make a statement in the absence of President Nancy Whisnant. Bobbie Walker, a member of the Women's Council, said the council was planning to meet to discuss the points presented in the editorial.

—Resolution—

One exchange student from Greece now attending Catawba College was particularly concerned that article might open a way for Communists to infiltrate our classrooms.

A resolution endorsing the achievements of the Republican Party introduced by the UNC group was defeated.

Senator David Reid was granted the House floor to speak against the measure and caused the body to rise up several times with his eloquence and emotionalism .

A bill calling for the repeal of the capital punishment laws introduced by Guilford College also passed, as did a bill from St. Augustine's College calling for a minimum wage law in North Carolina.

Treat 'Em Like Humans?

Di Debates Frosh Car Situation

The Philanthropic Literary Society debated a bill to prevent Carolina freshmen from possessing automobiles last Tuesday night.

The measure was introduced by Representative Robert Iobst, who said the parking and traffic problems warranted such a move.

He pointed out that the expense of a car is too great a responsibility for a freshman. An immature student is more likely to get into trouble if he owns a car, Iobst said.

The bill was suported by Representative Matthews, who said a car would definitely divert a student from studying.

Representative Albert spoke against the bill, saying that many vets and older freshmen would be unfairly punished by such a measure.

Representative Taylor attacked the bill also. He said that students would be reluctant to enter a University where they would not be allowed to have a car.

Representative Horton said that students who are old enough to enter college should be treated as adults. He added that if Carolina intends to turn out men, she must treat the students as responsible human beings when they arrive.

Should Papers Abolish Their Gals' Pages?

TAMPA, Fla. —(AP)—Should women's pages in newspapers be abolished?

A bold recommendation to do this was tossed out yesterday to newspaper editors attending the Associated Press Managing Editors Assn., meeting by Miss Mary Margaret McBride.

The proposal brought forth some of the liveliest comment of the three-day session, but the well-known columnist and radio commentator appeared to win few, if any, converts among her predominantly male audience.

Miss McBride, who writes a daily column for the AP, said she disliked having newspapers setting women's news apart "as if women were something curious" and inquired why it was done.

She received various replies that it was "an old custom;" that it was done because advertisers wanted position for their ads appealing to women and because it was one phase of departmentalizing the newspaper for easier reading.

But Miss McBride said none of these explanations really answered the question.

"Women these days are interested in all types of news," she said "and more men would read news about women and about cooking if it wasn't labeled 'The Woman's Page'."

One brave editor said he thought many of the numerous women's clubs who sought stories in the paper wanted publicity and that newspapers couldn't run such a volume of material in with the general news.

Miss McBride said she figured that most of the men's civic clubs also were out for publicity.

Wallace Lomoe of the Milwaukee Journal told Miss McBride that his newspaper had a news section labeled "For Men" with news about men's fashions, hobbies and the like.

"That's all right," she said. "I just don't like the idea of women being segregated as if they were something from the zoo. They're human beings just like men."

—Carolina—

The series with Virginia is the longest in Carolina football history, dating back to 1892, Since that year, when two games were played, UNC has won 29, Virginia 26, and there have been three ties.

Carolina won last year's tilt, 33-7, easily trouncing the Cavaliers in one of their worst seasons. Virginia's 1953 record was 1-9.

WUNC-TV Channel Four Will Begin Operations On Jan. 4, Says Schenkkan

Director Says 2,500,000 In Audience

WUNC-TV channel four, the state's first educational television station, will begin operations on Jan. 4, acording to an announcement yesterday by Robert F. Schenkkan, director of television for the University of North Carolina.

The opening, previously delayed by construction difficulties, will make available the educational services of the three branches of the University to some 2,500,000 people in the reception area, said Schenkkan.

The 100,000 watt station, with studios in Chapel Hill, the Woman's College at Greensboro and State College at Raleigh, is one of the very high frequency stations and will be picked up within a 10-mile radius.

Through already pledged cooperation of commercial stations, many of the programs will be available to the entire state, said Schenkkan.

Present plans call for full-time operations on weekdays with programs on the air from 3:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 6 to 10 at night on Saturday and Sunday.

NON-COMMERCIAL PROGRAMS

The station will cary only noncommercial programs which are planned to be entertaining as well as educational. Live productions as well as films will be seen over channel four.

Faculty members from the three schools will make appearances regularly over WUNC-TV. In addition, coverage is planned over the Piedmont area through the facilities of the station's mobile unit.

The station directors hope to have an equal distribution of agricultural, home economic and general educational programs for their viewers.

News programs are also planned.

Director Schenkkan said "the equipment is the very best obtainable and yet the cost was exceedingly reasonable. The staff, he added, "is as capable as any you will find in any part of the nation, including Washington."

The station will be the scond of its kind in the South. Houston already has an educational television program.

The station will be the second working in its Swain Hall studios now. Kay Kyser, famed bandleader and long-time Chapel Hill resident, is listed on the station's staff.

Ol'Man Woody Herman 30 Year Clarinet Man

Woody Herman, who brings his award winning orchestra, the "Third Herd" here Dec. 6 for a two-hour concert, is often called the youngest old-timer in the music business.

Herman has been playing the clarinet professionally for over 30 years. He was born in 1913, was a vaudeville star when only nine, a star with a big name band when he was in his teens and made his first phonograph record when he was only 20. His latest band, which has been voted tops in the country by the readers of Metronome magazine, features 14 instrumentalists and a shapely girl vocalist. It has been hailed by Time, Parade and other magazines as the "band that brought back dancing." Their latest Capitol discs of "Muskat Ramble," "Woodchopper's Mambe" and "Mexican Hat Trick" are among the top band records of the year.

WOODY HERMAN

Some of the most successful records of the Herman band have been made in a church.

The sides that Herman recorded for his own label, Mars, and for Columbia Records in New York were recorded in the East 30th Street Columbia Studios. The building was formerly the Adams Presbyterian Church and was sold when the congregation built a new one some years back. Sound engineers t esting for the best accoustical conditions for new high fidelity records found that the stone church, with its massive construction, was a perfect sound chamber. Among the Herman discs to have been recorded there are "Perdido," "Four Others' and "Third Herd."

Klochak Scores Twice; Bullock Passes For Score; Keller Accounts For Touchdown

By FRED BABSON

SCOTT STADIUM, Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 20—A slightly muddy field was not enough to stop North Carolina's fleet backs, as they rapped off 346 yards rushing to overpower Virginia's Cavaliers, 26-14, here today before a sparse crowd of 15,000.

Bouncing back from the humiliating defeat at Notre Dame last week, the Tar Heels threatened to make a rout of it when they went ahead 20-0 midway in the second quarter. But Virginia found the scoring column on a freak pass interception which kept them in the ball game and seemed to give them cause to buckle down.

Carolina completely dominated the first half, amassing 14 first downs to Virginia's one, and 219 yards rushing to ten for the Cavaliers.

Big Don Klochak, Tar Heel fullback, dispelled rumors that his showing against South Carolina two weeks ago (when he gained 124 yards in 12 rushes) was a flash in the pan. Klochak bulled his way to 102 yards in nine tries today, scoring twice.

Len Bullock quarterbacked Carolina for 60 minutes and looked better than he has at any time previously. Bullock gained 70 yards in 21 carries, and gained 60 yards in the air, completing five of 11 passes, one for Carolina's first score early in the second period. Halfback Larry Parker was on the receiving end of the 13 yard flip.

The second Tar Heel tally was practically all Klochak. The 213-pounder from Fairhope, Pa., literally tore the Cavalier line to shreds in accounting for 56 yards of an 84 yard Carolina drive. The line-busting sophomore exploded up the middle from 29 yards out for the score.

Halfback Ken Keller accounted for the third UNC touchdown. Keller intercepted a Virginia aerial on the UVa. 27 yard line. Two plays later he scampered around right end from the five yard line to tally.

Trailing 0-20, Virginia's future looked gloomy. But the Cavalier line rushed Len Bullock, who had faded back from his own 20 to pass, and Bullock was forced to throw hurriedly. Virginia end Charlie Modlin intercepted on the 29 yard line and went down the sideline untouched.

Wanting to remind the Virginia lads that Carolina was boss, the Tar Heels took the ensuing kickoff and rolled 74 yards in nine plays to score. with a little over a minute remaining the the first half. Klochak, on a delayed buck, bulled nine yards for the score.

After the halftime intermission, Virginia appeared rejuvenated, driving 81 yards to score the first time they got the ball. A perfect screen pass from Bonney to Moyer, good for 25 yards, provided the finishing touch.

It also added the finishing touch to the day's scoring, as both teams moved the ball up and down the field, only to run out of gas in the clutch.

Herb Hartwell, with 44 yards in six rushes, led Virginia, followed closely by Joe Niedbala with 41 yards in seven carries. Quarterback Bill Bonney completed three

SSL Honors UNC

By RUTH DALTON

RALEIGH — The UNC-Shaw University joint bill implementing the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in the schools won an award as the best presented bill on the House floor for the 18th session of the State Student Legislature in the second plenary meeting yesterday afternoon.

The joint resolution, which outlined a plan for gradual integration in the schools, was presented by the Carolina and Shaw delegations Friday night in a debate lasting after midnight.

Duke University won the award in the Senate with its resolution on congressional treaties, which paradoxically failed in the House.

Miss Sue Fink and Jim Turner were named by the Carolina delegation as their members on the Interim Council, governing body of the legislature when it is not in session, for next year.

Frances Burroughs of WC was elected president of Interim for the coming season, Hugh Young of East Carolina College was chosen vice president and Ann Willis, of State, secretary.

Some 11 bills were passed jointly in the plenary session by the House and Senate yesterday afternoon.

Placement Service Now Has Scholarship Files

The Placement Service has expanded its service to include a current file on scholarships and fellowships for graduate study in the United States and foreign countries, acording to an announcement yesterday by J. M. Galloway, director of placement.

Galloway said large numbers of scholarships are offered each year by educational institutions, industries, fraternities and other organizations, by the U. S. and other governments and privately-endowed foundations. The University alone offers almost 500 scholarships and fellowships to qualified students each year, and about 90 for graduate study, the placement director said.

Qualifications for grants vary greatly, said Galloway. "One need not be Phi Beta Kappa, BMOC and model rolled into one to receive aid for post-graduate training, though in most cases good grades are important," he said.

PROGRAM ALSO VARIED

The director also said length of study program is varied. "The Spanish government, for instance, makes it possible for students to study in Spain for two summer months, whereas others offer two-year programs, such as the American Institute for Economic Research scholarships for training economic scientists," Galloway said.

Galloway said deadlines for application for most scholarships are January to May, though competitions for several, notably foreign awards, have already closed.

Post-graduate programs, he said, are investigated early in the year.

PLACEMENT SERVICE'S PLACE

The Placement Service, said Galloway, will act only as an information distribution point, and not a selection agency. However, he added, several members of the faculty here serve as selection and /or clearance committees for several outstanding scholarship organizations.

The Placement Service is located in 204 Gardner Hall.

Winston-Salem Students

The Winston-Salem Carolina Club will hold a meeting at 7:15 p.m., tomorrow in Room 212 Phillips Hall. Plans for the annual Christmas dance will be discussed and an election of of ficers will be held.

High School Writing Meet Is Scheduled

North Carolina high school students will be offered a chance for recognition in the 1954-55 good writing contest sponsored by the N. C. English Teachers' Association.

Details of the state-wide competition, now in its seventh year, were announced yesterday in Durham by Dr. Francis E. Bowman of the Duke University English faculty. Dr. Bowman is the president of the NCETA and is this year's contest director.

Prose and verse entries are now being accepted for the contest, which closes Jan. 10, 1955. Outstanding entries will be published in a special issue of The North Carolina English Teacher. NCETA Journal. Names of students receiving honorable menton will also be published.

REV. HARRY SMITH, above, will lead the first of four lectures on "Faith, Sex and Love" tomorrow night in the Assembly Room of the Library. Rev. Smith's lecture will be sponsored by the YWCA and YMCA, and will get underway at 8 p.m. His subect will be "Are You Ready For Marriage?"

Campus-Wide Thanksgiving Set Tomorrow

The YWCA and YMCA will cosponsor a campus-wide Thanksgiving service tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock.

The service will be held at the Episcopal Chapel of the Chapel of the Cross.

Rev. Charles Hubbard, pastor of the University Methodist Church, will speak on "Thanksgiving." Miss Jackie McCarthy will provide special music, and Roy Taylor and Bev Blemker will also take part in the program.

Y spokesmen said yesterday that all students, faculty members and townspeople are invited to attend.

First performance of the 1954 pageant of the Scriptures, music, lighting and tableaux will be Tuesday night at 8:30, followed by daily presentations at the same hour with matinees Saturdays at 11 a.m., 3 and 4 p.m. and Sundays at 2, 3, and 4 p.m. In addition, shows for school children will be held at 11 a. m and 2 p. m. on Wednesdays and Thursdays.

A special Thanksgiving Day show will be held at 3 p.m.

Planetarium Director Andy Jenzano said that "all the tableaux, which are as authentic as possible, this year have been enlarged, improved and relocated to accomplish greater continuity and visibility in the beautiful story.

MANY PLANNING HOURS

"Lighting and poper placement of the scenes as well as redesigning have consumed many hours of laborious planning and work by both University of Noth Carolina ad Duke University professors, artists, narrators and technicians," the Planetarium manager said.

"Millions of small holes in the stainless steel Planetarium dome make possible its being used both as a screen and transparent curtain for showing and projection of the beautiful scenes of 'The Hills of Judea,' 'Nativity,' 'Annunciation,' 'King Herod and the Wise Men,' Appearance of the Angels to the Shepherd' and the cathedral finale.

"Many people who have witnessed the performance in the past will find," Jenzano added, "that we have enlarged the scenes, added to the number of them and generally inmproved the pageant. Nothing has been taken from the tribute to Christmas. We have made a sincere effort to expand it."

The show begins by presenting the heavens of nearly 2,000 years ago and the relative positions of the heavenly bodies at that time. Then the presentation moves to the Scriptures from the story of the birth of Christ.

JUDEAN SKYLINE

Instead of the usual University and Chapel Hill skyline around the lower part of the Planetarium dome, Robert L. Blake, artist and medical illustrator of Duke University, has provided a new panorama of the "Hills of Judea." The scene will be projected on more than 200 feet of the Planetarium chamber.

Blake was assisted by Dr. William F. Stinespring, professor of Old Testament at Duke University, for authenticity.

The tableaux have been redesigned and set by Mrs. B. Vickery Williams, Chapel Hill designer. The special effects, lighting and sets were planned and executed in the Planetarium by its technical staff composed of John T. Brittain, James Gates and R. L. McGhee.

John Clayton and Mack Presslar of the University Communications Center produced the audio portion, and the narration is by Dr. Urban T. Holmes, University professor. Dr. M. S. Davis, astronomy professor, is advisor.

In order that as many persons as possible may see the pageant of Christmas, Jenzano said additional performances will be scheduled at the convience of groups of 11 or more persons.

Advance reservations may be made by contacting the Planetarium by mail or phone, he added.

Auditions Are Open For N.C. Symphony Positions

Auditions for positions in the North Carolina Symphony will be held here next Friday and Saturday, according to Dr. Benjamin F. Swalin, director of the Symphony.

Openings in the Symphony are tympani (doubling on percussion), clarinet, (doubling on bass clarinet), viola and violin. Musicians interested in playing with the orchestra during the coming season should communicate with the North Carolina Symphony Office, Box 1211, Chapel Hill.

Person Exhibit To Be Closed During Holiday

Person Hall Art Gallery, currently showing an exhibit of six artist-teachers in America, will be closed on Thranksgiving Day, but will be open from 2:30 to 5 p.m. Friday and next Sunday, and from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. next Saturday.

The six artist-teachers in the exhibition, Moholy-Nagy, Albers, Hofmann, Ozenfant, Hayter and Zerbe, differ greatly in their individual work, but they share the tendency to discard academic rules and their influence in present-day American art has been described as far-reaching and effective.

The exhibition closes on Nov. 30. Except for Thanksgiving weekend, the gallery is open to the public from 9 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. on weekdays, 9 to 5 on Saturdays and 2 until 5 p.m. on Sundays.

A Tired, Funny Little Man

From The Loris Sentinel

Last week a funny little man hitched-hiked wearily into this town.

He was funny because his face carried on it all the worry and sadness of the world. He was weary because his arms carried two large, black-metal suitcases and a worn zippered briefcase. A traveling man.

He tried to sell us some of his wares, and when we declined to buy any, he started off, at a furious gate, toward town, carrying his worn zippered briefcase. He limped a little. He was weary.

He had come from up in North Carolina, someone said. He had been seen, standing wearily by the roadside with his two heavy black-metal suitcases and worn zippered briefcase and his worried, sad face, thumbing rides through several North Carolina towns. A traveling man.

He was in jail, and his worn briefcase was checked in at the police station. He was drunk and during the course of his night at the jail he had torn off his worn maroon shirt and brown pin-stripe trousers and had screamed his heart out at the walls of this town's jail because he was alone and drunk.

The funny little man had tried to talk Loris Community Hospital attaches into giving him some dope. He was slightly drunk then, and the hospital people called the police, who took him to jail where he remained drunk and tore off his clothes and screamed his heart out at the jail's walls.

When he was let out he had 17 cents in his pocket.

He was asked, in a polite way, to leave this town. To take his worried and sad face and tired arms, pock-marked with the scars of a hundred needles, and get out.

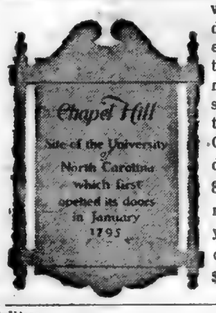
He got out. He was seen, standing wearily on the highway, his tired arm uplifted in the traditional symbol of the hitch-hiker, his worn zipper briefcase under his arm and his two black-metal suitcases by his feet.

He is gone from this town. He is now in another town, trying to get narcotics from the drug store, or from the hospital, trying to sell enough of his wares so he can buy whiskey when he cannot buy dope. He anticipates spending a few nights in strange jails, because he knows somewhere ahead on his road, as on the roads behind him, he will be caught and put in jail.

Like a cigarette, flipped from a hand, on the beach, he will be blown along by the wind, turned over, stopped, started again. He will come to rest by a lump of sand, and the wind will come again sometime and send him down the beach, toward nothing, until at last the tide will come in and he will be gone forever.

What can we, society, do for this man, this funny little man with the limp and the suitcases and the briefcase and the lust, now uncontrolled, for narcotics?

We cannot imprison him, throw him behind bars, for we are not certain whether he has actually done any harm — he may be a "victim of circumstances."



We cannot send him to a federal hospital for dope addiction unless he is tried and sentenced and gives his consent. And he doubtless believes he is not ready for a federal hospital. He's not far enough down the dirty, screaming road yet.

What can we do? We, who claim to be society.

Can we pretend to ignore the cigarette, that is flipped from a hand on the beach . . . that will roll along, blown by the wind, until the tide finally comes and takes it away forever?

Students Find An Answer To Segregation

Louis Kraar

RALEIGH—The cool air blowing through the governor's suite here in the Sir Walter Hotel and the Saturday afternoon football sounds from the radio are just about the only life left in the State Student Legislature right now.

The mock legislature ended a few moments ago over in the Capitol, and hundreds of students from twenty-three North Carolina colleges have hit the road for home—and sleep.

This three-day meeting hit a climax just before midnight Saturday night in the House of Representatives. Carolina's Jim Turner introduced a plan to implement the Supreme Court's segregation decision about 10:30. The evening, before that point, droaned along slowly, getting bogged down in parliamentary procedure at every turn.

Lewis Brumfield, armed with a water pistol, attempted earlier to liven up proceedings with "attacks" from the galleries of both the House and the Senate. But Duke University's Senators took it seriously and wanted to boot Carolina's whole delegation from the chamber. Dave Reid calmed Duke with an oratory uppercut, and the sergeant-at-arms calmed Brumfield.

Brumfield's horse-play was merely a humorous sidelight to an otherwise serious assembly.

AS THE time dragged on though, Brumfield's humor was forgotten, and the group sat looking as bored as an 8 o'clock Saturday class.

"The Supreme Court has already ruled on segregation," Turner told the House. "The problem now is what we are going to do. Should we listen to the NAACP and mix now, or should we do what Georgia did and destroy public schools?" he asked.

Then, pointing to large charts indicating populations of both races in various parts of the state, Turner submitted a plan—one answer to the state's biggest problem today.

Basically, the Carolina integration plan called for immediate integration on the college level and gradual integration at other levels. Desegration was suggested more gradually for areas with over one-third of the school population Negro.

Turner finished. Duke suggested that the matter be put before the state in a referendum. But the House voted this down. Senators stole out of their chamber and went to the House. The horse-play was over, and it was easy to tell from the noise that something would happen.

SPEAKER JOEL Fleishman gradually silenced the House. Twenty students were on their feet asking recognition.

Charles Martin from N.C. State took the floor, almost sprinting to the front of the House.

"The purpose of government is to follow the will of the people. And I maintain that the majority of the people of North Carolina do not want desegregation at the present time," the State student said. He sat down quickly.

Soon it was Gordon Forester's turn.

"Sure, desegregation is going to be difficult. But we're talking about it from the white's viewpoint. It's going to be just as tough for some Negroes.

"But let's quit talking about how tough it is and do something," Forrester declared, his voice ringing through the great hall.

The Carolina student reminded the group that the integration plan left 11 years for full desegregation. He sat down quietly, as if tired from his vigorous talk.

The House applauded Forrester for almost a minute. A WC girl moved a vote.

The clock stood at midnight. There were only four negative votes.

Ike's Wrist Alarm Buzzes Foster To Sheepish Silence

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — Lame-duck Senator Cordon of Oregon held an urgent, private conference last week with Jim Murphy, national chief of the Citizens for Eisenhower organization. With him was Oregon's National Republican Committeeman, Jesse Gard. Cordon complained that his campaign for re-election had gone $26,000 in the red, and he pleaded with Murphy to make up the deficit from the Citizens for Eisenhower treasury.

Murphy was anything but receptive. If he did that, he replied, he would also have to make up campaign losses in Michigan and West Virginia—which would cost $200,000 and more than the Citizens for Eisenhower could afford. Besides, Murphy added, the organization was folding up and moving its furniture out.

Angrily Cordon claimed that Citizens for Eisenhower had promised to pay $750 to install telephones for the phone campaign—calling up people to get out the vote. The Senator said he was able to get the phones installed for only $540, yet he hadn't received a red cent from the organization. Murphy retorted that no one had authority to commit the Citizens for Eisenhower for the bill.

Calming down, Cordon said he didn't really care about the $450. What he was interested in, he said, was collecting $26,000 to pay his campaign bills. Again, Murphy refused to put up the money.

Cordon then gloomily reported that the Republican party had gone to pieces in Oregon. It would have to be "rebuilt one thousand per cent up from the precinct level," he said.

As the conversation ended, Committeeman Jesse Gard looked around the room and remarked: "I hope Drew Pearson isn't listening."

Surrender Terms

Senators on the McCarthy Censure Committee have been mystified over the sudden bolt of one of their members, Senator Case of South Dakota, over to the McCarthy side. During secret debates on the McCarthy censure resolution, Case gave no hint that he was not in full agreement with the other committee members. So it was a shock when he rose on the Senate floor to try to find an alibi for the man he had hitherto opposed.

When pressed later for an examination, Case merely said he was under great pressure. But he refused to say why he was compelled to do what he didn't want to do.

However, here is the explanation:

The McCarthy forces got to Governor-elect Joe Foss in South Dakota, and he in turn notified Case that if he didn't reverse himself on censuring McCarthy, he Foss, would run against him for re-election.

Foss is a popular war hero who led the Republican ticket in South Dakota and was partly responsible for pulling Senator Mundt through to victory. He is also a strong McCarthy man. Case comes up for re-election in a scant two years, and if the new governor ran against him he might well be defeated.

THE BRIEFING

. . . Dulles droned on and on.

That was why the Senator from South Dakota suddenly reversed himself on McCarthy.

Ike's Alarm Clock

President Eisenhower has developed a unique way of stopping long-winded conferences. He tried it out the other day during the two and-a-half hour meeting between Democratic and Republican leaders when John Foster Dulles got involved in a long and tedious, intricate "briefing" on foreign policy.

As Dulles droned on and on, leaders of both parties began to fidget in their chairs. Ike recognized this and looked at his State Secretary several times as if to inquire how long he planned to continue.

Suddenly the alarm on Ike's wrist watch went off with a loud buzz. Whether the President had set the alarm before the meeting or changed it during the course of Dulles' statement to shut off the Secretary is something only Ike knows.

In any case, there was a howl of laughter, with Ike adding a comic touch by grabbing at the watch to silence the alarm.

"Is that a signal for me to stop?" inquired Dulles sheepishly.

"Maybe it is," agreed the President. "I didn't realize we were running so long."

Notes In The Bottom Of The Basket: Ram, Rain, Aldabra

At week's end, time to clean out the baskets in the editorial office . . . including a story told by J. P. Brady in Weimar Jones' Franklin Press, a sign, we suppose, of the times . . . Two groundhogs were busily digging holes and during a coffee break one asked the other, "How far down have you dug?"

"Oh, about 50 feet," the second groundhog figured, "do you think that's deep enough?"

"Good gosh no," exclaimed the other. "My grandaddy dug down 80 feet during the last depression and they were cooking him on the stove by nightfall."

Tom Ochiltree reports from London the story of tiny Aldabra, the island time forgot . . . Aldabra is an Indian Ocean atoll 25 miles northwest of Madagascar. For hundreds of thousands of years it remained practically untouched, for a reason nobody knows.

Aldabra developed its own forms of natural life—wierd creatures that seemed more related to the age of dinosaurs than to the modern world, giant land tortoises, great sea turtles and fierce land crabs. Of the 14 species of birds on Aldabra, 13 are unknown elsewhere . . . Darwin knew about the island and its odd forms of life, but until this century no man had lived there.

Now, however, 47 people, hermits from civilization, make their homes on Aldabra's 60 square miles, and English and French scientists want them to move away so that the island can remain a natural monument to the dawn of creation.

The House of Commons will decide soon whether to let Aldabra become a human heaven or to free it forever from the threat of invasion by man and his machines . . .

Rameses the Ram, (who will probably be back next week writing his Daily Tar Heel column) jumps into the controversy over the life in the Lower Quad controversy with these off the cuff notes he made during an investigative tour:

"Drove to Lower Quad. Unable to find parking place. Too many cars. Parked on Raleigh Road and walked back. Long walk. Went into Aycock Dorm to visit friend there. Out on date. Knocked on room next door to talk to anyone. Both occupants out on dates. Went over to Stacy to see friend there. Couldn't talk to me. Hung over. Asked fellow in Lewis about this fraternity-dormitory split. Said the first he heard of it was what he read in Dick Creed's column. Asked someone else. He never heard of the split. Doesn't read Dick Creed's column. Went to Rathskeller for beer. Couldn't get in. Too many dorm men down there drinking. Went to Rendezvous Room. Place full of dorm men and their dates. Gave up and went home. Decided to make next investigation of social and economic poverty in Upper Quad. Matter of fact, have to go to Upper Quad anyway to pay back $10 I owe fellow in Mangum."

The week ends when they collect the last beer bottles in Spero's on Saturday night . . .

Outside, the quiet rain is soaking down the burnt brown leaves, the late show customers will come out rubbing their eyes under the bright marquee lights . . . Caldwell is back on his pedestal, the Tar Heels are back in the win column, Thanksgiving is just over the rise of the next three class days. Saturday night is the last night of the week. Sunday morning is a beginning again.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . "—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was galumphing along East Franklin, when I saw him. I wondered what had happened to his School of Architectural Writing?

"Negative and positive, in that order," The Horse shrugged, making a nest of the ponderous tome he was carrying, and sitting atop the nested books. "I have been and am upto my pointed ears in schoolwork. Witness, I am reduced to trying to absorb Cultoor via The Process of Osmosis!"

There were those who said The Horse had a better chance of acquiring learning through his posterior's inactivity than through his anterior's cerebrations.

"Yeah, I'm with them on that," The Horse said gloomily. "I think it was Edna Ferber who said the secret of success in Writing — and it goes for studying, as well — is to place the seat of the pants against the seat of the chair for eight hours minimum daily. But how you gonna reconcile any such sedentary doings with the fact I got four hooves?"

I failed to see where this factor entered into the question?

"Well, gee whiz, ain't I got four hoofs for the purpose of using them?" The Horse expostulated. "After all, quantity certainly should be weighed as a determinant, and do I not have more of hooves than of, er, posterity?"

The Horse had enough seating capacity to immobilize a centipede, if that method of calculating was to be followed.

"I guess it's just something I gotta work out for myself," The Horse sighed. "However, until it is worked out, The School of Architectural Writing will have to be suspended. I am not surrendering. I am just faced with sheer impossibilities in the way of classroom schedules if I spend so much as three hours weekly at other than the grim tasks assigned me. I counted too much on Dave Reid's legalized Sin bill."

Legalized Sin? Did The Horse mean Legislator Reid's late bill to cast academic blessings on Peeping Toms during quizzes?

"Now, you are being too harsh, Roger me bhoy," The Horse waved an admonishing hoof. "Dave's Oedipean, if I may drag Sophocles into this, plan for handling desperate quizzees if and when caught, followed the classical mold: it was born to meet its foretold doom."

How come, foretold? Certainly Dave was too smart to cram something down the campusly throat that was predestined for a gory end.

"It has been said," The Horse stated firmly, "that it is impossible to legislate morals. There is much of contention anent this. But I think it may be said that it is impossible to legislate immorality. A witty English visitor of these darkening shores in the Prohibition Era observed that Americans passed idealistic laws, and then blithely ignored. Could be the Johnny was right. But you cannot legislate Sin."

Then, The Horse did not believe in giving Academic Peeping Tom's another look? I meant, another chance? No mercy, at all, at all? One slip and boom, the boom is down?

"Ah, now you are barking up another dogwood tree!" The Horse horsed. "The quality of mercy should not be strained, and I do not specify the direction. The Honor Council can and should weigh extenuating circumstances, when such exist and may be brought to light. Me, I'd crack down on a Senior or a Junior much harder than I would on a Frosh or a Soph. One must weigh the pressures which are upon the Quizzly Peeper."

But, surely Justice was blind, symbolically!

"Symbolically and Realistically, Justice is blind," The Horse agreed. "And Justice should not be so. The pressures on eds and coo-eds on a college campus may look to the casual eye to be identical: but they are not so. This is especially true of our Middle-Class, and are not most of our students from the great American Middle-Class?"

America didn't regard Classes, but rather —

"Stow it, Roger," The Horse chittered (I hate The Horse when he chitters), "before you demonstrate your epic sophistries too glaringly. America does regard Classes, and especially Middle-Class America does, because it has to. In a way, the hopeless Lowest-Lower Class and the Upperest-Upper Class are fortunate, indeed. He can say, eat, drink, wear, drive, go, woo, live — even die! — as he pleases, because he has arrived. He ain't going nowhere, he is there.

But, we were speaking of eds and coo-eds.

"Okay, and we still are," The Horse agreed, shifting Shakespeare In The Theater to one side so he could osmose The Complete Greek Drama. (Vol 1) "It is the sons of these buckers and competers in conspicuous consumption of goods they cannot afford, who populate this and other campi, as Doc Ullman would say. And don't kid yourself the lads and lasses are here because Popsy and Momsy think Higher Education is the berries. At least half of them are here because their folks want to show they can afford to send the kiddies to collitch.

The student is under that pressure; plus Frat rush pressure; plus inadequate high-schooling, very often, for our courses; plus the pressures of a strange life; plus various student-participation pressures."

Oh! Then investigate; and pardon some? And suspend others? And fire others?

"A man does what he has to, Roger," The Horse saw it, "as he sees it at the time the issue comes up. True, Honor is Honor, and it is briefed to all in the same language. A truly sapient University Administration will take steps to protect a student from pressures he will foist upon himself over and above a tolerable load, recognizing the fact that school, girl-friend, automobile, athletic and sundry other pressures may, if it does not break the lad's back, tempt him to break the Honor System's back. And a truly sapient Student Legislature will empower an Honor System to use its discretion where circumstances suggest such is a wise step in saving a youngster from a ruinous stigma. The rich lad with no concern, or the others with no hope, or upperclassmen with no judgment, bump them out. But don't legislate sin. It won't work.

Tar Heels 2nd In AAU Meet

Carolina's delegation to the North Carolina cross country AAU championships at Davidson placed second behind a mixture of N. C. State freshmen and varsity runners yesterday morning, despite the fact that Carolina's number two distance man Bob Barden set a new course record for the four mile distance.

Barden broke the old record of 20:43 set last year, with an effort of 20:25. Other Carolina finishers were: Glen Nanney, 4th—Tony Houghton, 5th—Boyd Newman, 11th—Don Wright, 12th — Scotty Hester, 13th — Larry Thames, 17th—and Marion Griffin, 18th.

The State runners posted a low score of 29, while the Carolina team finished two points behind them with 31. Davidson was third with 70, another mixture of State runners fourth with 101, and the Burlington Running Club finished in fifth place with 136 points.

of six passes, good for total gains of 59 yards.

It was the 30th Carolina victory in the 59th meeting between the two teams. Virginia has won 26, and three were ties.

Carolina won the toss and elected to receive. Parker returned the kickoff to the 21 yard line from his goal. In four plays the tar Heels moved to their 35, but Gravitte's fumble was recovered by Virginia's guard Jay Corson on the 42.

Three plays netted three yards for Virginia and Henry Strempek punted out of bounds on the Carolina 13.

UNC managed a first down on their next drive, but it stalled at their 30, and Parker punted to the Virginia 38.

UVa moved to the Carolina 46, mainly on the strength of Bonney's 16 yard sprint, but Carolina ends Frye and Lane caught the Virginia quarterback in the act of passing twice in a row, throwing the Cavaliers back 20 yards. Strempek punted to the UNC 32. The Tar Heels rolled across midfield and down to the Virginia 17 on some slashing drives by Klochak and a 12 yard pass from Bullock to Parker, but here the attack fizzled, UVa taking over on downs.

On two plays the Cavs lost four yards, and on third down Bonney's pass, intended for Moyer, was intercepted by Bill Kirkman on the 26 and returned down to the 13. After hitting the center bar of the goal post with his first down pass, Bullock fired a strike to Parker in the end zone on second down for the game's first score. Klochak's placement was wide. UNC-6; UVa-0.

On the ensuing kickoff, Virginia could not move the ball and was forced to kick, Gravitte taking the punt on his own 16, and immediately swarmed under by a host of tacklers.

On first down Klochak burst up the middle for 27 yards to the 43. Parker shot through for nine yards. Bullock added a first down on the UVa. 44. Virginia was penalized 15 yards back to their 29. On the next play Klochak tore through the center of the line and rocketed the remaining 29 yards to pay-dirt Klochak converted, and with 5:55 gone in the second quarter, the score was UNC-13; UVa-0.

Kirkman's kickoff was returned by Dvorak to the UVa. 27. Two plays netted an eight yard deficit for Virginia. On third down Keller intercepted Bailey's pass on the 27, returning it to the five, but a clipping penalty against Carolina put the ball back on the 23. In two plays the Tar Heels scored, Lear blasting away for 18 yards to the five, and Keller going over on a wide right end sweep from there. Ken Keller added the placement. UNC-20; UVa-0, with 8:10 gone in the second quarter.

The Cavaliers returned the next kickoff to their 35, but a holding penalty set them back on the 16. Gaining seven yards in three plays, Virginia punted to the UNC 31.

Buckeyes Win In 4th Quarter

Hopalong Cassady Stars In Buckeyes' 9th Victory

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 20 (AP)—Ohio State's unbeaten Buckeyes made good on a fourway bid for gridiron glory here today, coming from behind with two long touchdown drives in the final period to defeat Michigan 21-7. A crowd of 82,438, and a national television audience saw the game.

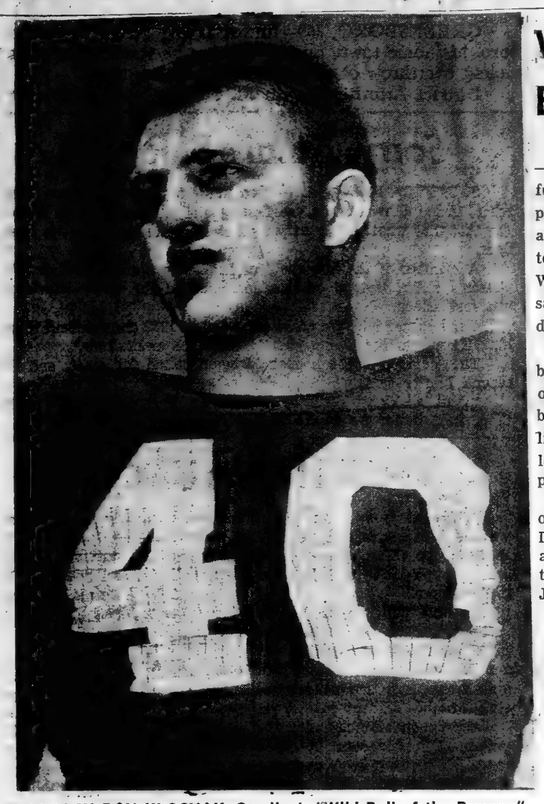
The conquest gave the brilliant Buckeyes the undisputed Western Conference championship, a berth in the Rose Bowl, a hefty claim to the national title, and their first unbeaten, untied season in ten years.

In beating Michigan for only the third time in 12 seasons, Ohio became only the second Western Conference team in history to win seven straight games in the rugged league. Only Chicago's 1913 team had done it before.

The Bucks came from nowhere to climb back on the football throne. Held to only four first downs in the first three periods, Ohio came to life after holding Michigan on the six-inch line to take the ball just as the third session ended.

With the score deadlocked at 7-7, the Wolverines had a first down on Ohio's four, but four cracks at the line served only to turn the ball over to the Bucks, who promptly marched 99 yards, 2 feet and 6 inches in 12 plays, climaxed by Dave Leggett's 8-yard touchdown toss to end Dick Brubaker.

Late in the session, Howard (Hopalong) Cassady, Ohio's outstanding star of the day, intercepted a pass and ran it back to his own 38, and 11 plays later he ended the 62-yard drive with a one-yard plunge for the final tally. Little Tad Weed, 145-pound place-kicking specialist, booted all three placements for Ohio.



Michigan marched 68 yards in 12 plays at the start of the game for its only touchdown, an intricate buck lateral play sending left halfback Dan Cline into the end zone for the score. Ron Kramer, Michigan's great sophomore end, who played a fine game on both offense and defense, booted the extra point.

DURHAM, N. C., Nov. 20. (AP)—Buddy Bass, a sophomore halfback playing before hometown fans, scored two touchdowns and passed for another today as Duke defeated South Carolina, 26-7, to strengthen its chances for an Orange Bowl bid.

Halfback Bob Pascal and quarterback Jerry Barger teamed with Bass to provide the big punch as Duke scored in every period before a crowd of 13,000.

The second half was played in rain that turned the field into a sea of mud.

South Carolina's only score came in the closing minutes when guard Frank Mincevich of Hackettstown, N. J., recovered Worth Lutz's fumble in the end zone for a touchdown.

Duke took the opening kickoff and rammed 56 yards in four plays. The score came on a 37-yard pass play from Pascal to end Tracy Moon. There were five seconds remaining in the second period when Barger flipped a touchdown pass to Bass, the play covering 39 yards.

In the third period, Duke scored on a seven yard pass from Bass to Pascal. The final Blue Devil tally came early in the fourth period when Bass circled left end from the 11.

The win was Duke's third straight in the Atlantic Coast conference and bolstered its hopes for the conference title. The Blue Devils still must dispose of arch rival North Carolina.

Pascal, who turned in a great game for Duke, made a brilliant catch of a 30-yard pass from Barger to set up Duke's touchdown in the third quarter on South Carolina's 13.

After two plays carried to the seven, Bass flipped to Pascal for the score.

Terps Squash Colonials, 48-6

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Nov. 20 (AP)—Frank Tamburello, cocky sophomore quarterback, opened the floodgates with two long touchdown passes in the first half and Maryland's powerful football machine swept to a 48-6 victory over George Washington here today.

W&M Squeezes By Deacs, 13-9

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Nov. 20 (AP)— Charlie Sumner returned to fulltime duty at the quarterback post where he gained fame a year ago and passed William and Mary to a 13-9 football victory over Wake Forest here today in a see-saw battle that was in doubt right down to the last play.

Sumner, who was shifted to halfback with the season only a third old, heaved a long pass to halfback Walter Herrman on a dazzling play covering 66 yards with less than seven minutes left to pull the Indians from behind.

Herrman grabbed Sumner's toss on the midfield ribbon, evaded Deacon defensemen John Parham and Ed Stowers and sailed down the sidelines to the goal. Tackle Jerry Sazio kicked the extra point.

W. Virginia Dumps Wolfpack By 28-3

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Nov. 20 (AP)—Quarterback Freddy Wyant directed his West Virginia University Mountaineers in four long power marches here today as they trounced North Carolina State 28-3 before a crowd of 20,000.

Only the passing of the Wolfpack's Eddie West and the dangerous r unning of halfback George Marinkov kept the visitors in the game.

West Virginia's initial drive carried in the first period from the Mountaineer 32 to N. C. State 8 from where Wyant sent Bobby Moss over for the touchdown to wipe out a 3-0 lead which the Wolfpack gained on tackle John Bagonis' field goal.

West took to the air in the second period and completed three consecutive passes, the last one to Harry Lodge for 49 yards which put the ball on the 6. WVU held and took over on its own 1.

After a 50 yard punt by Chick Donaldson for WVU and two 15 yard penalties gave State the ball on its own 14, Mountaineer end Bill Underdonk blocked West's punt and it went out of the end zone for a safety.

West Virginia scored all three times it got possession of the ball in the third quarter on drives of 80, 36 and 83 yards, with Moss, fullback Danny Williams and sub halfback Eddie Dugan sharing the scoring.

Harvard Edges By Yale, 13-9

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 20—(AP)— Senior wingback Frank White, playing for Bob Cowles who was injured on the opening kickoff, threw a 40-yard scoring pass to end Bob Cochran with less than five minutes to play today as Harvard staged a magnificent comeback to defeat Yale 13-9.

The victory spelled Harvard's first big three championship since 1941 and may have cost Yale a clear hold on the Ivy title.

7, 8 Games Planned; To Be 'Amateur'

LEXINGTON, Va. (AP)—Washington and Lee University "definitely" will field a varsity football team next year and expects to play a seven or eight game schedule, W&L President Francis P. Gaines said Friday night.

In accordance with university policy laid down when subsidized football was abandoned earlier this year, the 1955 club will be an "amateur" team and will compete with other "amateur" teams, Dr. Gaines said.

Washington and Lee's entire varsity football schedule for this fall was cancelled when the university decided to give up subsidization. But a "junior varsity" team representing W&L has played several other college jayvee squads and prep school teams and the university has awarded monograms to 22 students who were members of the team.

Dr. Gaines said he did not know who would coach the 1955 varsity team which he said would attempt to schedule games with outfits of the caliber of Davidson, Sewanee, Centre College and Wabash. Carl Wise, who held the post of head coach when the Generals abandoned football in late summer, is on a three-months leave of absence to help coach the Hamilton entry in the Canadian Professional Football League and his three-year contract at W&L still has a year to run. The jayvee team this fall has been coached by Boyd Williams, former line coach at VMI and Richmond who also sells insurance in Lexington.

Dr. Gaines said the coaching post "is still Carl Wise's if he wants it." At the same time he praised the work of Williams with the jayvees.

Wise told Roanoke Radio Station WSLS today he planned to return to Lexington in December but doesn't know whether he will continue his affiliation with Washington and Lee.

Dr. Gaines said the varsity teams W&L will field in the future will schedule games on a "campus-to-campus" basis, thus eliminating games in huge public stadiums such as Franklin Field in Philadelphia, Griffith Stadium in Washington and Baltimore's Municipal Stadium, where the "subsidized," W&L teams of the past appeared.

Scales May Be Tried In Home Town Of Greensboro In Dec.

GREENSBORO, (AP)—Junius Irving Scales, in all probability, will stand trial in Greensboro, his home town, on charges that he was a member of an organization advocating the violent overthrow of the Federal Government.

District Attorney Dewin M. Stanley said Friday that the case will appear on the trial calendar f or the December term here of U. S. Middle District Court when Scales' removal from Tennessee is ordered.

Scales, arrested in Memphis early Thursday night, is due to appear at a hearing there Tuesday, presumably to determine whether he is to be removed to the Middle District of North Carolina.

It is likely, if his removal is ordered, that Scales will be brought to the Guilford County jail to await trial, unless he posts $100,000 bond, Stanley said.

Scales' arrest came only about 5½ hours after a grand jury returned an indictment against him in the Wilkesboro division of the Federal Court. The true bill was returned about 2 p. m.

The bill was returned by the same grand jury which had returned a number of indictments of a more routine nature during the opening day of the Wilkesboro term of the court.

Sorry, Adlai's Sleeping

SOUTHERN PINES —(AP)— Two hunters passed the farm home where Adlai Stevenson is vacationing and called out early yesterday that they wanted to see the 1952 Democratic candidate for president.

A member of the household of Ernest Ives and Mrs. Ives, Stevenson's sister, tiptoed outside and shushed for quiet—Stevenson was fast asleep.

One hunter said, "We voted for Adlai in 1952 and we want to see him. He was awake then and he'd better be awake now."

The member of the household again called for quiet, and the second hunter said:

"Well, all right. We'll be back in an hour. If he isn't awake then, he'd better be awake in 1956."

lege and a bill advocating chemical tests for drunkenness from East Carolina College were also jointly passed.

Other bills jointly passed were the amending of Article II, Section 4 for the state Constitution from WC, omnibus education proposals from East Carolina, lengthening of the student visa from WC, recommendation of electro-mechanical traffic cops in cities over 50,000 in the state from Shaw.

Carolina's academic freedom bill was passed jointly in this session as was the desegregation bill and a measure from State on the state's highway funds and one from Wilmington College on aid to disaster-stricken townships.

Panel Discussion

Wesley Foundation will present a panel discussion entitled "The World Church Council—What Does It Mean To You?" at 6:45 tonight. The meeting will be open to the public.

Yack Contest Underway

Yackety Yack Snapshot Contest, which ends at midnight on Dec. 12, is offering eight prizes donated by Foister's Camera Shop.

Each entry must be accompanied by the entrant's name, the negative, a caption and an alternate caption.

The pictures will be judged on basis of interest, originality and suitability for use in the annual, according to Miss Emily Finch, Yack photography editor. These factors, rather than technical perfection, will determine the winner, she said.

The pictures should depict some phase of campus life, Miss Finch said.

The following prizes will be awarded to the winners: first prize, Argoflex 75 flash outfit; second prize, Ansco Rediflash outfit; third prize, Ansco Shur-Flash outfit; the next five prizes, two rolls of film.

Miss Finch encouraged everyone to turn in pictures, and said she expects a larger response than shown so far.

'Can-Canners' Entertain

Sophomore members of the UNC Nursing School entertained their dates Friday evening with a spaghetti supper and Parisian talent. The gala festivities were held in "Hondo's Hidaway," converted Nurse's Dorm recreation room.

The Parisian talent, which consisted of a variety of "Can Canners," vocalists and models, reportedly recent imports from the French Rivera, were in reality the freshman nurses who served the group and comprised the floor show.

Italian spaghetti, cider and apple pie constituted the "Carte d'un restaurant" while the atmosphere was candle light and cafe.

Bridge Tourney Monday

Dr. Harry Smith, PhD in the School of Public Health, will continue to supervise the Graham Memorial Student Bridge Tournament tomorrow night in the Rendezvous Room.

The tournament is a weekly affair running from 7:30 to 11 p.m.

On Tuesday afternoons from 4 until 6 o'clock Dr. Smith gives free bridge instruction for Graham Memorial. These free lessons are open to anyone on campus. And all interested persons regardless of their bridge playing experience are urged to attend the sessions.

The gift will establish the Dr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Staley Memorial Scholarship Fund.

University Shows Progress In Most Fields, Says House

By R. W. MADRY
Director, UNC News Bureau

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is making substantial progress in most phases of its program and is gradually achieving many of the goals set by the two State of the University Conferences, Chancellor Robert B. House reported yesterday.

The report was made to the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees, who gathered here for an all-day and night session.

Chancellor House reported, among other things, that greater efficiency and clearance has been achieved as a result of reorganization of the University's administrative setup; that closer personal relations are being established between faculty members and students; that Saturday classes apparently are an achieved fact, and that more full-time professors are being placed in charge of undergraduate instruction.

Although enrollment has increased, classroom loads have been reduced, and steps are being taken to bring the University into closer touch with the public schools, the Chancellor added.

On the other side of the picture, he said, as a result of increased enrollment dormitories and other housing facilities are overcrowded and additional dormitories are badly needed.

Only two new buildings are in immediate prospect, he said. These are the Institute of Government, for which half of the funds were provided by the 1953 Legislature, and the Ackland Museum, provided by private funds.

The admission of Negro students to the professional schools—there are now two in medicine and one in law—has not produced any friction so far, and none is anticipated, Chancellor House said.

Chancellor House and heads of the five administration divisions reported at the morning session. They were Dean Fred Weaver for the new Division of Student Affairs; Dean C. P. Spruill for Academic Affairs; Claude E. Teague for Business Affairs; Dr. H. T. Clark for Health Affairs, and Charles M. Shaffer for Development Program.

Victor S. Bryant, Durham, Chairman of the Visiting Committee, presided. Other members present were Harry L. Riddle, Morganton; R. Floyd Crouse, Sparta; Hill Yarborough, Louisburg; William P. Saunders, Aberdeen; D. L. Ward, New Bern; Mrs. Rosa B. Parker, Albemarle, and P. B. Ferebee, Andrews.

Last Day

Today is positively the last day that undergrads may look over their Yack proofs and pick the one they want to go in the appropriate section. The proofs will be in the Rendezvous Room from one until six this evening.

Wash. & Lee Takes USC In Moot Court

DURHAM (AP)—Washington and Lee University won a regional first place here Saturday night in the annual national moot court competition after defeating the University of South Carolina in the final round of a two-day contest.

Three-man teams of law students from seven Southeastern colleges and universities took part in the regional competition held in Duke University Law School.

Competing were teams from Duke, Wake Forest, William and Mary, Washington and Lee and the Universities of Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina. During a series of mock trials, the students argued a case that dealt with legal aspects of picketing.

Washington and Lee, as first place regional winner, will compete for a national championship, against teams from 11 other regions covering the United States. The national finals will be held next month in New York City.

In the opening rounds of the regional competition here Friday night, South Carolina defeated UNC; William and Mary defeated Duke; Washington and Lee defeated Wake Forest; and the University of Virginia drew a tie.

In the semi-finals, Washington and Lee won over William and Mary, and the University of South Carolina defeated the University of Virginia.

Scales Hearing Today

MEMPHIS, Tenn., (AP)—Junius Irving Scales, 34, accused of leading the Communist Party in the Carolinas and Tennessee from underground hideouts, gets a hearing here today on whether he will be removed to North Carolina for trial.

Scales, a great nephew of A. M. Scales, governor of North Carolina from 1885 to 1889, is accused specifically of violating the Smith Act, which prohibits membership in an organization conspiring to teach or advocate overthrow of the government of the United States by violence. Conviction carries imprisonment of up to 10 years, a fine of up to $10,000, or both.

Handbills distributed here over the weekend urged that Scales' $100,000 bond be reduced at tomorrow's hearing before U.S. Commissioner Leslie Nicholson. The handbills said 'Junius Scales and the Communist party are being prosecuted solely for their ideas. Neither Scales not the Communist party has ever advocated force or violence, nor overthrow of the government. . .Article VIII of the Bill of Rights says "Excessive bail shall not be required."

A federal grand jury in Wilkesboro, N. C., indicted Scales last Thursday and FBI agents arrested him without resistance here that night as he was standing on a rainy street corner. The FBI said Scales had been underground the last three years.

Scales, married and the father of a child, formerly lived in Carrboro, N. C., near the University of North Carolina, which he attended from 1936 to 1939 and in 1946. He is a native of Greensboro, N. C.

If it is decided that he shall be tried in the Middle District federal courts of North Carolina, his case probably will be called at the term of court beginning Dec. 6 in Greensboro.

Communist Party, U.S.A., Is Circulating Literature Again

A mimeographed sheet which claims to be "issued by: N. C. District, Communist Party, U. S. A." appeared on campus within the past few days taking up the cause of recently jailed, avowed Communist leader Junius Scales.

The sheet, illegible in places because of bad printing, is known to have been distributed by hand in Cobb, Joyner and Manley dormitories Sunday afternoon. Copies were found in the Pine Room rest rooms Sunday.

"Fighter for Peace," a publication of the N. C. District of the Communist Party, was distributed here last year and in several previous years. The sheet distributed Sunday did not bear any title, but the single sentence headline read, "A Great Fighter For Peace Goes To Jail."

The sheet calls the arrest of Scales in Tennessee last week a "continuation of the FBI hounding that drove him from his home in Carrboro several years ago." (Scales disappeared from Carrboro in Oct., 1951, at which time, according to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, he "went underground.")

Warrant Out For Pilot

Local police have issued a warrant for the pilot of the plane that buzzed the campus a few weeks ago dropping leaflets.

The warrant names James Boyd as having violated a state statute which prohibits low flying over towns and public gatherings.

The action has been taken by local police, who will forward the warrant to Boyd's home county, to be served by county officials there. His only known address to officers here is the Raleigh-Durham airport, police said.

NORTH CAROLINA'S NEW GOVERNOR, Luther Hodges, above, spoke last weekend at the 18th annual session of the N.C. State Student Legislature, meeting in Raleigh. Gov. Hodges said he thought "the people of North Carolina want and expect the services of a modern and progressive state to continue, and if you tell the the whole truth, they will themselves carry the burden."

Bulletin

Petitions to Governor Hodges to use whatever "legal power" he possesses to maintain separate public schools in North Carolina were circulating on the campus late last night.

SSL Chief Fleishman Praises Delegates To Annual Assembly

The 18th annual session of the State Student Legislature was termed "immensely successful" yesterday by UNC's Joel Fleishman, who was elected House Speaker during the group's three-day meeting in Raleigh last weekend.

Said Fleishman: "In my opinion, the 18th session of the N.C. Student Legislative Assembly was immensely successful from start to finish.

"The debate was always on a high plane and showed the articulate character and the clear thinking of the delegates to the Assembly. There were fewer prepared speeches and more extemporaneous talks than in the past.

"After attending four consecutive sessions," Fleishman said, "it seems that SSL gets better every year and the delegates more out of it. I hope that UNC will continue to be a large contributer to the State Student Legislature, for there is much to be gained.

Beat Dook Festivities Set Today

The annual Beat Dook Parade, including 28 float entries, will tour downtown Chapel Hill this afternoon.

The parade, sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, is slated to leave Woollen Gym at 3 p.m. and proceed through the campus to Franklin St., pass through the business section to the corner of Franklin and South Columbia St., turn left to Raleigh Rd., and break up back at Woollen Gym.

Floats entered in the parade will be judged at 2:30. Parade chairman Claude Pope of PiKA asked yesterday that all floats be at the gym at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Judges for the event are Jack Horner of the Durham Morning Herald; Fred Weaver, dean of Student Affairs, and the Dean of Duke University.

The Beat Dook Parade Queen, selected last week from sorority, fraternity and dorm entries, will ride on the PiKA float with her court of six coeds. She will be announced in the parade.

PEP RALLY

The annual "Beat Dook" pep rally will start tonight with a car parade at Woollen Gym at 6:45 and move to Memorial Hall where things will get underway at 7 p.m.

A tape recording of portions of the pep rally will be taken for broadcast over WDNC, Durham, at 10 p.m. The broadcast will also feature part of the pep rally from the Duke campus. Featured on the UNC portion of the broadcast will be Ron Levin, impersonator. The University Club is sponsoring the rally.

CREASY REQUEST

"As time for the traditional Duke game nears, I would like to remind everyone that some years ago this particular event was almost ended for good by the hostile feelings and acts of vandalism on both campuses.

Out of a field of 22, Houghton and Rigsbee were the first of ten runners who came under the old time of one hour and 27 minutes. The two harriers toured the 11.6 miles in one hour and 12½ minutes.

Sponsored by Delta Upsilon social fraternity, the event started in front of the Carolina Theatre in Chapel Hill and ended at the Durham post office.

Twenty two UNC students lined up at 1 p.m. to start the long endurance run, and every one of them finished, with only two taking more than two hours.

The weather was good, and although it was a little cool, the sun beamed down on the runners, giving them enough warmth for the race.

The record breakers besides Houghton and Rigsbee, with their times, were Pete McGehee (1:15:50); Marion Griffin (1:16:10); Scotty Hester (1:19:35); Bailey Liipfert (1:19:37); Glenn Nanney (1:20); Frank Bernhardt (1:21:56); Ed Joyner (1:24:28); and Larry Thames (1:24:28).

Cars followed the boys along the way to give the time and distances at various places. The runners were escorted out of Chapel Hill and into Durham by the police of the respective cities.

Houghton and Rigsbee began together and ran all the way in front of the others, who, for the most part, were a short distance behind in two groups—one about a quarter of a mile to a half-mile behind the other. McGehee and Griffin separated the first group and the winners, being closer to the latter.

Some had huge blisters on their feet after the race, and had sore legs. Not many went without complaining, although hardly anyone appeared to have gone all out for the race. They just ran at a steady pace throughout, with the chief objective being to get to Durham and with little thought of winning.

Slew-Footed Mercury

An example of the nocuous rubbish that floods the U. S. mail in the name of an insidious, self-styled "Americanism" has fallen into our hands.

The pamphelt, reprinted from the editorial poge of The American Mercury and written by one Russell Maguire, urges, "LET US CLEAN HOUSE HERE AT HOME." We don't want any Fifth Amendment Citizens."

No specification as to Mr. Maguire's meaning is made. Does he mean that if he werebeing tried for murder he would expect to testify against himself? If he believes that persons testifying before Congressional committees on the subject of Communism should not have benefit of the Fifth Amendment, why doesn't he outline his case? Or does he have a case?

In the first paragraph of his article, Mr. Maguire says that "you and I have failed to fulfill our sacred duties as trustees and custodians of a great Christian hertage." Mr. Russell, for all his blatant talk about "a great Christian heritage," doesn't impress us as much of a scholar on the one hand (he says, later in the article, that God, not Crtist, said "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life") and as a Christian on the other. We challenge an objective reader to say with straight face that this pamphlet is the work of a man who is aware of "a great Christian hertiage"—on any ethical heritage at all, for thta matter.

We remember that one of our deepest impressions of the United Nations Headquarters came when we read on the facade, across from the building, that Biblical quotation that speaks of the time when man shall beat his swords into plowshares and not study war any more.

Obviously, an organization with this aim, whether it has approached realization or not, is more Christian in intention than a man like Mr. Maguire who writes: "By this time surely we also know that the United Nations is a swamp and death-trap."

All of this leads us to believe that so-called "Christian Heritages" are but poison ed arrows in the bow of a man like Mr. Maguire. He will use them at will. The great paradox about this type of American Mercury trash is that its writers, if it were fashionable to appeal to atheism and amoralism as straw men for their cause, would lisitate not a second to do so.

The U. S. mails have been prostituted before. This is but one in a contemptous stream of literature that, for ethical reasons, has no place in circulation. The American Mercury pamphlet does not deserve the benefit of the free circulation or ideas. But we say: Give it loose play because it goes down before the facts like a poleaxed ox.

The real tragedy of Mr. Maguire's article is that truth must take a slashing by serving his ends. He writes, "Let us support those who travel the lonely road of proclaiming the truth."

These words leap from an otherwise pedestrian and slimy article and to them we will echo a hearty, "Hear, Hear!"

Gracious Living — XV

The latest threat to Gracious Living in the quads is the growing number of drivers who speed recklessly along the roads between the dormitories. Students are getting so they take jumping from the path of automobiles as part of the daily routine, like eating breakfast or walking to class. These are the same drivers, we suspect, who grumble loudest at Trustee complaints about student cars. Our Gracious Living tip to the campus cops, who move through the parking lots dispensing countless trivial parking tickets every day: Keep your eyes open along campus byways, fellers. You'll spot bigger game.

40¢ Special Is A Bargain At Lenoir Hall

Louis Kraar

AFTER A weekend in Raleigh at the State Student Legislature, I stumbled into Lenior Hall (because I was broke) and found the biggest bargain since the quarter system.

For a mere 40 cents one can have a meat, two vegatables, coffee (or tea) and bread. The dining hall calls it the "student special," and the bargain is offered every day for lunch and dinner.

I've figured out that in the event of an embarrassing financial condition (being broke) you could eat in Lenoir on a dollar a day. I'm wondering now where to get tomorrow's dollar.

COBB DORM, frequent history maker in dorm circles, is doing it again in social circles. The 445-student dorm is throwing a party for sorority girls—probably the first of its kind on campus.

According to the dorm paper, some sororities "are even charging a $5 fine on all girls who fail to show." And the paper adds: "This is all the more reason why Cobb has got to do right by it."

The "coats and ties" affair will be December 10, with band, entertainment, and "200 girls."

DESPITE The jabs dorm newspapers are making at Lenoir Hall's eggs, Manager G. W. Prillaman assures me that his eggs are purchased weekly.

"What those boys who criticized the eggs saw were some old cartons that our egg farm uses over and over again," he said.

Latest criticism of the dining hall comes from Alexander Sutro's paper, "The Rake." The paper says that at Lenoir "mice scurry at will and the absent cat is a high health standard."

COLUMNIST Dorothy Thompson has cried out against the morals of men and women on university campuses, but this reporter doesn't even feel like lending her a handerchief.

Miss Thompson, in a recent syndicated column, told of arriving at a dormitory where she was to spend the night during a lecture tour of campuses. She said she was amazed that her presence caused no embarrassment to half a dozen couples standing "in close embraces, their bodies pressed together, their lips glued together."

Like a tabloid sob sister, Miss Thompson likened the scenes to what formerly would have been "confined to houses of prostitution."

Kissing to most people (obviously not Miss Thompson though) is an accepted way of showing affection. And what could be wrong with that? In a campus—and a world—where everyone seems to want to clobber everybody else, affection should be commended, not condemned.

SOMEONE, this reporter included, is always criticizing our campus politicians. But, despite disagreements with all of them at one time or another, there is one thing to be said for them.

Carolina's student politicians are skilled in their art. That was evident from the way they performed at the State Student Legislature in Raleigh.

The pols worked, played, partied, and politicked better than any school in the state. Lewis Brumfield, Dave Reid, Gordon Forester, Jim Turner, Joel Fleishman and all the other UNC students showed how politicians can take their work—and not themselves—seriously.

Political manipulating is necessary in today's legislative bodies to accomplish anything. And when it is done with zest and skill—like Carolina did in Raleigh—it is something to be admired.

YOU Said It: The Petition Of Dr. W. C. George

Sudden Thawt: Maybe The Man Is Kidding!

Editor:

It may well be that Dr. W. C. George is really a very wise and brave man—all recent evidence to the contrary not withstanding.

For in all the hubbub about his petition for segregation, nobody has chanced upon the explanation for it which may cause history to consider Dr. George a great man.

This explanation is so obvious that it is surprising that no one has hit upon it befort. For isn't it likely that the anatomy professor is really too intelligent to believe what his petition says. And that actually, it is circulated just to show us clearly how totally absurd is the position he pretends to defend.

Hence, it may be that the man is a true martyr, willing at this hour to identify himself with a position which must embarrass a man of his intelligence, so that we may see how ridiculous it is. If so, he deserves honor. For to a man of his stature, it cannot be other than humiliating to offer forth anthropology containing such ideas as "Master Race," or that school integration would be "race-defilement."

But should our view be the case, one thing worries us. And that is, where would an intelligent man get volume enough of such idiocy to circulate—even in order to show it up. And if this is indeed his problem, we have the answer as to where he can find all of this kind of thing that he wants.

The material came to our attention from a country where, unlike under our own Constitution, men were not equal under the law or given equal opportunity. There, the Christian idea of trying to love one's neighbor was not considered worth the candle. One race considered itself alone destined to rule the world, and with laws to protect its racial purity. In it, men were not thought to be of God, and science was used to support prejudice.

So should Dr. George find himself in such a position—and arguments for it must be devilishly hard for a professional man to come by—let him seek more in the ashes of Nazi Germany.

Hitler and his followers had just such a school of biology, about a "pure" race destined to rule and as source of all things good. He will find his "facts" all there, and possibly a little more cogently expressed; this will relieve him of trying to conceive on his own the cretin thoughts of the Dixiecrat so that they be properly shown up.

We urge consideration by all of this humanitarian view of Dr. George lest he be wrongfully victim of charges that the Fascist position which has been connected with his name in the press is really his own. Surely, the petition could have only been conceived to show every North Carolinian from Governor Hodges down just how stupid and illogical the reactionary view is, and how inimical to all decent and worth being proud of in our America.

Dr. George Quoted 'Out Of Context' By DTH

Editor:

The Daily Tar Heel, as a newspaper, is quite unique. It has no journalistic competition. Financially, all students support it whether they like it or not. Their opinions are reflected through their letters largely at your will. Consequently, the long recognized voice of this campus is, in no small sense, moulded by your hand.

There seems to be little doubt but that the Tar Heel of our time is more provocative than ever before. Perhaps . . . that is good. To take a stand and fight for it is admirable; to criticize constructively is helpful; to keep the students informed is purposeful. But is it not just as admirable or helpful or purposeful to survey any common question with equal vigor? An editorial policy is one thing; assignment is another. Without any pledge of allegiance to a majority view, nevertheless there should be a respect for it.

It was not surprising to read the editorial about Dr. George. The surprise was that apparently no attempt was made to quote him as he spoke. To take one sentence out of its context is seldom fair to one quoted. It might do us well to remember that he, like this newspaper, is fighting for what he believes. To surmise that Dr. George is in the minority may be to anticipate the very thing to be proved. He may be wrong; but, that would not be novel for anyone, including this newspaper.

For George: Courses In Hygiene, Political Science

Editor:

Not being a consistent "letter-to-the-editor" man, although I admit to numerous impulses in that direction from time to time, I feel that now the right of spitting out against an act of total disregard of law—United States law—by a member of the University faculty should be exercised.

My reference is to Dr. W. C. George's well known petition urging continued public school segregation in spite of the better known Supreme Court ruling making the Negro no longer a second-rate citizen in regards to education.

Conceding the privileges of Dr. George's personal opinion on the matter, his right to state that opinion through a petition signed by himself and Orange County citizens who think as he does, and the intelligence and knowledge by which he formulated his opinion, I take issue with the professor and his group who have not, I fear, stopped to consider that they are not only calling the Negro unequal, second-class citizens while stating they are not an enemy of the race; not only degrading the University, its faculty and students, by promoting the headline "U.N.C. PROFESSOR . . ." in the widespread press notices announcing the petition; but these authors and signers of the petition are advocating that North Carolina violate the supreme law of the land, the Constitution, by upholding segregation in public schools.

Dr. George, by deploring "the efforts of some people to identify a program of integration of the races with Christianity," seems to set forth the idea that Christianity is all right in its place but that its place is not in the brotherhood and equality of mankind just as most people remark "The nigger's all right in his place but . . ." and then go on to describe that place as being where the white man says it shall be.

Building his outrageous attack on the law around the breeding of the two races, Dr. George states that "No cattle breeder would want to cross up his productive stock with a stock with an unproven record."

If the devoted saviour of the white man thinks that just because a Negro man sits beside a white coed in class, she will, in the normal interval of time, become the mother of a bouncing black baby, I suggest he enroll in Bill Meade's Hygiene 11 course and discover the new theories on conception

Split In The Kremlin?

Drew Pearson

Here is one of many reasons why Eisenhower sticks to a "coexistence" policy with Russia, despite pressure from Senator Knowland and some from the Pentagon.

The American Embassy has reported that a major split appears to be developing betwen Premier Malenkov and Foreign Minister Molotov.

Malenkov apparently wants to follow a softer line in dealing with the United States. But Molotov, the fiery old Bolshevik, violently disagrees, even wants to step up the pace of the cold war.

At the October Revolution reception, for instance, where Malenkov talked so reasonably with U.S. Ambassador Bohlen, Molotov stood by glowering and shaking his head, obviously burned up about the whole business. Despite this, Malenkov went right ahead talking with Bohlen, gave his personal promise that the door to the Kremlin would always be open to settle any incident threatening Russian-American relations. The conversation occurred just before Eisenhower took his "turn-the-other-check" attitude at the press conference following the U. S. bomber incident in Hokkaido.

Egyptian Plot

The so-called assassination plot against Premier Nasser actually is a big phony. The whole thing was engineered by Nasser's followers as a means of getting rid of President Neguib.

American agents have now learned that the so-called assassin was hired secretly and given instruction to make sure he missed when he fired his revolver at Nasser. He was promised he could go free afterward. This explains why the assissin fired eight shots at Nasser from a distance of only 20 feet and missed each time.

MALENKOV
. . . a softer line?

Irony is that the assassin now probably will be shot himself because it would look too phony to permit him to go free.

Youngest Bureaucrat

Assistant Secretary of Labor Rocco Siciliano, aged 32, is not only one of the youngest members of the President's "little cabinet," but an untiring impresario of government service for other up-and-coming young men of ability and vision.

"No young man should turn down an opportunity to serve his government in a civil capacity at some time in his career, any more than he should dodge military service," says Siciliano, a former Infantry lieutenant who won the Bronze Star for valor in World War II.

Senator McCarthy's orginal strategy was to stall the censure debate until Alger Hiss was released from Prison, November 27. McCarthy hoped that Hiss, coming out of prison with a burst of publicity, would revive public alarm over the Communist menace. Of course, McCarthy didn't purposely infect his elbow but it came in handy to delay the Senate debate . . . General Collins has warned the Pentagon that it may be too late to try to build a real anti-Communist army in Southern Indo-China . . . The Army is looking for a Negro officer to head a U.S. military training mission to the Negro Republic of Liberia. Eisenhower promised Presiden Tubman of Liberia to help his country build a strong army.

Communism: The God That Failed For Gide, Koestler

F. B. I. officers walked through the wind and rain to a Memphis bus-stop the other night and arrested Junius Scales, graduate of this University, until 1951 a resident of Carrboro. A grand jury had indicted him in Wilkesboro, N. C.; the charge was violation of the Smith Act which outlaws any design to teach or advocate the overthrow of the United States government.

Students who have been here for several years have from time to time received mimeographed literature through the mails from the North Carolina Communist Party—of which Scales was chairman, I got one of these incredibly naive pieces of "literature" last year. I don't know whether it came from the pen of Scales or whether he had the slightest thing to do with it, but I found its contents excited more mirth than sympathy in me. If the Communists want to gain proselytes among the student body in Chapel Hill, they will certainly have to employ more subtle propaganda that I got.

Scales, whom I have never met, I understand to be a personable, idealistic man, a genuine believer in social and economic justice. His arrest and statements he has issued bring up again the tragic question: How can, or how could, so many intelligent and visionary American citizens enlist in the ranks of the Communist party? The question, of course, does not concern the insincere people who joined the Party to feather their own nests.

When the Great Depression of 929, in whose dim aftermath waves of idealists and intellectuals and strong democrats moved into the stream of Communism, broke, Junius Scales was a lad of 10 years. He doesn't fall under the same category with those who saw truth in the Marxist theory that Capitalism is the animal who devours himself. But with the long bread lines, the bank holidays, and the widespread misery of the depression, many thought they saw truth in the theory and defected from the American way in droves. Of course, the American system wasn't the only one that lost to Communism in the Thrities. Cornerstones of economies all over the world shifted.

Communist conversion came frequently in all of the years after 1917. The Jazz Age, whose symbol of confusion was the champagne-filled sliper, an age filled with what someone called "florid bourgeoisism," sent many disgusted but sincere intellectuals and artists to the more austere ranks of Marxism.

The third great general factor was the frenzied rise of Facism, with Mussolini's Fasico (from which the whole movement got its name) working in Rome and thousands seigheiling Hitler in Berlin. Not attraction to Communism, but repulsion to Fascism lured numbers away from their previous political and economic sympathies.

The God That Failed, a book that grew out of an argument between Richard Crossman, a British statesman, and Arthur Koestler, a Hungarian-born man of letters, is one of the most enlightening books on the subject. Six writers tell in its pages not only why they joined the Communist movement but why they grew disillusioned and quit.

When I read Junius Scale's statement about his belief in Communism I thought of what Koestler, Richard Wright, the Mississippi Negro writer, and Andre Gide, the Frenchman had said.

Scales' credo read, in part, "I have had an opportunity of meeting many outstanding Communists, and I can say from long experience and close association that the Communists are the most human, the most principled, the most courageous, the most selfless people I have ever known."

I don't doubt that there are many sincere, devoted Communists. But the picture of Communism itself, implemented in Russia—while it has admittedly remedied some economic evils—does not tally with the golden idealism of its advocates.

Richard Wright, an American Negro playwright and novelist, active in the party in Chicago, found that he could not get along with the ruthless extremists who thought he was too "intellectual." He had joined the party because it was the party of social justice, hoping to use his pen as a tool in its aid; but many dogmatic, crass Communists laughed at his literary propaganda.

Gide visited a model Russian town, Bolchevo, whose only inhabitants were convicts and informers. Those who had used their friendship to the terrible advantage of informing on their friends were offered haven and shelter there. "Can moral cynicism sink lower than this?" Gide wonders.

Arthur Koestler who has made his drift to and break from Communism famous in Darkness At Noon, left feeling that the Communists "deal in slogans as bootleggers deal in faked spirits; and the more innocent the customer, the more easily he becomes a victim of the idealogical hooch sold under the trade-mark of Peace, Democracy, Progress or what you will."

Personally, I find people like Whittaker Chambers and books like his Witness, using their sacred reconversion to incriminate other sincere Leftists who have since seen their errors, disgusting. The God That Failed leaves no such taste behind. It is an objective, honest book intended to show that the big drunk of Communism often ends with a throbbing and enduring hangover.

As unfortunate as misguided entrance into Communism is, I don't believe we can expect to deprive even the potentially misguided of their right to be misguided. The grimly ironical bill passed by Congress last summer, with the Senate's great liberals, as Norman Thomas says, "leading the parade," is a blight against our belief that, just as a man has the right to be right he also has the right to be wrong.

Duke plays football. Carolina plays football. Sometimes Duke plays Carolina. They are going to play soon. They are going to play very soon. We are going to cheer. They are going to cheer. We and they are going to cheer.

We are going to be good sports. They are going to be good sports. We and they are going to be good sports. But some of us may be bad sports. That is bad. We do not like bad sports. Bad sports are people who think it is fun to paint things. This is for you who like to paint. We have tried to keep it simple so you can read it.

If you bad sports who like to paint are caught, you will go home. You will not come back, either. So get smart, you with the paint brushes. Stay away from the Carolina campus unless you want to go home and not come back.

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

With seven minutes left in the first half, Carolina had just scored again, making the score 20-0, and the game was beginning to resemble a cross-country meet.

Virginians had not been so shocked since Grant took Richmond. The tilt had been rated a toss-up, with Carolina, at the most, a one-touchdown favorite.

Cavalier supporters had come to the game with excellent spirits, other than those bottled in bond. The Virginia gentlemen abounded with conviviality as they drifted into Scott Stadium and parked their tweeds and flannels on the wooden seats, still very damp from three days of rain. They had reason to be happy: The rain had helped their crops. Notre Dame had kicked the daylights out of Carolina the week before. Virginia had come within a hair of upsetting Army a couple of weeks earlier. The Cavalier polo team had trampled Harvard, 6-0; and a new shipment of whiskey had just hit the campus. Ah, yes; there was good reason to rejoice in Charlottesville.

But, lo and behold, by the middle of the second quarter, their spirit was dampened. The Tar Heels were showing the Cavaliers how they had felt the week before in South Bend. The Tar Heels were wearing the traditional Carolina Blue jerseys for the first time this year. After a few plays the players' numbers were obscured by the mud, and the only way to distinguish a Carolina man from a Virginia man was the direction in which he was traveling—Virginia backwards and Carolina forward. The mud did not seem to phase the web-footed Tar Heels. The only thing bothering the Cavaliers was the Carolina line. Virginia couldn't buy a first down. The only time they crossed the 50 yard line was when they changed sides at the end of the first quarter.

Then, suddenly, the complexion changed. A Cavalier end was standing near the east sideline, casually knocking the mud off his cleats, when he discerned an errant aerial coming his way. He picked the pigskin from the air and trotted 29 yards for a touchdown. In the stands, Virginia Gentlemen seized this bit of action as another excuse to celebrate, and flasks were drawn. Up in the press box, the representative from the Richmond newspaper took a little nip, and Virginians were happy once again.

Wake Forest and Carolina hold no monopoly on fighting. When the final gun sounded at the bitterly contested Baylor-SMU game last Saturday, a half-dozen players from both teams engaged in a small brawl on the field. The same circumstances probably existed there that existed here a few weeks ago: Baylor upset SMU, and the Mustangs didn't appreciate it.

Frank McGuire's Tar Heel basketeers are back home after spending the week-end at Annapolis. The locals left last Thursday and spent the week-end working out on the hardwood with Navy. McGuire reported that the scrimmages against the Middies proved invaluable from the coach's viewpoint. He stated that the Tar Heels compared very favorably with Navy, adding that Carolina actually outscored the Middies by four points in the main scrimmage game.

McGuire has not arrived at a starting lineup yet, but he appears to have found a nucleus, about which he will build his starting five. Jerry Vayda, Al Lifson, and Lennie Rosenbluth form the nucleus. Vayda and Lifson have been regulars for two years. Last year Vayda was Tar Heel high scorer and received the "Most Valuable Player Award." Lifson was runner-up in the scoring department. Rosenbluth was the sensation of the freshman team, breaking all Carolina scoring records in his first year. The other two starting slots are being hotly contested for by Tony Radovich, who started several games last year; Gerry McCabe, also an occasional starter last season; Bob Young, 6'6" center up from the freshman squad; Paul Likins, 6'9", a regular for the past three seasons; and Frank Goodwin, who was forced to sit out last season after transferring from Seton Hall.

The cagemen will continue to hold "closed" night practice sessions in Woollen Gym until their opener December 1, against the McCrary Eagles away. The first home game will be against Clemson December 4.

LARRY PARKER, left halfback, who was one of Carolina's leading ground gainers in the 26-14 victory over Virginia last Saturday. Parker, a senior from Charlotte, will be playing his last game for the Tar Heels when they meet Duke next Saturday.

Tar Heels To Avoid Contact This Week

North Carolina's Tar Heels, fully aware of the fact that an upset win over Duke here Saturday would bring them their first winning season since 1949, opened their preparation for the Blue Devils today with a brief but spirited workout.

Coach George Barclay had the squad in sweat clothes and announced that rough work would be avoided this week. "We don't want to lose this one on the practice field," he said.

Trainer R. A. (Doc) White reported that no new serious injuries were sustained in the team's win over Virginia last Saturday. Fullback Don Klochak, who sat out the last half of the game because of a slight shoulder injury sustained late in the second quarter, is all right, White said, and should be able to play against Duke.

Meanwhile, North Carolina officials announced today that tickets are still available for Saturday's game, the last on both the Duke and North Carolina schedules.

Duke Warned Of Tar Heels

DURHAM, Nov. 20 (AP)—Duke's Blue Devils opened work for Saturday's annual classic with North Carolina in the usual night drill on Duke Stadium's No. 1 practice field tonight.

No new injuries were reported from the victory over South Carolina and it is hoped that tackle Sid Deloatch will be able to re-join the squad this week and see action in the contest.

Line coach Ellis P. (Dumpy) Hagler, who has scouted the Tar Heels for years, issued a warning to the Blue Devils tonight. He said that it will be the toughest Carolina team that Duke has faced since 1949 when the Tar Heels were last victorious over the Blue Devils.

The Blue Devils received praise from coach Bill Murray for playing what he termed "their best game of the year." He had particular praise for the defense which did its best job of the year.

Middies Being Mentioned As Possible Sugar Bowl Choice

By ED TUNSTALL

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 22 (AP)—Navy remained a strong possibility along with Baylor today to face the once beaten Mississippi University in the Sugar Bowl football game New Year's Day.

A Sugar Bowl official who asked not to be identified, said Navy had been approached and had expressed keen interest in a Sugar Bowl invitation.

Mississippi, beaten 6-0 by Arkansas for its only season loss, needs only a victory over Mississippi State Saturday to clinch the Southeastern Conference championship and the host role in the Sugar Bowl. And the Rebels are an early two-touchdown favorite to dump State.

The Sugar Bowl official said Navy would definitely be issued an official invitation if the Midshipmen defeat or tie powerful Army at Philadelphia Saturday.

Baylor handed Southern Methodist University a 33-21 defeat last Saturday to jump to the front in the Sugar Bowl picture. The Bears could tie Arkansas for the Southwest Conference championship Saturday by defeating Rice and would be a prime Sugar Bowl selection.

The Sugar Bowl official said an announcement of selected teams probably would be made last Saturday night.

However, Mississippi, Navy and Baylor losses Saturday could muddle the Sugar Bowl picture. Should Mississippi bow to Mississippi State the Sugar Bowl official said, the Rebels probably would drop from contention completely and Auburn would be given consideration. Auburn has chalked up five straight victories after three early season losses and is now regarded as one of the SEC's hottest teams.

A Navy-Baylor game is not out of the question, the Sugar Bowl official said. The Sugar Bowl is not wed to the SEC, he said, but bowl officials would like an SEC team as host if it is a representative squad.

Navy last appeared in a bowl in 1924 when the Middies battled Washington University to a 14-14 tie in the Rose Bowl. The Sugar Bowl official said an invitation would have to be approved by the Naval Academy superintendent and athletic director and then given the okay of the Secretary of the Navy.

King Of NYU 2nd, Eckhoff Of Oklahoma 3rd, Terry Of Boston 4th; Terp Team Ties For 7th

EAST LANSING, Mich., Nov. 22 (AP)—Allen Frame, a canny Kansas, let a group of Eastern favorites set the pace, then exploded with a kick in the last half mile to win the 16th annual NCAA cross country run today.

Frame, Big Seven champion from Kansas University, covered the four-mile Michigan State College course in 19:54.2. He was the only runner to cover the distance under the 20-minute mark.

Carolina track coach Dale Ranson appeared pleased at Jim Beatty's finishing in the top 15. Beatty is only a sophomore. He was running in colder weather (Michigan weather) than he is used to, and on a strange course. Incidentally, Beatty was the only Southerner to finish in the top 15.

George King of NYU, who finished 35 yards behind him had a time of 20:02.0.

George Terry of Boston University, who won the IC4A five mile race and King, the runnerup, led the pack of 115 finishers most of the distance. The Frame, jogging along behind them, put on his burst of speed and was still running strong as he crossed the finish line.

Fred Eckhoff of Oklahoma was third, Terry was fourth and Arnold Sowell of Pittsburgh placed fifth. Kikuo Moriya, Japanese exchange student from Wheaton, one of the pre-meet favorites, was scratched.

"I must have been about 30th at the mile," said Frame, "but I got out of the pack and behind the leaders. Then when we were rounding that last turn, I really put it on. I was running with all my might."

Oklahoma, unbeaten in team competition this season, had an easy time winning its first NCAA title. Although Eckhoff was third in the individual finish, he was second in team competition since NYU did not have a team entered.

Oklahoma won with 61 points as its runners placed second, seventh, tenth, 19th and 23rd in the team competition. Syracuse was second with 118 points, Miami of Ohio third with 120, Kansas fourth with 129, and Penn State fifth with 152.

The remainder of the team scoring:

Sixth, Notre Dame, 169; 7-8, tie between Pittsburgh and Maryland, 182; 9, South Dakota State, 220; 10 Michigan State, 231; 11, Western Michigan, 249; 12, Ohio State, 271; 13, Chicago, 327; 14, Beloit, 335; 15, Grinnell, 382; 16 Virginia, Military Institute, 402.

COLLEGE SMOKERS PREFER Luckies—and by a wide margin—according to the largest and latest coast-to-coast college survey. Once again, the No. 1 reason: Luckies taste better. They taste better because Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. Then, that tobacco is toasted to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' light, good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better. The pleasure you'll get from Luckies' better taste is vividly depicted in the Droodle above, titled: Modern artist enjoying Lucky while glancing in mirror. See the ecstatic smile? Well, you, too, can be happy. Just go Lucky!

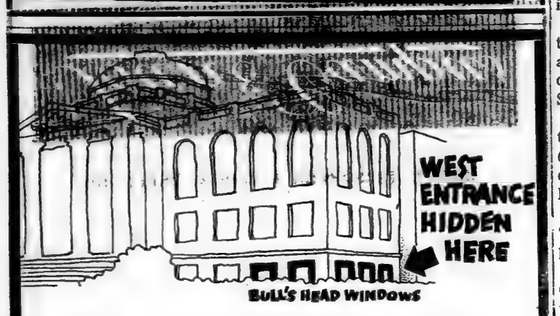
Maurice had a little shirt

A pome by Ogden Gnash

Maurice had a little shirt
A sport-shirt, don't you know?
And everywhere that Maurice went
The shirt was sure to go.
(He was crazy about it.)

He'd wear it first to English class
From thence to Physics Lab
He found himself, like most young men
Quite fond of his VAN GAB.
(Van Heusen's famous rayon gabardine.
A real darb!)

He'd wear it when he went to bed
Because he liked nice things,
And Van Gab's special "finish"
Makes it soft as angel's wings.
(Mrs. DiMaggio's)



He'd wear it in the shower
And his roommates thought him daft
But he knew that it was washable
And so he merely laft.
(Certified completely washable, even for commercial laundries, by American Institute of Laundering. No bull.)

He loved its Sportown collar,
Fine with tie and fine without.
He was made for Van Gab's colors,
Each one's virile—have no doubt!
(Maury bought Van Gab in all 15 shades).

Note: It also has new Vanafit sizing, which means sportshirt comfort with dress-shirt fit. A great idea in a $4.95 shirt but not easily rhymable.

The sheet says that "the government is unable to produce one single statement made by Scales or any other Communist advocating force and violence."

Readers of the sheet are urged to "write a letter to our senator and the President protesting the outrageous $100,000 bail set for Scales."

Continues the sheet, "In practice this is really a denial of bail. (Where would a $40 a week leader of a working class party get that kind of money?)"

Handbills signed by the Shelby County (Memphis) Communist Party with a New York address were found in Memphis Sunday urging a lower bond for Scales.

The student who said he was Barbee, according to the source, said "he was going as far as he could" last night, "canvassing the campus."

The reported petition followed closely on the heels of another, asking for continued segregation, circulated by Dr. W. C. George, UNC anatomy professor. Dr. George's petition was started in Chapel Hill and Orange County last week.

SP Discusses Recent Elections

By JACKIE GOODMAN

"It is my belief that the Student Party will emerge stronger in the spring as a result of this election than it ever could have hoped to if it had maintained its majority," said David Reid in a Student Party meeting last night.

"Some people might think the election a repudiation of Student Party legislature. I do not think that is the case. Many of the cases we did lose were by very narrow margins," continued the Student Party floorleader.

Jim Turner, long-time legislator who lost his seat in last week's election, said while commenting upon the election, "As far as the Party is concerned, I am not discouraged at all. As far as the overall pictures goes, it is one of a more fortunate situation than before the election."

Turner added that before the election the Student Party had been "right up against the gates of heaven." He was referring to the fact that before the election the Student Party held a 38-12 majority in the student Legislature, while it did not hold the student body presidency. Turner feels that now the Student Party has "backed off to take a good look at things and will go crashing through the gates of heaven this spring."

"One outstanding difference between the Student Party and the University Party in my opinion is this," said Charlie Wolf, veteran Student Party member, "the Student Party does not need offices to get things done.

Joel Fleishman, Student P... chairman, announced that the election of new party officers will be held during next Monday's meeting. The officers to be elected are chairman, vice chairman, four advisory board members, secretary-treasurer and sergeant-at-arms.

Art In Morehead Bldg.

47 Christmas Pieces On Display

By BILLY ARTHUR

Appropriate to the Christmas season, an exhibit of 47 valuable and famous drawings and prints dating back to the 15th century has been opened by the Graphic Arts Collection of the University Library in the North Art Gallery of the Morehead Building.

The exhibit includes items, both originals and reproductions, from the Burton Emmett Collection of Graphic Arts, the William P. Jacocks Collection of Fine Arts, the Carnegie Collection, and possessions of the University library.

The most valuable piece on display is an original engraving by Albrecht Durer, considered the greatest engraver of all times. Dated 1495, it is titled "Holy Family With the Butterfly" and is a part of the Jacocks collection. There are other Durer original and three reproductions in the group.

Other aged originals to be seen include a 16th century pen and ink drawing of the "Madonna and the Wise Men," and a water color of the Nativity, both from the Emmett collection. The latter is by an anonymous artist of medieval times.

Contemporary originals include a Rockwell Kent zinc etching in color of a modern Madonna, a charcoal drawing of the "Escape Into Egypt" by Eugene Higgins, two wood engravings of "Madonna and Child" by Eric Gill, an original woodcut "Flight Into Egypt" by Stanislaw Chrostowski. The latter is a Polish contemporary artist while Gill is an English and Kent and Higgins are American contemporaries.

Selections for the exhibit were made by Mrs. Myra Lauterer, librarian of the Graphic Arts Collection, and Mrs. B. Vickery Williams, Chapel Hill designer. The works are part of the 5,000 prints held in the collection, and obtained through the efforts of Friends of the Library, by donations and acquisition.

Every effort was made by Mrs. Lauterer and Mrs. Williams to select works appropriate to the Christmas season and to the annual Planetarium tribute to the Christmas, "Star of Bethlehem," which opens November 23.

The Graphic Arts display, as well as the scientific exhibits in ing, are open to the public without charge from 2 to 10 p.m. daily, 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 10 p.m. Sunday They may also be viewed before and after every performance of "Star of Bethlehem."

The Burton Emmett Collection of Graphic Arts, numbering more than 5,000 items, was obtained by the library from the Emmett estate through the efforts of William D. Carmichael, Jr., vice-president and controller of the Consolidated University, and Friends of the Library. Emmett was a New York advertising executive of the wellknown firm of Newell-Emmett Co.

Dr. Jacocks, a University alumnus and collector, was formerly director of the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation in Delhi, India, and a Friend of the Library also. He is now retired here.

New Yorker Gets WC Play Lead

Frances Starr, an outstanding actress of the New York theatre, will play the lead in the production of a new play presented by the Theatre of Woman's College.

She will be Bride Molloy in Arthur Cavanaugh's recent play, "The Children of Bride" which will be presented in Aycock Auditorium on Dec. 3 and 4.

Michael Casey, head of the Drama Department, said today, "North Carolina is indeed fortunate to be that state in which the new project for the development of playwriting in America is located. There is no other college theatre in the country which is so closely connected with the professional theater. We are most honored to have with us for this exciting experience, Miss Frances Starr who has distinguished herself as a leading actress of the American theatre over a period of 30 years. We are also very grateful to Miss Mary Diveny for coming to North Carolina to play the other major role. Miss Diveny is a young New York actress who has appeared in numerous Broadway productions."

Miss Starr was the last star "created" by the late David Belasco, playwright, director and producer. Mary Pickford and Judith Anderson also admittedly learned their craft under Belasco. He first leading role was that of Juanita in "The Rose of the Rancho." Since 1948, she has acted in several plays with summer theatres, including "Arsenic and Old Lace" and "Glass Menagerie." Her most recent appearance was in "The Ladies of the Corridor" which appeared last season. She is known for her creative leading role in "The Young and Fair" which was also presented on the Woman's College campus several seasons ago.

Mrs. Robert G. Donaldson in real life, Miss Frances Starr was born at Oneonta, near Albany, N. Y. She came to distinction in the plays of David Belasco. In "The Case of Becky" directed by him, she played a psychic case, a "Female Jekyll and Hyde," cured by hypnotism. She also played in "Marie Odile" (motion picture version was called "The Miracle") and "Tiger, Tiger" under Belasco's direction.

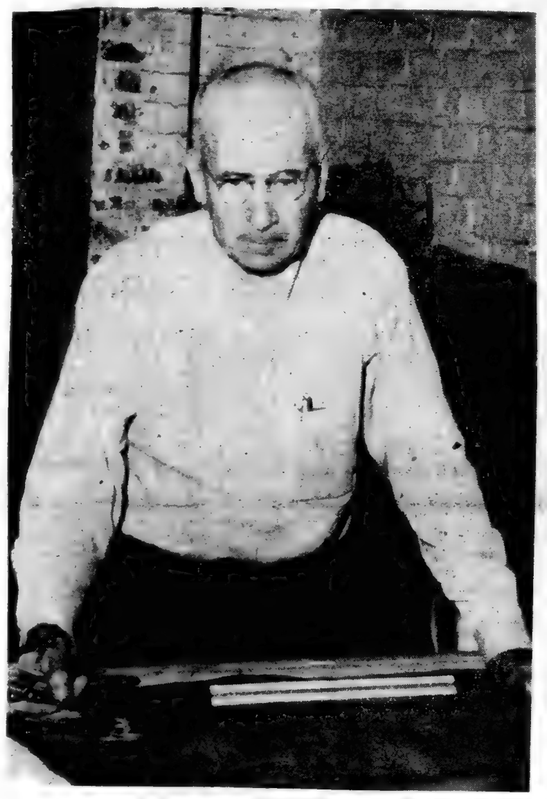
Francis Le Clair:



Balance & Nature Architect's Goals

By SUE QUINN

Graceful balance around buildings and complete naturalness in other areas is, according to Francis J. Le Clair, University landscape engineer, the basis for all of the planting done on the Carolina campus.

Le Clair, who drew up plans for remodeling the Old Well, denies vehemently the cricitisms of many students that the present trend in campus landscaping is toward "Dookism." or more formality. Around the buildings, he explains, he tries to arrange shrubs and trees so that they will enhance the architects' basic lines, and soften the harshness which such large structures often have. The well, which he worked on for four and a half years before the actual remodeling job was begun, is near to buildings. Therefore, it can have the formal dignity which an important landmark deserves, without destroying the natural look of trees, shrubs and benches apparently scattered at random, he says.

Very few students know Le Clair, but almost everyone has probably seen him, for he spends a great deal of time out on the campus, personally supervising planting, transplanting and pruning. Several times a week he goes to the University's Mason Farm, part of which is a nursery where plants are grown until they are needed on campus. And then there's his office, a tiny room in the basement of Phillips, filled with blueprints, seeds and botany texts. The only space not stacked high is his drawing board, where detailed scale plans for all planting done here and at the other colleges for which he does work are drawn up. This one surface he keeps clear, except for rulers of all shapes and sizes and the wing of a Canada goose, which he uses to brush off the drawings.

FRANCIS J. LE CLAIR
. . . planned the New Old Well

A native of Antwerp, Belgium, Le Clair came to this country soon after completing his training at the State School of Horticulture, near Brussels. Although Western Europe originated and improved many plants and vegetables, he explained, there was more independence and opportunity for expansion in his field in the United States; Europe, torn by wars and almost constant depression, has no money or interest for horticulture, above the level of cultivating necessary food products, he said. Since coming here, he has done landscaping for many institutions and private estates, as well

Scales To Be Tried In N.C.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., (AP) — Federal officers prepared yesterday to return Junius Irving Scales to his native North Carolina, where he will stand trial on charges of leading the Communist Party in three southern states.

Scales, 34-year-old native of Greensboro, N. C., waived preliminary hearing yesterday and was ordered taken to Wilkesboro, N. C., for trial on charges of violating the Smith Act.

A U. S. Commissioner said Scales, who the FBI termed the top communist in the Carolinas and Tennessee, would be returned to North Carolina "as soon as possible." Be he declined to give the date.

District Attny. Millsaps Fitzhugh asked the Scales' bond of $100,000 be continued and Scales didn't object. Earlier, he had protested the bond was excessive. However, yesterday he said he probably could not raise bond even if it were lowered substantially.

The one time University of North Carolina student was indicted in Wilksboro last Thursday under the membership provisions of the Smith Act, which outlaws teaching the violent overthrow of the government. FBI agents arrested him on a Memphis street corner a few hours later.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said Scales had led the Communist Party in the three states since "disappearing" from his Carboro, N. C., home three years ago.

Scales, a great nephew of a former North Carolina governor, is married and is a father.

He was represented at yesterday's hearing by Fyke Farmer, the Nashville attorney who helped gain a short stay of execution for the Rosenburgs, convicted atomic spies.

It Was 'Beat Dook' All Over Town Yesterday, With Parade And Rally

Few Attend 'Beat Dook' Pep Rally

By NEIL BASS

Row upon row of bare Memorial Hall seats, but a spirited few was the theme last evening as "Beat Dook" festivities began amid rather dismal weather conditions.

At precisely 7:30, scheduled time for proceedings to get underway, approximately 50 students were on hand to participate in the activities. To arouse interest the faithful few then streamed from the structure and wound slowly through the upper and lower quads in quest of the students who apparently were withdrawn to their rooms and sought seclusion.

Like a giant stone seeking to roll along and gather a little student moss, the brave but lonely band marched down S. Columbia St., and through the corriders of several dorms. A few students chose to lend voice to the calvacade.

A number of cars strieking down the misty streets added a trinkling of paraders to the group as they made their way back to Memorial Hall.

By this time, the at first nearly deserted building was the scene of mere activity. The peel of the Carolina-Dook Victory bell was more pronounced.

SPIRITS RAN HIGH

But the gatherers refused to say die. They whooped and hollered and stomped and all but compensated for their obvious smallness.

The small but fiery band blasted with vigor, keeping lighted the spark of tradition which was apparently flickering. The flame was weak according to students who remained in the comfort of their dorms because they "have exams tomorrow." An understandable situation because of the coming holidays.

FOUNTAIN FOILS DOOK

8:25 rolled around and it appeared that Dook was going to monopolize the 30 minutes broadcasting time which WDNC was giving to the proceedings, but then the apparent threat to the "Carolina tradition" was quenched.

Jim Fountain, head cheerleader called WDNC and promised to produce a recording to the radio station by 10:15.

The assembly rose to the occasion and along with the redfaced cheerleaders began the recording with a tremendous yell, quite unexpected to the Dookers who were already probably gloating over the turn of events.

Blue Devils Are Given 13 Points Over UNC

By BERNIE WEISS

Duke's Blue Devils are favored by 13 points in Saturday's traditional season-ending game against Carolina at Kenan Stadium, but UNC Coach George Barclay seems "glad" that his team has the underdog role.

"I'm glad Duke is favored," he said yesterday Barclay emplied that the Tar Heels would come up with more spirit and fight for the game if they went into the contest as underdogs.

Judging from the display put on yesterday in Woollen Gym, where the team went through signal drills and calisthenics, the Tar Heels already have their flags waving. Rainy skies had forced the squad inside and the main floor of the gym rocked with voices.

Barclay stated that the team would be "going after this one," it being the last game of the season and also a chance to get back at Duke after four consecutive defeats by the Blue Devils. The game will give Carolina an opportunity to come up with its first winning season since 1949 (current record for 1954 is 4-4-1) and the thought of four lean years after the Justice era is top-most in the Tar Heels' minds.

Gametime Saturday is 2 o'clock. Thirteen Carolina gridders will be playing their last game for the Blue and White. Actually, the number is only 12, since senior quarterback Al Long won't be seeing any action because of a back injury suffered against Notre Dame. Those bidding good-bye are guards Jimmy Neville, Will Alexander, Steve Marcinko and George Foti; center Bill Kirkman; end Dick Starner; tackle Ralph Beaver; and backs Larry Parker, Connie Gravitte, Sonny Ridenhour and George Wallin.

With the exception of Long and fullback Marshall Newman, all of the Carolina players are in good physical shape. Newman injured his knee in the Tennessee game and was lost for the last four games of the campaign.

The Blue Devils, coached by Bill Murray, have again fielded another one of their fine teams through the season and stand an excellent chance, depending on their play here Saturday, of getting a bid for the Orange Bowl. The team is undefeated in three conference games with N. C. State, Wake Forest and South Carolina. Against outside competition, Duke has downed Penn, Tennessee, and Georgia Tech, tied Perdue and dropped games to Army and Navy.

Nurses, Tri-Delts, Ruffin, Sigma Nu Win With Floats

By ARCHER NEAL

Nurses' dorm, Delta Delta Delta, Ruffin, and Sigma Nu took first place honors in the annual "Beat Dook" float parade, sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha yesterday afternoon.

Spirits were not dampened by the rains that threatened to mar the festivities. Parade chairman Claude Pope expressed his "appreciaton to all the participating groups for their cooperation in making the parade a success. There was a good turn-out in spite of the weather."

The Tri-Delt float, winner in the sorority division, featured a wedding scene with a bride and groom, a group of bridesmaids and an organist, The float was surrounded by a huge wedding ring, and captioned "I, Carolina, take thee Duke."

Ruffin, first place winner in the mens' dorm division, had a ram pulling the Carolina-Duke Victory Bell from the campus of Duke to UNC.

The Nurses' dorm float had about half a dozen girls blowing bubbles. In their midst were three soap boxes labeled "Lux to us," "Vel we better", and "Duz we win?"

The PiKA float carried the queen of the parade, Miss Rita Schaefers, sponsored by Alpha Delta Pi sorority, and her court. Her attendents included Misses Ann May, Ann Penn, Ann Gobbel, Nancy Whisnant, Catherine Berryhill, and Jackie Van Hook.

There were many other colorful floats in the parade. The K. D.'s had a huge kangaroo with a baby kangaroo in its pouch with the legend, "It's in the bag." Everett featured a Carolina player by a goal post with several of the dorm's representatives atop the float singing appropriate songs. The Pi Phi's had a yellow-spotted green centipede snaking down the street with " Squash Dook" on its side.

Holiday

Thanksgiving holidays, according to a statement issued from Dean C. P. Spruill's office, officially begins at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The recess will terminate at 6 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 28.

Runoff Elections

Winners in the run-off voting of the fall elections are: Jr. seat, Student Council, Claude Pope; Soph. seat, Men's Council, Bill Bob Peele; and Frosh seat, Men's Council, Bill Redding.

Weaver Says Stocking Fund 'Great Work'

"I have seen at first hand what the Empty Stocking Fund does, and I know it is one of the best things about Christmas in Chapel Hill. There are more families right around Chapel Hill with empty stockings on Christmas morning than most of us know about or care to think about. The Empty Stocking Fund finds out what they need and sees to it that they are not forgotten. This is a great work. It is worthy of all that we can give," said Dean Fred Weaver concerning the Empty Stocking Fund.

Campus organizations can deliver baskets before they go home for the holidays. If it is impossible, there will be some provision made to get the baskets delivered.

Following are some cases to be cared for through the Fund: a middle aged man who has recently returned from a tuberculosis sanitarium. He has no close relatives and is living with friends; a widow who has two children and is unable to work. She comes from a very large family all of whom have large families themselves, and thus, can not give her any help. The two children are a boy, age four, and a girl, age eight; a grandfather who has a daughter in prison for abandoning her children. He has taken the children to live with him The children are a boy, age 14, a girl, age seven, twin girls, age nine, and a girl, age 11; a young mother with one child. She is obliged to stay at home to care for a bedridden mother who is 78 years old; two elderly sisters who are unable to work; a Negro family with eight children. They have no financial aid.

Objects Of Thanks

Thanksgiving, as a Greensboro boy, William Sydney Porter, once said, is the day that is ours, the one day when all we Americans who are not self-made go back home to eat biscuits and marvel how much nearer to the porch the old pump looks than it used to. Thanksgiving Day is the one day that is purely American.

We spent yesterday afternoon trying to compose a message for the day before Thanksgiving, only to conclude that it has all been said already. But in America, every man is entitled to be his own preacher as well as his own politician and if we were going to deliver a sermon of thanks, it would cover a lot of simple things.

The Lord, we submit, will get his due regarding health and wealth and happiness in the prayers at tomorrow's dinner tables. We would give thanks for yesterday's mid-November rain, for the grass that grows on the shoulders of the Raleigh Road. Our gratitude would be for the last remaining leaf upon the limb of the oak in the Methodist Church yard, for the song a coed sang while walking past the Playmaker's Theatre yesterday, a hymn in a piquant manner: ". . . Sing praises to His name, He forgets not His own . . ."

In our sermon, if we had one, there would be a paragraph of praise for the books in the bookshop on Franklin Street; there would be another for the scales being played on the piano and audible from the path beside Hill Hall, for the Goodman clarinet break on the record that is playing on the fraternity house phonograph down the street.

We would be thankful for such a thing as love, for the son of a shipping clerk in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania and for the daughter of a grocer in Salisbury, who met in Chapel Hill last September, who eat supper together every night, who plan to be married next June; and we would not forget the tug of the wind, the smell of the morning, the remark made in front of Sutton's by one basketball player to another: "Jeez, didja see dat skirt?"

No less would we be grateful for the view from Gimghoul, the social science teacher who yesterday rubbed two ideas together and created a spark in the mind of a freshman from Granite Quarry, the way the campus looks at two in the morning.

We contend that these are not unimportant objects of praise. Our notion is that they are appropriate to the Thanksgiving season, the simple accidental, tranquil pleasures that are our subtle heritage from Roanoke Island and Plymouth, Massachusetts.

Gratitude for these things need not be somber and genuflective, and not necessarily cast beneath stained-glass windows. Rather, our Thangsgiving might take place humor, in the sunlight of tomorrow morn-in a passing moment, positively and with humor, in the sunlight of tomorrow morning, under the one dome not yet equaled by the architecture of the church.

A Mission Of 'Thanks' In Atlanta, Ga.

Louis Kraar

AFTER STUDYING my watch more closely than the lecture in my last class this morning, I'll hit the road for Atlanta, Ga.

Now there's nothing unusual, you might say, about going away for the Thanksgiving holiday. It's just that when I think about Atlanta, I recall some mental snapshots of past days, something a young person doesn't enjoy too often.

Atlanta is the Southern town they say has the progressiveness of a large city and the friendliness of a village. Liberal newspaper editor Ralph McGill sits on one side of town writing about a new, moving South. And Herman Talmadge lounges around the governor's office in the Capitol —a few blocks away—thinking about Herman Talmadge.

Georgia Tech students, wearing blue jeans and T-shirts, hang around a large, drive-in eating place called the Varsity and swear that Atlanta has "more pretty girls than any other town in the country." And a hot dog later, when you ask them why they're not out with one of these beauties, they'll declare: "Date these girls? Hell, they're so stuck up by the time they're 15, you can't."

Across town on the conservative campus of Emory, you'll find the students wearing flannels and sweaters—and worrying about little but studying and decorating the fraternity house for the big weekend. They're for the most part, a listless bunch who work out all their inhibitions in intramural ball games and look forward to graduating in law or business school.

HIGH SCHOOL for me in the big Southern town was about as routine as a cup of Y Court coffee until my last year. Then I had a teacher who knew that literature hadn't stopped with Tennyson and Dickens, and she made me realize it too.

This teacher, one of the dedicated few left in high schools who teach for the love of teaching, advised a newspaper, the first one I ever worked on. The day a friend of mine dashed off an editorial on freedom of the classroom, she didn't think it too radical for publication.

But when the piece appeared in print, the faculty got excited —perhaps one of the few times in their lives that this phenomenon occured. The editorial, an innocent enough piece of prose, merely suggested that the exchange of knowledge between students and teachers was more important than just listening to and agreeing with teachers.

I'll never forget the pink-faced principal, sitting behind his big desk, telling me, "Now Louis, The Scribbler (that was the paper) has to make friends. All good newspapers should be concerned about that, you know." That was the last controversial editorial.

THANKS TO this one dynamic high school teacher, though, one classroom there was not void of controversy. Our class in "journalism" turned into a symposium on sex, segregation, politics, religion, literature, and life in general.

I heard the names of Hemingway, Fitzgerald, and Faulkner for the first time in that room. I heard about Winnie Ruth Judd, the insane killer who kept escaping her institution. And I heard about the South and its problems.

This teacher turned books into life, and we students found ourselves reading and talking about things that we used to think were "too intellectual."

That's why today when I get to Atlanta, drive past active Peachtree Street and the Varsity with its Tech students, I'm going to see an old teacher of mine.

Somehow just "thanks" is going to seem not enough. But what more can you say to a dedicated Southern teacher who teaches because she loves it?

Council Member's Views On Reform In The Honor System

Editor:

This is in reference to the editorial which appeared recently concerning the Honor System and suggested four necessary changes, that:

1. The accused should in all cases hear all of the testimony against him.
2. The accused should in all cases be supplied with Counsel.
3. The accused should have the right to subpoena witnesses through the court.
4. The accused should have the right to an open trial.

The changes are reasonable, in themselves, but the presentation has probably raised questions regarding the effectiveness and integrity of the Honor Council and the Honor System.

The closing sentence of the editorial said, 'Until these changes are accomplished, the Honor System will remain cluttered with cobwebs and rarely effective.". Who or what determines the effectiveness of our Honor System?

Is it determined by the number of cases reported each year and the penalties imposed, or is it rather determined by the success with which it fulfills its cardinal purpose, that of imbuing the Carolina student with a sense of the real importance of individual honor and integrity. Without teaching this, no University has been truly successful.

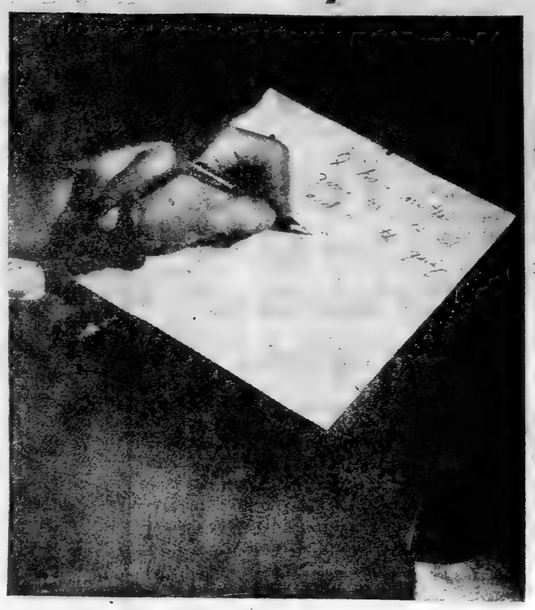
If the student believes in the Honor System enough to cooperate with it fully, there will be no embarassment or hesitation. If the witness is telling the truth he has nothing at all to be ashamed of in facing the accused. But rather than have a rigid prescription for all cases, the choice of facing the accuser (s) should be left to the defendant except in cases where there has been a conflict in testimony, etc.

The accused should have the right to subpoena witnesses through the court, and he does.

The accused should have the right to an open trial by all means, and no one I know of has been denied that privilege. As for witnesses in a public hearing, I agree that truthful accusers have nothing to fear from affirming the truth publicly.

However, the implication that because these suggestions have not all been specifically included in the By-laws of the Honor Council in the past, that students have suffered injustices and been dealt with unfairly, is misrepresentative. Also misleading is the idea that any students have had to prove their innocence against great odds, for it is their guilt that must be established, beyound the shadow of a doubt, before any conviction is obtained or sentence passed.

The introspection of recent days has been healthy for the Honor Council as well as the student body. The suggested reforms should be available to the student in the Official By-law of the Councils, mandatory upon his request, but in the matter of bringing in the witnesses to testify before the defendant, the choice should be left up to the defendant, unless the Council finds it necessary to bring a witness in to clear up a conflict in testimony. The choice of counsel should also be optional.



The editorial went on to interpret the Council's closed hearings as saying, "You have to accept our judgment, and you must say nothing of this to anyone," that this is wrong if it implies secrecy for the Council's sake. The secrecy is rather for the protection of the individual, for if he chooses to speak of his case, or to appeal a decision, the Council has nothing to hide. An appeal is made on the ground that constitutional rights have been violated, or that the sentence was unjust, etc., and not merely out of dissatisfaction with the first decision as I was mistakenly quoted the other day.

Referrng to the state on the Summons which read reads, "All proceedings as of the issuance of this summons are confidential." the editorial interpreted it to mean that the student is bound to silence though he may wish to discuss it with others outside of court. In reality it is to reassure the student that the Honor Council is being properly discreet about his case, not to restrict him personally.

Such interpretations reflect misconceptions which I hope have been clearing up in the recent referendum discussions. They indicate a need which I have long maintained exists, that of a closer and more personal contact between the students and the government of their Honor System. With this closer contact will come more of the cooperation which is essential to the system, and any future changes which should be included in the By-laws, such as the four suggested will be proposed on a basis of better understanding.

'Your Leader Is Right Behind You, Men'

Calif.), Mr. Dulles, Senator Johnson (R., Tex.), Repre Mass.), Rayburn (D., Tex.), Senator Saltonstall (R.,

With the Democrats poised to take over the new Congress (in which Lyndon Johnson will be back as Democratic "leader") it was particularly interesting to note a devastating typographical error in our Sunday New York Times. On the front page of the News In Review section, in large-size cutlines, the Times unintentionally called Senator Johnson a Republican—an error in which some Democrats find a measure of truth. The whole affair revived our realization, that newspapers, even the Sunday Times, are human, and called to mind this old Herblock cartoon.

UNC's Parties & Politicians Are The Best

David Mundy

As the majority of such gatherings are, the 18th session of the N. C. Student Legislature was dominated by the Carolina delegation. UNC may not be successful on the football field, but the politicians that she produces are almost invincible.

Even before leaving Chapel Hill last Thursday, the delegation granted chairman Gordon Forrester authority to bargain with its votes as he thought best. The chairman and his deputies were on hand when the first delegations began to arrive. A few previously arranged deals and one or two quick swaps lined things up for Carolina. By the time Duke arrived, Carolina had already garnered enough votes to elect Joel Fleishman Speaker of the House.

This race, and the others in which Carolina had made voting deals, were unanimous decisions. There was no opposition on the floor: Duke just smoldered quietly. The real fights came in the races with no interest for Carolina, the election of the assistant sergeants at arms.

Sample lines;

"God bless free enterprise, system divine. Stand beside her, and guide her, just as long as the profits are mine."

"I'm sorry I pledged SAE."

"At the tables in the Kremlin to The place where Georgi dwells."

Turner, seeking to recoup some of his expenses, still has copies of the limited edition for sale at thirty-five cents each.

Carolina's was the only real party Thursday night, and a few members of the other delegations were invited. The governor's suite of the Sir Walter jumped, rattled, and rolled. Two or three spoilsport house detectives turned up sometime during the morning. Turner, who might also assume the title of chief placator, eased them off in the smoothest and most polished, almost professional, manner possible.

When the House adjourned near Friday midnight, delegation chairman Forrester arose to make an announcement to the Carolina delegation. A delegate from ECC asked him to yield for a question. The questioner wanted to know where the party was. So the whole legislature was invited down to a party room in one of the hotels.

Early in the morning the Carolina delegation adjourned to the governor's suite of the Sir Walter. House rules for this party were dimmed lights, no shoes, and no boisterous conduct. All was well - columnist Louis Kraar was writing a story out on the balcony when I decided to leave near 4:00 a.m. A brief search located my footgear under the TV. Stuffing my socks into my pockets and duffing someone's bathrobe - Turner is still looking for its owner - I took my departure twice. (It was hard to leave, expecially since DTH staffers Kraar and Dalton were outlasting me.)

I did beat one of them to the 9:30 session of the legislature, though.

Still, partying was an almost minor part of the long weekend, even when Lewis Brumfield's waterpistol assassination of the President of the Senate is included.

Debates were long and serious with few exceptions. The lowest ebb of the whole session came when Dave Reid was granted permission to address the House. The usual base and baseless charges are understandable when coming from Reid, considering his political unbalance. A reference to the President as a glorified drill sergeant brought Representative Dick Albert to his feet with a point of personal privilege. It couldn't be recognized by the chair, but the house offered him a long ovation. Reid proceeded to level the charge that the President was personally corrupt. The chair recognized a point of personal privilege that allowed me to leave the floor until "this libel ceases."

Reid continued with the reply, "There are the courts if they want to sue."

He may get an official looking letter for Thanksgiving.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some tthings, minimizing others . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was sprawled in the lee of The Pine Room when I saw him, reading his mail. Was there anything of interest?

"There is even something of the incredible, Roger me codger," The Horse confirmed. "Gene (The Genius) Cook, otherwise Boss Cook of more robustious Student Party days, writes me from Camp Jackson to inform me he is awake at 4:15 ayem each day."

What! Didn't the Army (bless it!) make the lads got to bed, at all, at all?

"I said this was incredible," The Horse reminded me. "He arises at that time, in the full blown fury of his patriotic zeal to protect weuns snug and safe at home. He deposes further that he retires to his not-so-downy couch at a virtuous, not to mention exhausted 10:15 p.m."

What again! And without the interested offices of Spero to bid him a hopeful Goody-night over a stirrup pail?

"Brother!" The Horse murmured, flipping over to another letter. "Can you imagine, if Boss Cook had got up hereabouts at 4:15 ayemly, during his politicking days? This here now seat of Tar Heel cultoor would now be known as S.P.U.! But if one less Cook is spoiling the broth for S.P., as the recent election would indicate, let it not be thought that Machiavellian cooking hand has lost its skill! The lad is a platoon-leader, no less, and himself so new to The Service (long may it waive!) that he still gets sent out to bring in the Skirmish Line when rain threatens."

Platoon, had The Horse said? The UP-and-coming Party had more than once called him a poltroon-leader. when he had been decimating their ranks of Student Legislators. If decimating was not too strong a word?

"It is too weak," The Horse said, "for what The Boss Cook did with those broths of UP lads. Adulterate your epic ignorance with a bit of fact: decimate is from the Latin, and means to reduce by one -tenth."

Okus-dokus. But should not The Horse credit Dr. Albert Suskin, of Classical erudition, for this information?

"Since it took me an entire semester to learn it, I claim some of the credit," The Hhorse shrugged. "Here I have a letter from The Dook Chronicle saying as how me'n 'The Voice' Kuralt are meanies for funnin' the, ugh, Dookers when technical difficulties dusted the promised movies of the Dook-Navy massacre with invisible powder."

But, a movie had been shown, if belatedly!

"The coaching pics, no doubt," The Horse explained. "They probably had to be gone over to delete such trivia as uncerebrated Dook tactics, and any fights incident to the game the showing of which might annoy the National Boxing Commission."

Speaking of deletions from pictures, did The Horse know that more than one Crying Deacon apologist was going about eheu-ing that some nimble editing had been done on our film of the Tar Hoel-Crying Deak fights—pardon, game—of recent history? Ere the disinterested sportswriters (yoo-hoo, Horner!) were invited to have a look-see?

"I trust," The Horse murmured, "that you are not suggesting Tribble, Quibble & Horner ate crow because someone stood to lose Three Thousand Fish if the Frosh of both collitches didn't play that cancelled game at Wilson, and we rightly wouldn't play unless an apology were forthcoming! Why, such a thought is—is—well, worthy only of a Horse!"

Okay, let dead issues die . . . until next year. What would be the outcome of the Tar Heel-Dook battle- royal?

"UNC 32, Dook 19, with the Dooks closing fast in the last quarter," The Horse grinned. "Happy Turkey, y'all!"

The Professor's Right To Express His Views

(The following are excerpts from an address titled, "Academic Freedom" by Victor S. Bryant of Durham. Mr. Bryant, long an outspoken friend of the University, is presently chairman of the Board of Trustees Visiting Committee. We reprint his remarks because of their pertinence to the recent pro-segregation petition circulated by Dr. W. C. George of the Medical School faculty. Mr. Bryant's speech was made on March 22; he did not, therefore, have Dr. George in mind. But the shoe fits, and serves to show that in speaking out for continued segregation on biological grounds, Dr. George was not speaking for the University, but for himself.—Editor.)

Academic freedom stands for a . . . privilege for the faculty member: Outside his classroom and beyond his chosen field, he has the same right to formulate and express his opinions as any citizen. He must, however, in so doing so dissociate himself from his academic ties insofar as possible in order that the institution is not represented as concurring in the opinions expressed . . . At times professors probably fail to realize that their opinions carry much weight and that laymen frequently judge them as official spokesmen of the institution regardless of the subject on which they choose to express themselves.

Certainly it would seem appropriate to cite the existence of controversy within his discipline when such is the case, lest he give the appearance of speaking authoritatively, and thus lead the public to attach unjustified weight to the substance of his views . . .

A professor by ill-advised utterances may do serious damage to his profession as well as to his institution, and may even destroy his own influence with students, most of whom you may rest assured have a keen eye for the fallacious . . .

When the professor speaks of socially and politically controversial matters outside the field of his professional specialty, he steps out of character as a faculty member, and exercises his freedom as a citizen.

Tar Babies Tangle With Blue Imps

Frosh Seek To Make Season's Record Four Wins, One Loss

By BOB DILLARD

Tomorrow, at 2 p. m. in Duke Stadium, the Baby Tar Heels of North Carolina tangle with the Blue Imps of Duke in their game of the season. The proceeds of the contest will go to the Crippled Children's Benefit.

Coach Ralph Floyd announced yesterday that his team is in the best physical condition of the season for the contest. Only two Tar Babies may not see action in the game because of injuries. One of these, Wally Vale, has been out of action all year, with an injury sustained in early season practice, and the other, tackle Leo Russavage, is suffering from a leg injury.

The Tar Babies are going for their fourth win of the season, against one loss, suffered at the hands of Maryland in the only home game of the year. The Tar Babies have beaten South Carolina, Virginia, and Wake Forest, in that order. In their last outing, the team decisively outplayed the Deaclets, despite the low score of 12-7. The Deaclets were held to a minus number of yards rushing, and gained only a few via the air lanes.

The Duke freshmen are rated as being on a par with the Terplets of Maryland by the Carolina coaching staff. Fleet halfbacks, and passing star Marion Justice of Charlotte, N. C. headline the list of imposing backs. The line is also rated as tough; although they are not as heavy as the Terplet or Wake Forest forward walls.

The starting line-up for the Tar Babies will be the same used by Coach Floyd in previous contests, with the exception of tackle Dick Smith, who will sub for Leo Russavage in the event that Russavage is unable to play. For the Baby Tar Heels it will be Pulley and Payne at ends, Smith or Russavage and Blazer at tackles, Lineberger and Setzer at guards, Llewellyn at center, Sasser at quarterback, Temple and Williams at the halves, and Gaca at fulback.

Guards Willis "Hap" Setzer and Jack Lineberger, and end Paul Pulley have been named as co-captains for the game.

Bullock Named Athlete Of Week

Len Bullock, 175-pound quarterback from Ayden (N.C.), has been chosen Tar Heel Athlete of the Week for his sterling, 60-minute performance in the 26-14 win over Virginia in Charlottesville, V., last Saturday.

The 22-year-old, 6'1", junior turned in what is generally regarded as the best game of his college career in piloting Carolina to its fourth victory of the season. Bullock completed five of 11 passes for 60 yards and one touchdown. In addition, he carried the ball almost twice as many times as did any other Tar Heel, gaining 70 yards in 21 rushes.

He was the only Tar Heel to play the entire game against the Cavaliers, and it was the first time Coach George Barclay has been able to use one quarterback for a complete game in the two seasons the mentor has been here.

Except for being the victim of one pass interception, Bullock appeared to have played a flawless game. His daring handling of the option play thrilled the partisan crowd all afternoon, and his deceptive handling of the ball on fakes and hand-offs was superb. But the most pleasantly surprising feature of Bullock's game Saturday was his rugged defensive work. Several times the comparatively light Bullock, playing the safety position on defense, prevented Cavalier runners from breaking loose for long runs by applying bone-crushing, head-on tackles.

Slender Len's excellent performance may be appreciated even more in light of the fact that he is the only Tar Heel signal-caller left with an appreciable amount of experience. Bullock and Sophomore Doug Farmer, who has seen very limited action thus far, are the sole components of Barclay's quarterback corps; since Albert Long and Marshall Newman are out of uniform with serious injuries.

Bullock will face the acid test when he matches talents with Duke's highly-touted quarterback, Jerry Barger, in the season's finale this coming Saturday at Kenan Stadium.

Deacs Prep For Closer Against South Carolina

Bad weather forced the squad indoors during the early part of the afternoon. During that time the team held an extensive skull session, saw movies of last year's game with South Carolina, and reviewed mistakes in the loss to William and Mary.

After the rain, the Deacons went on the field and the first team attempted to halt reserves running South Carolina plays. Tackle Rocky Littleton, guard J. C. Turner, and tailback Nick Maravic were the defensive leaders.

Trainer Ernie McKenzie announced that halfback Bill Barnes may be able to play against the Gamecocks. Barnes missed the William and Mary game because of a bad knee.

Peeping Tom Sought Here

By DAN WALLACE

A PEEPING TOM was reported seen on Daniels road last Wednesday night. Someone related seeing a police car in that vicinity with two boys in the back seat.

A POLICE spokesman said yesterday that the report had been received but that no one had been caught.

IN THE VILLAGE board meeting last Friday night, one of the members reported that Mason Farm road may be improved in the future because it is a by-pass from Route 15-501 to Pittsboro road. All streets in the Village are under jurisdiction of the State Highway department, but only Mason Farm road stands a chance of improvement due to the Highway department's tight budget.

NOMINATIONS for candidates for the Village board of directors will be in order at the next meeting of the board in December. There will be five seats open on the board at this time. The slate of candidates will be drawn up at the January meeting and the election will be held in February.

ED BEST, chairman of the board, announced that he would resign as of February 1955. Ed, who is working on his doctorate in the humanities, said that he would no longer have enough time for the board duties. He suggested Nell Hood, present board member, as a possible candidate to fill his post.

IT WAS announced at the board meeting that the Village nursery would be closed from December 26 through January 3. During this period, however, the nursery will provide a full time baby-sitting service, and Villagers interested in baby-sitting jobs during this period should contact Mildred Phillips at the rec center.

Interracial Church Meets Slated Here

Interracial church services will mark Thanksgiving here this week, with special community-wide services sponsored by the Chapel Hill Ministerial Association.

Dr. James T. Clelland, preacher at Duke University, will be the speaker, and the service will be held at the First Baptist Church a Negro church located on Roberson Street, at 10 o'clock Thanksgiving morning.

In addition to offering prayers of thanks, the services plan cooperation with world-wide "Share the Surplus" program. The program is to finance shipping some 150 tons of surplus foodstuffs abroad. Congress authorized donation of the food, but did not allocate distribution costs, which are estimated at about $7,500,000 during the three year program. An offering will be received at the local service to aid the effort.

"Two out of three persons in the world are hungry almost all of the time," explained Rev. Joel M. Savell. He further pointed out that as we celebrate our Thanksgiving Day this year, Americans will on the average have as much as 14 times as much food to eat as will persons in underpriviledged countries. Savell is director of the Wesley Foundation here.

"The church service will emphasize not only Thanksgiving and understanding among us at home, but also sharing our abundance with those who are in need," he added.

AFROTC Visits Pope

Under the supervision of Major J. O. Young and Captain Joseph Gerrity, six of the Air ROTC coed sponsors, 11 cadet staff officers and 20 Air Science cadets toured Pope Air Force Base last Friday.

The sponsors who attended were Misses Judy Jackson, Carolyn Cole, Kathy Widman, Callie Mitchell, Rita Schaffers and Jackie Van Hook. The sponsors, the official hostesses of the UNC corps of cadets, are responsible for planning all social functions and are on hand to review the corps at formal parades and ceremonies. Captain Gerrity is the advisor to the sponsors.

Colonel Barrow, wing base executive officer, officially welcomed the UNC group to the base and outlined the activities of the day.

During the morning tour of the base the group was taken through the Base Weather Station, the Personal Equipment Section, the Flight Planning Room, the Dispatch Section and the Parachute Packing Sheds. Full explanation and demonstration of the operations of each unit were given by the respective officers in charge.

After a luncheon at the base officers' club, the group was taken to the Marshalling Area for paratroopers. The highlight of the day was a review of "Operation Normandy." One-hundred twenty special troops with equipment and heavy equipment including a jeep and radio relay station were dropped by parachute from C-119s, better known as "Flying Boxcars."

Cadet staff officers on the tour included Col. John Barab, wing commander; Lt. Cols. Stephen Opitz and Pete Daniels; Majors Kenneth Pruitt, Herbert Neilson, Charles Stevenson and Gene Gunter; Captains Claude Johns and Frank Berry and First Lt. Richard Hoyle.

The 464 Troop Carrier wing at Pope Air Force Base is under the Tactical Air Command and Eighteenth Air Force. The wing has the responsibility of coordinating the efforts of the USAF and the U. S. Army in making their airborne fighting arm one of the best. In addition to supporting Airborne activities, the Wing performs airlifts of personnel and equipment throughout the United States and outside the country when required. There are approximtaely 2,000 officers and enlisted men at Pope.

—Architect Le Clair Is For Brick Walks—

as research for the soil conservation program. This latter job brought him to Orange County 20 years ago, and five years later he was hired by the University.

In his work on the campus, Le Clair tries to plant shrubs and trees which will add to the beauty of the buildings all year round, and not only at certain seasons. The most noticeable example of this policy is the inclusion of as many evergreens as possible in the almost 200 shade trees planted annually.

Another aim of the "engineer" is to get as much variety as possible in campus planting. He is careful to point out that the whole campus, not to mention the Arboretum, is far too small to contain every plant which will grow in this climate. But he does claim that the Carolina campus is landscaped with more different plants than can be found at any other school in the East. He himself has collected about 120 varieties of holly, and many of these are now growing on the grounds. Of course, not all of this variety is fully appreciated. "There are certain plants on the campus that are a puzzle to many people," he laughed. These, he hopes, will eventually be given small labels.

One would think that, after over 50 years of this work, a man would be tired of it all. But not Le Clair. He and his wife live on a farm, and what do they do in their spare time? Work in their garden. He returns from a three-day trip, and all they talk about are the bulbs he has bought, and the bulbs she has given away. "I bring 'em home, and you dig 'em up," he comments wryly to his wife.

Le Clair still cherishes, also, the almost impossible dream that Carolina students will someday have enough consideration to enforce upon themselves the terrible hardship of walking upon brick walks instead of upon muddy grass. He realizes that the paths which are beaten across the lawns are "shortcuts," but "You just can't build a walk that will take every person exactly where he wants to go, by the quickest possible route."

Duke has won the last four games in the series, which extends back to 1888 when the Durham school was known as Trinity. UNC has won 17 of the games, Duke-Trinity 20, and there have been three ties.

Last year's score was 35-20, Duke leading all the way. Carolina threatened in the last half but the gap was too great to close.

They are paced by a backfield combination headed by Worth Lutz and Jerry Barger, and a big, strong line. Duke substitutes give no relife, either. Second-string pilot Sonny Jurgenson has one of the best arms in the league.

Tickets for the game are still available, although estimates by the Athletic Association late yesterday placed the probable attend-

Science At UNC

The Super Bombs & Death

By CHARLES CHILDS

It came as a surprise to the general public to hear from Winston Churchill a warning that nuclear bomb testing endangers mankind.

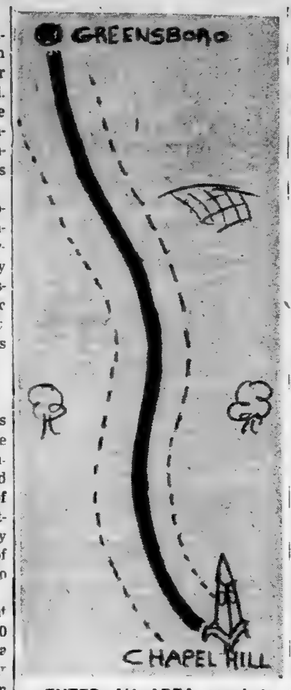
Churchill told the world that he believes the explosion of an "undue number" of hydrogen and atomic bombs "might have serious effects."

The revelation shocked the public, but scientists have been concerned about this problem for several years. During these years they have conducted extensive investigations of the effects of atomic blasts on human beings, and their results show that the consequeces are indeed dire.

HOW MUCH RADIATION BEFORE DEATH

In their investigations scientists have set limits for human exposure to radiation. Naturally these limits depend upon the time and source of the exposure, but all of these are expressed in "roentgens." A "roentgen" is a fancy unit for measuring the amount of radiation, like "gallon" is used to measure a liquid.

In order to understand what "roentgens" mean, consider 10 toothpicks lying on the edge of a table, with about a third of their lengths sticking over the edge. On each end are placed four small identical pieces of paper. It might be that five of the toothpicks will fall. Then, to the remaining five are added four more pieces of paper, and all of the toothpicks have fallen.



Now, let us replace the toothpicks by people and the paper by "roentgens." Scientists have found that if each of 10 people absorb 400 roentgens, five will probably die. If 700 are absorbed then there is little chance for survival.

THE H-BOMB

Last March the United States exploded its first version of the newer type hydrogen bomb; the first of this type had already been set off by the Russians.

Seventy-two miles from this site was a Japanese fishing boat. Three hours after the explosion this boat's crew was subjected to a rain of radioactive particles from the bomb. One of the crew died, the first person known to succum from the super-bomb.

But there were many other people who suffered from this same bomb. Some 200 Marshall Islanders were exposed to the radioactive particles and out of these 39 had loss of hair and burns. Even about the same fate as the Islanders.

ENTER AN AREA equal to this — four miles wide, 60 miles long — one hour after an H-bomb explodes overhead, and 10 minutes' exposure will be enough to kill you. . .

One interesting account of exposure is that of another Japanese fishing boat. This boat was 2,200 miles from the blast, yet the hair of one crewman had four times the safety limit for radiation.

Japan itself received a part of the explosion. In May, Japan had an unusual rain, unusual in that each quart of the rain water gave off about 32,000 radioactive particles each minute. This amount is large, but since it did not last long, a person would have to drink several quarts to become seriously affected.

Even in our own country, particles from this explosion fell in large quantities. This was seen in the thyroid glands of some Florida cattle, the glands giving off about 3,000 particles.

Naturally one may wonder about the blast itself since it had such world-wide effects.

When a super-bomb explodes, it has a fire ball three and a half miles wide. Total destruction occurs within an area seven to 10 miles wide.

In order to get an idea of the areas covered by such a bomb's radiation, imagine a strip of land four miles wide between Chapel Hill and Greensboro. If you entered the area within one hour after the blast, you would receive a lethal dose of radiation within 10 minutes. If you waited three hours and entered the same strip, only now its width is 20 miles, you would receive a lethal dose by remaining two hours within the 1,200 squrae miles.

The increase in danger area is caused by the "fall-out," the materials blown into the air and made radioactive. Fifty percent of the "fall-out" occurs during the three hours following the blast, which explains the Japanese fishing boat incident.

To be concluded tomorrow.

Ex-Red Tells Of UNC Cell

MIAMI, Fla., (AP)—Ralph Long of Durham, N. C., told the House Un-American Activities Committee yesterday he belonged to a Communist cell at the University of North Carolina in which the Red philosophy was a "religion that dominated our lives."

Long testified that he joined the party at the University after being "in doctrinated" by comrades he met while serving in the Army Air Force during the war. He said he quit the party in 1948 after two years as a dues-paying member.

He identified Sam Hirsch, director of the Miami Biltmore Playhouse and former assistant partment of the University of professor in the dramatics de-Miami, as a "comrade" at North Carolina.

Before Long took the stand, Hirsch testified he was not a Communist. He said he attended "study groups" in which communism was discussed because the idea appealed to him at the time as "exciting and dangerous." He said he now "abhors" communism.

One witness summoned today-Jose Joe Carbonell of Miami - invoted the Fifth Amendment, refusing to answer any of the committee's questions on grounds he might incriminate himself.

Never Heard Of A Bass Trumpet—Herman Has

Twentieth Century music on an Century horn. That's what comes out when bass trumpet player Cy Teuff takes a jazz chorus with the Woody Herman band. which comes to UNC for a two-hour concert next Monday.

Touff, who is one of the featured instrumentalists with the "Third Herd," is a trumpet player who switched to valve trombone and then took up the bass trumpet, a monster horn a good two times the size of a regular trumpet. He plays it in the trombone section because the tone is closer to that of a trombone and he takes the band's trombone "rides" on it.

The bass trumpet was used in Bavarian and Austrian military bands in the middle 1800's and was first utilized in classical music by Wagner. It has since been used in works by Stravinsky, Strauss and Schoenberg, but is still basically a little-used instrument.

Touff is a 28-year-old Chicagoan who joined Herman in 1953. He attended the Chicago Musical College, where he studied harmony and composition. Following his discharge from the army he played with several name bands.

On the Herman band stand the bass trumpet causes considerable audience reaction. Everyone wants to know "What is it?" The band is thinking of having a sign printed to hold up behind Touff as he plays. It would read, "This is not a fish horn, it's a bass trumpet"

The New Pattern Of Diplomacy

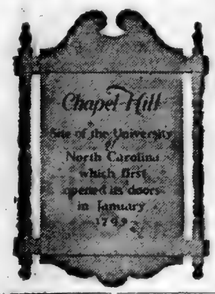
The words in the week's news, and it may become the word of the year or of the century, is coexistence. It seems clear that the government has now begun planning for life in a coexisting world.

Despite the alarm of Senator Knowland whose position would logically call for war against Communist China, the new long-term policy appears to be one of political and economic action rather than military action. One careful reporter, Joseph C Harsch of The Christian Science Monitor, this week went so far as to say that the Korean war phase of postwar history is actually closed and that the world is back in the situation it was in before the outbreak of that war.

The new direction in our policy means that we must develop economic and political weapons along the lines of the Marshall Plan and the Voice of America to a new degree of potency. We must liberalize our trade program in Europe and point technical aid and loans toward Asia. We must, in short, sharpen up the old technique to meet changing situations.

Coexistence, of course, does not imply a end to the Cold War, but simply a turning point in it. No one is suggesting that we should not keep our military guard up. Otherwise, in this time of zig-zag diplomacy, the next Russian zig might catch us behind the ear. Bue there are encouraging signs that coexistence can work, that the Third World War might never come.

Malenkov has acknowledged that another war would destroy both Eastern and Western civilization, In the Soviet Union, there are concessions to political prisoners, an increase in consumers' goods, participation in the work of specialized UN agencies, signs that anti-intellectualism is receding, a relaxing of travel restrictions.



Both Moscow and Washington seem to have recognized the end of the "hot" phase of the Cold War. Both have indicated a preference for reverting to less dangerous instruments for waging the power struggle. One can almost feel the world relax a bit. But (even with the angry disturbance of the mood by the Chinese Communists last week) there has been a sort of whispered suggestions that the world can live without another fighting war. And the whisper came from the President himself.

Coexistence, then, might turn out to be the beginning of an era of deepening security for the world. Once the immediate fear of destruction is removed, the world will be able to face the future more confidently; and it appears we may be taking the first, hesitant steps toward ridding ourselves of that haunting fear.

It is all worth trying, anyway. The inadequacy in the political philosophy of Knowland is one that he has not yet been able to answer: If not coexistence, then what? The answer, Adlai Stevenson has said, and we agree, is no existence. That appears to be the alternative to the success of the ambitious and high-pitched program to which the United States and the world now look for salvation.

Why They're Singing About Mr. Sandman

Louis Kraar

A WAITRESS in a tiny South Carolina eating place was humming it. The car radio vibrated with it as I rode through the Carolinas, Georgia, and Tennessee over the holidays.

It makes one realize all at once what it is that this country shares. And it makes you wonder why.

I'm talking about the popular song they're all singing about a sandman. The catchy tune seems to have most of the coutry whistling and singing about a lonesome lady who wants a lover "with the soul of Pagliacci" and "long, wavy hair like Liberace."

Like a batch of viruses at a house party, the popularity of songs spread until all the waitresses, society matrons, and college population are singing and buying records.

Here in the village the largest record dealer has found the sandman ditty "hard to keep in stock." Over 100 copies have been sold in Chapel Hill, which is supposed to be good for this town.

What is it about a tune that captures the ears and dollars of us all?

First, it's the tune. You hear a tune about a sandman, and you start humming it later. Then, you listen to the words, which are always more sentimental than the talk we use these days. After awhile, the song has you. But it lets you go just as quickly, as soon as the radios start playing another ditty.

It seems to me that we're not very sentimental these days. To express any emotion stronger than those you buy on a fifteen-cent greeting card is considered "corny." So we let our songs say the things we feel and are ashamed to express.

So maybe it's a good thing that college people, waitresses, and high society take two and half minutes to worry about a lonely gal talking to a sandman. next week, they'll be humming about someone else's love affair to another tune. But now it's just the sandman song, and I like it.

Outside the Hill (where every dorm has TV) the darkened living room and the glowing 20-inch screen dominate households. Conversation is limited to station break and commercial time. Friends come in, sit through a few shows, mutter farewells above commercials, and depart. To the visitor (like myself), people seem more like ushers than a host.

Most of television seems to be aimed toward the ten-year-old level. Some shows (and there are few) deserve the attention TV takes. But for the most part, I find my 13-year-old brother cynical about the programs.

Take the one that blared over the set in our living room the other night. A school girl in this TV saga had a crush on a music teacher, and she declared: "I'm seventeen, and I'm a woman. Do you hear me? A woman!"

As the TV actress raised her voice, by little brother commented, "You're a loud-mouth, if you ask me."

Then there was another show in which a smiling adult primed children for cute saygs about there parents. I shuddered thinking over eight million viewers gripped by some ten-year-old saying her Mother Goose.

Still another television show, an affair called 'Winky Dink," allows the youngsters to tape a plaste cover on the screen (available at stores for $1.50 up) and trace unoriginal drawings of such things as Christmas trees, kangaroos, and TV antennas.

Some day after graduation, the Army, and matrimony I hope someone will ask this reporter if he owns one of those 20-inch monsters.

Joe & The Ten Million

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON—If the Senate ever investigates how the so-called "ten million Americans" are mobilizing McCarthy petitions ... which it probably won't—some interesting extracurricular methods would turn up.

In order to see how these signatures against censuring McCarthy are being collected, a representative of this column dropped in on one of the hottest Joe-Must-Stay centers just outside Boston. The atmosphere smacked somewhat of a football rally with undertones of the Nazi-Communist fear technique in the background.

In Newton, Mass., a loudspeaker in the home of Francis Monahan, prominent local lawyer, at 1045 Center Street, blared forth invitations to passers-by to come in and sign up. From listening to the loudspeaker it appeared that the petitions were against Communism rather than for McCarthy.

At near-by Woburn, Mass., 16 stores and places of business near the Woburn town square were listed in an ad in the Woburn Times where citizens were urged to go in and sign up. The places were: Guy's Smoke Shop, Mac's Smoke Shop, North Woburn Package Store, Dean's Lunch, Joe Wells' Gas Station, Jerry Bennett's Gas Station, Bob McGuinness' South End Diner, Charlie Annas' Candylad, Larry Murphy's Drug Store, Joe Kelleher's Taxi Office, Gavin's Market, Doherty's Package Store, Annes's Store, Patrick J. Gill & Sons, Leanos Restaurant and Woburn Daily Times.

McCarthy Headquarters

In Boston, McCarthy headquarters are located at the Bradford Hotel, where four or five ladies of middle age and fervent disposition were handing out McCarthy literature, chiefly copies of a Chicago Tribune story lauding McCarthy written by Willard Edwards, his most devoted journalistic booster. The reprints usually sell for $1 for six or $25 per thousand, but the citizens for McCarthy were handing them out lavishly.

They were also handing out petitions to anyone who would help circulate them.

"How are these signatures authenticated?" the ladies were asked. "Don't they have to be notarized?"

"No," was the reply. 'We do that. You just send them in. We do the rest."

Down at the bottom of the petition, in extremely small print, much smaller than anything else, were these words: "Important! be sure that all signatures and addresses are bona fide."

"What happens if we sign twice?" McCarthy committee members were asked. "There's nothing to prevent it?"

This question was met with a blank stare and a shrug. "I don't know," was the final answer. "You're not supposed to."

Citizens Against McCarthy

Down the hall from McCarthy's headquarters on the fifth floor of the Bradford Hotel is the studio of Station WVDA where Sherman Feller, disc jockey, holds forth over the airways. Mr. Feller is a gentleman with a sense of humor plus more courage than may be good for him in an atmosphere charged with pro-McCarthy tension. When Mr. Feller saw a "Citizens For McCarthy" sign on a door near his studio, he promptly put a sign over his own door which read:

"Citizens Against McCarthy."

A few minutes later, the sign was torn down. So Feller took to the airways to express his views on McCarthy. A barrage of mail followed, most of it violent and unprintable.

"My phone calls have gone up 150 per cent since I got in on this McCarthy kick," he says. "The people who are against him don't bother to call me as much as the people who are for him. But when they do, they're at least civil. The others just call up and cuss me out.

"I took some of my mail in to McCarthy's headquarters to show the ladies how vicious their friends could be," continued Feller. "The ladies at Joe's headquarters had seemed rather nice and I thought they ought to know about the mail. But when I got in there, they swarmed around me as if I were a monster. I just had to leave. I was scared."

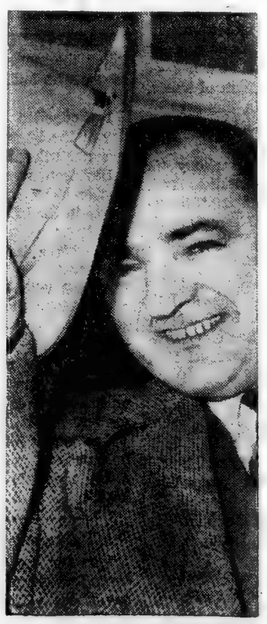
The ladies at McCarthy's headquarters told a somewhat different story.

"That Sherman Feller's a terrible man," they said. "He came in here the other day and accosted some of the ladies. We think we have a right to our own opinions, and he shouldn't attack us for them. He's obviously just a Communist sympathizer."

By the next day, Robert J. Sullivan, Professor of Biology at Merrimac College, one of Joe's most ardent rooters, was telling people that Feller had come into McCarthy headquarters and tried to beat some of the women up.

Such is sentiment in Pro-McCarthy areas in and around Boston, an atmosphere in which anyone who is against McCarthy is a Communist and in which an associated Press reporter, when informed that 15-year-olds were signing McCarthy petitions, remarked:

"I'd like to write that story, but if we did, people would start saying we were communistic."



Note—This attitude is not true of the AP in other areas, however. In Milwaukee the AP dug up a story that the man who allegedly hurt McCarthy's elbow couldn't be located and that the manner of the accident remained a mystery.

McCarthy's Ride

Joe McCarthy was so sick that the Senate suspended for 10 days but he was not too sick to slip out of Bethesda Naval Hospital on Nov. 25 to take a ride down Connecticut Avenue and spend the evening with friends.

McCarthy was spotted at 6:50 P.M. in a big black Cadillac, with Wilsconsin congressional license plates, between Albemarle and Ellicott streets on Connecticut Avenue, driving toward Washington. His wife, Jean, was at the wheel, and an unidentified man, possibly a bodyguard for McCarthy never moves without one—was in the back seat.

A news inquiry at the Naval Hospital that night brought no admission that McCarthy had been permitted to leave. But next day Capt. G. B. Tayloe admitted that the Senator had been allowed to leave for a trip downtown. He said he did not know why the senator wanted to leave, that this was not the concern of the Hospital. All it was interested in was whether McCarthy was in Physical condition to leave, and that he was.

Battling Nell & Her Big Fat Folder On Local Reds

Ed Yoder

Ovid, the Latin poet and mythologist, tells a story about a person who couldn't keep trivial information to himself.

The story is about King Midas' barber. The barber, only man in the court who could look under the king's hat, discovered one day the asses' ears that Apolo had given Midas (the man of the Golden Touch) for his stupidity. Midas, then and there, swore his barber to secrecy. But the barber was so tortured by his information that he ran one day to the fields, dug a hole, and whispered down it, "King Midas has asses' ears."

He had relieved himself of the onerous knowledge that his King had strange ears. But then spring came. Up sprouted some weeds. And whenever the wind blew through the weeds, they whispeed, "King Midas has asses' ears."

Somehow, Miss Nell Battle Lewis, who writes a glorified "reaction piece" for the Raleigh News and Observer, reminds me of King Midas' barber. She writes in this week's column that she possesses a "fat folder labeled Communism at Chapel Hill."

Once again, following a well drawn pattern, she has opened that folder to make a few comments on the Scales arrest. The folder seems to be burgeon with trivial information that she feels she can't keep out of the newspapers.

The only difference between her wise saws on Communism, "muddle-brained" liberalism, and "traitorous" activities at Chapel Hill and Midas' barber's whisperings about his King's ears is that Miss Lewis chooses her column rather than holes in the ground for exposing them.

Miss Lewis indicates that she has a good bit of important material on "Communism in Chapel Hill"; it has become an obsession with her. If you are a gambling man and want good odds, bet that Nell Battle Lewis will write on this subject in her next column. By and large you'll have made a good bet.

"In my fat folder labeled 'Communism at Chapel Hill'," writes Miss Lewis, "I have, of course, numerous articles about Scales and several of the mimeographed Communist leaflets which he circulated among the students at the University as director of the Communist Party's 'student section' there."

She goes on to quote from a notation on one of the mimeographed leaflets written by a student in Business Administration here. The writer moans to Miss Lewis that "the beloved University . . . indeed is as red as Santa's drawers."

I, for one, dislike the intimations Miss Lewis makes when she mentions her "fat folder." I get the impression that, as she waves the folder, she uses the technique popularized by Senator McCarthy when, brandishing some trivial periodical or leaflet, he begins, "I have in my hand . . ."

If she wants to bring in her "fat folder," I, for one, wish that she would be more specific. To judge by what she says, she must have some pretty condemning information in the "fat folder." She writes, later in the column, that "Scales and his Redlings had been operating on The Hill with the full knowledge and consent of the municipal and University authorities." Like so many of those who have declared all-out war against "Communism at Chapel Hill," she fails to differentiate between present time and past time. How do I know when redness exists or existed at Chapel Hill? Does she mean to imply that the University is in the year 1954, as "red as Santa's drawers?"

I have been a student at Chapel Hill for two and a half years. As far as I can determine, the political hue of the campus would clash violently with the redness of Santa's drawers. I have never met a single Communist here. Furthermore, I find the thinking on this campus, as a whole, moderate and middle-of-the-road-ish. We have few enough outspoken liberals—let alone ardent radicals, Fabian socialists, Mensheviks, or Communists.

Articles like Miss Lewis's, generalized, violating all of the basic rhetorical rules against sweeping statement and illogic, making no distinction between present and past conditions, can work irreparable harm against the name of the University. The Communist Party has only recently been outlawed. If she has clear-cut information about existing evils at Chapel Hill that should come to the attention of the authorities, the authorities would welcome it, I suppose. At any rate, let her bring her facts (if she has any) into the court of reason where they may be evaluated.

I suppose I fall among the ranks of the "blind and burning" and "muddle headed" (to use Miss Lewis's words) liberals, who, she writes, "confuse treason with freedom of thought."

—The Reporter

Following the latter line of thought, I would like to remind Miss Lewis that thought has nothing to do with treason. Treason depends, Constitutionally, upon action—levying war against the United States; giving aid and comfort to her enemies. But what a man thinks, what political sympathies he happens to hold, what sentiments he has toward current political or economic affairs, should be clearly distinguished from what he does, what action he takes.

I hope that Miss Lewis will, in the future, take time to thing out the implications of the harum-scarum writing on "Communism at Chapel Hill" that she incorporates into her column almost weekly. Otherwise, her words will spring back on her as the weeds sprang up on King Midas's barber and will continue to haunt her.

'Jaundiced Journalism' In DTH

Editor:

As students here for the past 5 to 7 years we have acquired some resistance to the usual jaundiced journalism of The Daily Tar Heel, but even so, we were not prepared for your latest betise.

First, you endorse a free-cheat bill, and you now have the naivete to say, with minimal qualification on your part, "You're wrong!" to a former chairman of the Dept. of Anatomy, when he has made a statement pertaining to a field in which he is an authority.

In your first editorial on this subject there was the strong implication, if not the statement, that Dr. George is singular among recognized scientists in the stand he takes. Your statement, of course, is founded on a shallow knowledge of the subject upon which you write. We suggest, therefore, that you begin closing this awful gap in your fund of knowledge by reading some work such as Free and Unequal (1953) by Roger J. Williams, a professor of biochemistry and an outstanding scientist at the University of Texas.

Perhaps the strongest argument against Dr. George's views is the fact that the white race periodically produces such individuals as yourself with more spare ink than foresight. We can think of one still better way to refute his opinion on the evils of miscegnation. That would be for the Student Legislature to discontinue the publication of The Daily Tar Heel and divert those funds to finance a safari to to darkest Africa, thereby allowing you to find evidence of anything similar to either a Parthenon, a Mona Lisa, a William Shakespeare, a Ludwig van Beethoven, an Isaac Newton, or an Albert Einstein. Albert Switzer (sic) will not count; he's an import.

You would be automatic leader of the safari, and if you anticipate any difficulty in the quest take along a few psychologists or anthropologists. They are not as confined by the mandates of science as are the embryologists, and therefore are usually able to find or prove whatever they propose.

Bob Holmes III
Neill Lee
Victor G. Herring III

(Miscegnation may or may not be an evil. Writers Holmes, Lee and Herring, as medical students, should know that little in this area has been scientifically proved one way or another. The fact which the editorial stated, and which we now re-state, is that Dr. George is practically alone among scientists who believe as he does, Mr. Wiliams of Texas notwithstanding. No reputable psychologist or anthropologist that we know of agrees with him. Dr. George, a fine scientist, is being unscientific in the extreme when he suggests that one race is superior to another.

(As for that safari, we'd like to take Holmes, Lee and Herring along—to show them the advanced and elaborate governments in Buganda and Liberia and the evidence of large, cultured city-states that thrived on the African West Coast before the arrival of white men.

(Or, if Holmes, Lee and Herring want to bandy great names about, we'll ask them to remember the names of Booker T. Washington, singer Anderson, scientist Carver, Nobel Prize winner Bunche, who have risen to preeminent positions in their fields, despite every conceivable kind of barrier in their paths.—Editor.)

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

Bob Dillard, the talented member of the DTH sports staff, comments on the UNC-Duke fracas last Saturday:

The Dookers did it again. For the fifth year in succession, the Tar Heels went down to defeat before the Devils of Duke .

Accompanied by their horned friend in skimpy blue underwear, the Duke eleven rolled onto the field at two o'clock, proceded to roll up and down the turf for sixty minutes of playing time, and then rolled back to the field house, retainers of the Victory Bell and eminent candidates for the Orange Bowl bid.

Carolina Blue jerseys once again prevailed in Kenan Stadium, but the traditional uniform of the Carolina eleven brought no fortune to the wearers. Probably the most predominent color on the field was the twinkling black socks of the Duke backfield. Certainly it was the only color viewed with any clarity, as usually the wearers of those form-fitting hose were gamboling down the field, pursued by a listless Tar Heel team.

It was a miserable day for football. The skies were overcast, and rain, mixed with a little sleet, seemed to dampen the spirits of the Tar Heel rooters. A succession of cheerleaders tried their hand at awakening the vocal cords of the Tar Heel supporters, but probably the only one who met with any success was the fabulous "Nose" Jones, who made a brief appearance on the rostrum. Inspired by the excellents performance of "Nose", a slightly inebriated Carolina Gentleman attempted to duplicate his feat, and although his vocabulary and spelling left a lot to be desired, he managed to hiccough his way through a slow "C-A-R-O-L-I-N-A."

The Carolina Gentleman, dressed in his top hat and tails, was the object of a lively fox hunt at the half. The Duke Devil and his partner cornered the gentleman inside the twenty yard line, and brought him down with a well executed tackle on the three, where he was relieved of his hat.

The halftime activity consisted mostly of the Carolina Band, which put on perhaps their best show of the year. Accompanied by two new majorettes, who drew admiring glances and comments from the male population of the stadium, the band successfully played its way through a program built on the theme of the four seasons of the year. The NROTC Drill Team appeared on the field at the closing end of the calm before the storm, as some referred to the halftime, and although it put on its usual fine performance, it was wasted on the listless Carolina fans.

The Duke attack, directed by Jerry Barger, who the Carolina team called "the finest quarterback we've faced all year", proved to be just too much for the Tar Heels. Coupled with some lucky pass interceptions, some driving thrusts by fullback Bryant Aldridge, and some screen passes which left the receiver with three or more blockers, in front of him, the Tar Heels were completely befuddled. It was a poor finale for the college careers of the thirteen Tar Heel seniors. All in all, the Tar Heels just didn't have it, and the Dookers did.

Bowl-Bound Buckeyes Are National Champs

By HUGH FULLERTON JR.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29 (AP) - Rose Bowl-bound Ohio State today was named as the 1954 national collegiate football champion and winner of the O'Donnell Memorial Trophy.

In the final Associated Press ranking poll of the season, the nation's sports writers and broadcasters, casting a record-breaking ballot, named Ohio's Buckeye's by a slim margin over UCLA's Bruins.

These two unbeaten teams had made it a race all throught the closing weeks of the season, with Ohio State slipping ahead two weeks ago and holding on to the finish.

Oklahoma, the only other major team to finish the season unbeaten and untied, finished a strong third, the position it had held since mid-season.

Ohio State, as conference champion, will play Southern California, runnerup in the Pacific Coast Conference, in the Rose Bowl New cond straight Pacific Coast title, Lear's Day. UCLA, winning its seis ineligible to return to the Rose Bowl. Southern California placed 17th in the final ranking after losing its last two games to UCLA and Notre Dame.

Oklahoma, perinnial Big Seven champion, also is ineligible for a bowl game, having played in the Orange Bowl last New Year's Day.

Behind the unbeaten big three in the final ranking came Notre Dame Navy, Mississippi, Army, Maryland, Wisconsin and Arkansas, in order, to complete the first 10.

Navy, heading for the Sugar Bowl after a stirring 27-20 triumph over Army last week, moved up from sixth place to fifth and Army dropped from fifth to seventh. Mississippi, the other Sugar Bowl team, advanced a notch to sixth place as it ended its regular season with a 14-0 victory over Mississippi State.

Maryland climbed from 10th place to eighth, shoving Wisconsin out by a 16-point margin and Arkansas, took over 10th place, displacing beaten Baylor.

Guglielmi Gets TD Club Award

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29 (AP) — Ralph Guglielmi Notre Dame's star quarterback, today was voted the Washington Touchdown Club's Walter Camp Memorial Award, honoring him as the outstanding college football back of the year.

Guglielmi will receive his award at the club's annual banquet Jan. 8. UCLA's Red Sanders already has been selected Coach of the Year.

Touchdown Club officals said Guglielmi was chosen "on the basis of his all-around ability, offensive and defensive, and his inspirational leadership that has prompted many to rate hm with the school's all-time football greats."

His chief opposition for the award, the officials said, came from Dick Moegle of Rice, Alan Ameche of Wisconsin and Howard Cassady of Ohio State.

Carolina Lasses Top Duke In Hockey, 2-0

The UNC Women's hockey club, after tying a strong Meredith College team and losing to powerful WC, came back last Monday afternoon to blast arch-rival Duke, 2-0. It was the best performance of the year for the Carolina coeds, as left wing Chappie Chapman and left inner Joan Haley broke through the Duke defense to score one goal each.

Tomorrow the coeds will play Guilford College in the last game of the season. The tilt will begin at 4:00 p.m. at Kenan Stadium. The public is invited to attend.

Lifson, Vayda, Likins Rosenbluth. Starters

BY BERNIE WEISS

Basketball Coach Frank McGuire has named Al Lifson, Jerry Vayda, Len Rosenbluth and Paul Likens as definite starters for tomorrow night's opener against the McCrary Eagles in Asheboro.

McGuire said yesterday he was not sure about his fifth man, but would choose him tonight during practice. Five men are battling for the starting berth.

McGuire is uncertain about his team's chances against the Eagles, who sport one of the best independent amateur teams in the State. Listed on the McCrary roster is Sam Ranzino, who made a name for himself at N. C. State a few years back, Bob Shoaf, former star for Guilford College, and Jim Duncan, a six-foot, 11-inch product of Duke.

The game won't count in the official record books, "But it is a tough opener away from home," McGuire said.

Last night the Tar Heel varsity got back into the practice swing after the holiday lay-over by scrimmaging the frosh.

The four starters looked especially good, and the quintet fighting for the fifth spot showed up well also. The latter group is composed of Tony Radovich, Bob Young, Frank Goodwin, Gerry McCabe and Hilliard Greene.

Vayda and Lifson are expected to spark the team tomorrow night. Last year as a sophomore Vayda scored an average of 17 points per game. Lifson had a 14.6 average.

Gametime is 8 o'clock.

Self-Confessed Red Names His Comrades

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—Ralph Long of Durham, N. C., self-confessed former red, told the House Un-American Activities Committee yesterday the Communist Party operated openly at the University of North Carolina when he was a member in 1946-48 and that the school never did anything about it.

In two hours of testimony yesterday morning, Long named five faculty members and and a number of students who he said attended communist cell meetings with him and was apparently just getting started on his list when the hearing was recessed for lunch.

. . . says the Party flourished here

Long said the purpose of the student communist clubs at Chapel Hill was to "build up the Party among the young intelligentsia of North Carolina," print and circulate literature and raise money to advance the Red cause.

Julius Scales, recently arrested by the FBI on charges of conspiracy against the government, admitted openly in 1947 that he was head of the Chapel Hill party, Long said, and communist activities there were publicly known.

In answer to questions by committee members, he said that to his knowledge the school never made any investigation.

Warrant Served

Chapel Hill police said Monday that the warrant charging James Boyd with violating a state statute which prohibits low flying over towns and public gatherings has been served to the violator.

Boyd allegedly buzzed the campus several weeks ago dropping leaflets which publicized the "beat Wake Forest" pep rally. The rally was sponsored by the University Club, according to the leaflets.

The warrant was returned today after having been served in Durham by police there.

Boyd faces misdemeanor charges. His trial has been set for Dec. 7, according to the Clerk of Court's office.

76 Out Of 79 Allegedly Favor George's Petition

By DICK CREED

Seventy-six out of 79 people contacted "the other day" signed Dr. W. C. George's pro-segregation petition to Governor Hodges, according to a statement by Dr. George.

Dr. George said yesterday that he and W. P. Jordan, a real estate agent in Orange County and supporter of the petition, "made a trip through the county the other day to place copies of the petition and to get signatures ourselves."

Continued Dr. George, "We contacted 79 people, and 76 of them signed."

The three people who didn't sign were from out of state, he said.

Dr. George said that "we have not yet attempted to contact the colored people" but that "some have called to sign" the petition.

He said that his soliciting of signatures for the petition would be confined to Orange County.

He added, however, that he has received requests from other parts of the state for copies of the petition, and that he is mailing them.

"I haven't the time or the facility to organize the state," Dr. George said. He said he did not know to what extent the pro-segregation campaign was being organized in other counties.

He sad he had received no report on the number of signatures which have ben affixed to the copies of the petition so far.

TWO WEEKS OLD

Dr. George originated the petition on Nov. 18. It calls for continued segregation in the public schools on the basis of "biological and social" differences between the white and Negro races.

It is addressed to the Governor and the members of the State Senate and House of Representatives.

It will be presented to them when the Legislature meets next month, according to Dr. George.

UP Names Yarboro'h New Head

By CHARLES JOHNSON

Charles Yarborough was elected chairman of the University Party last night.

Yarborough, a senior from Louisburg, is a member of the varsity track squad, president of the senior class and secretary of the Monogram Club. He was president of his sophomore class and is also a member of Phi Eta Sigma, freshman honorary scholastic fraternity.

After the election, the new chairman said "The University Party is the most representative group on this campus. Its members and candidates have a sincere interest in working, not for any clique or selfish faction, but for all of the students. We think that our standard of "conservative progressiveness" is the best way of achieving responsible and useful student overnment.

"It is the firm conviction of the members of this party that Carolina comes first, then politics. Political action is necessary in any form of government, but there is always the ever-present danger of having too much government and too much politics.

"As party chairman. I shall do my best to keep politics at a respectable level," Yarborough said.

"I am confident that this group is one of the most resourceful and most capable organizations in the University. Our candidates are not interested in themselves alone, but are interested in doing a good job for the whole student body.

"If the spirit that was shown in the last elections prevails this spring, the University Party will win an even greater victory next April."

The other officers elected were: Bill Sabiston, vice chairman; Jane Cocke, secretary; John Raper, treasurer, and Charles Ackermann, publicity chairman.

Trustees Approve NCS Plan For Peru Mission

RALEIGH (AP) — The executive committee of the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina Monday approved a plan of operation for a State College agricultural technical mission to Peru.

The mission will assist the Peruvian government in developing an agricultural research program designed to create a higher level of productivity in that country.

UNC Astronomers Will Take 'Tour' Tomorrow

Dr. Morris S. Davis, professor of astronomy here, will present a "Guided Tour of California Observatories" at tomorrow night's meeting of the Chapel Hill Astronomy Club.

The tour will consist of pictures which Dr. Davis took of some of the California observatories that he visited last summer while in California attending the conference of teachers in astronomy, plus information on points of interest covered at the conference.

Other observatories located in California are the Lick Observatory at Mount Hamilton and the Mount Wilson Observatory, the home of the 100-inch Hooker Reflector.

Dr. Davis will show pictures of these observatories, and speak on the conference of astronomy teachers at which he heard lectures by Bart J. Bok, professor of astronomy at Harvard, on Radio Astronomy and the Structure of the Galaxy

Y Sponsoring Brando

The YMCA is sponsoring an advance ticket sale for the Chapel Hill premier showing of Marlon Brando's latest thriller, "The Wild One."

The tickets will be on sale tonight through Monday night in all dorms, sorority and fraternity houses, Lenoir Hall and the Y lobby.

Proceeds from the ducats will be used to defer expenses of a delegation to the National Assembly Dec. 27-Jan. 2, in Lawrence, Kan.

Science At UNC

While Storm Clouds Gather: Will The Bomb Win?

By CHARLES CHILDS

The A-bomb tests in New Mexico had far-reaching effects in the United States. In Illinois they caused the exposure of a large quantity of photographic film because radioactive particles had entered the film's ingredients. Fifteen miles from the site some cattle lost patches of hair and suffered blister-like lesions. Later, after the atomic artillery testing, radioactive snow fell in Washington, D. C.

Five years after the atomic bombing blast of Japan, 45 cases of cataracts were found among persons near the blasts. These also appeared among persons who were facing the explosions 30 miles away.

There are reports that the number of still and deformed births among the Japanese survivors has been considerable.

EFFECTS ON INHERITANCE

As has been discussed, a person has to be exposed to a large amount of radiation within a short time to be visibly effected. He might recover with no visibly changes, including complete regrowth of hair.

Other persons near the blast area will consider themselves lucky if they were exposed with no ill effects. However, it is likely that these "lucky people" have suffered severe changes in their genes, and these changes are more important than a small burn.

The damage to genes is important because the genes determine the inheritance of children. An example of this damage can be found among certain births by the survivors of the first atomic bombs.

Of course these people were subjected to intense but short periods of radiation, but it is another consideration which prompted Prime Minister Winston Churchill's statement about the dangers of even testing these weapons.

This consideration is that the strength or time of exposure is of little concern when the genes are involved, because the effects on the genes continually build-up and do not repair themselves.

Speaking about this danger, Dr. D. G. Catcheside of Cambridge warned:

"It must be emphasized that absorption of radiation is always connected with damage, no matter how small the dose, and that many radiation effects are cumulative."

We knew that in an H-bomb war there could be few survivors. However, we fail to realize that even the testing of such nuclear weapons is also highly dangerous.

Catcheside continued to explain that it had been known for some time that chronic irradiation would induce tumors. He added that it had not been previously realized that with small daily doses a variety of tumors may be induced at an earlier age.

MAY BE 'DISASTROUS'

In speaking of these small daily doses, he told that with a dose of 0.5 roentgen per week and continued over a large number of generations there would be defects produced in the genes. These defects would reduce the fitness of many apparently normal individuals. Catcheside considers this to be the more important things "from the point of view of the species as a whole. The total effect may well be very serious or even disastrous."

One of the greatest men in human genetics today reflects the same warnings. Dr. H. J. Muller tells us that "the genetic effects are essentially irreparable . . . . and cumulative over an unlimited period."

Dr. Muller has worked out what can be the effects on a population of 100,000 people. If each generation of this group were exposed to 20 roentgens, then in each generation one out of every 20 persons would be "genetically eliminated."

He warns that "every increment in the genetic lead (of radiation) must be regarded as in itself objectionable and is to be avoided if possible, even if it does not threaten to wipe out mankind as a whole, and even if it is distributed in such a way that it cannot be recognized as such."

THE ATOM BOMB — 1945
. . . what will its sisters do?

As to Catcheside's rate of 300 roentgens, Muller had this to say:

"It would take only some 100 to 300 roentgens applied to all human population every generation to result . . . . in genetic death and complete frustrated lives for all but a minute fraction of the population in every generation."

The question arises, "but will a few H-bomb tests really endanger us?" Well, the scientists believe that they will, so let us look at a report made in 1952 for the Atomic Energy Commission:

"In order to constitute a world wide hazard, something like a million nominal atomic bombs would have to be detonated, roughly one to each 200 square miles."

Notice that the report referred to nominal atomic bombs; now, consider that the super-bomb, which is 750 times stronger. It is simple to see that 1,400 of these super-bombs would do a thorough job of creating a worldwide hazard.

We may assume of course that 1,400 super-bombs would not be exploded in case of war. However Churchill said the atmosphere would remain radioactive for 5,000 years from such explosions and during this time there would be several generations exposed to radiation.

ARE WE VULNERABLE

There are people who favor continuation of H-bomb tests, but look at the facts about war:

In case of a surprise attack, The Bulletin of Atomic Scientists pointed out that it would take only 150 super-bombs to "neutralize" our country. Assuming our air defense to be 90 percent efficient, which is a considerable overestimation, then it would take only 1,500 planes, each with one bomb, to do the job.

If the bombs had been set to explode at a certain altitude, then even the hit planes' bombs would explode before the planes crashed.

Or another way of causing panic could be an under-water explosion off the West Coast. This would shroud areas such as San Francisco in a lethal fog. The prevailing west-to-east winds would do the rest.

There is even a newer weapon, called the "cobalt bomb," reportedly scheduled for test by the Russians in 1955. The radiation from such a bomb can make the radiation from a super-bomb look like a candle.

IS THERE ANY HOPE?

We already see both sides of the cold war claiming that they will use nuclear weapons in a war.

In London last month Field Marshall Montgomery, deputy supreme Allied commander at SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters of Allied Powers In Europe) told the Royal United Services Institute:

"I want to make it absolutely clear that we at SHAPE are basing all our operational planning on using atomic and thermoneculear weapons in our defense."

In Moscow, Izvestia reported that weapons of mass destruction will be used against the United States and its allies in the even of World War III "unless these are prohibited by an international act, or the states which possess such weapons renounce their use."

Considering the effects of nuclear weapons on present and future mankind, there is a critical need for the nations to come together and outlaw the use of these weapons. Only in doing this and seeing that such an agreement is enforced can there be any hope for the survival of man.

It's Good Dr. Fermi Got Here When He Did

Dr. Enrice Fermi, who died Sunday, learned how to slow down neutrons and won the Nobel Prize. He was in charge of the group which, at the University of Chicago, brought into being a self-sustaining atomic chain reaction—the first in history. He was associate director at Los Alamos, winner of the Congressional Medal for Merit, one of the two or three world leaders in atomic physics.

Dr. Fermi came here from Italy in 1938. If he tried it today, he would likely be refused admission under the terms of the McCarran Act. Or, if he did get into the United States, he might never be moved to pursue his scientific interest because of the strangling effect of the Eisenhower security system. How many Fermis, one is moved to wonder, knocked at the American door without success this year? How many failed to knock because of the growing climate of fear, the decreasing guarantees of free thought and inquiry within our boundaries?

The White Knight Of The Video Wars

The Daily Tar Heel commented recently on the news that television of a higher pitch aroused cultural interest from undreamed-of sources in London, England.

Marya Mannes tells in the new Reporter of the enthusiasm that has greeted an educational television program, "Princeton, '54." "Princeton, '54" has moved from local time in the New York area to network presentation this year. In the Princeton program cited by "Channels," Dr. Dudley Johnson, a Princeton English professor, discussed books by Orwell, Wells, Huxley, and Morris dealing with "the excursion of men's minds into the future." A dramatic touch was lent by four actors who took the roles of the philosophical protagonists in the four books.

Another program of excellent quality singled out by the column is CBS's "Now and Then." Dr. Frank C. Baxter, a professor at the University of Southern California, who recently ended a "Now and Then" series of lectures on Shakespeare, "drew the greatest and most favorable reaction to any local show in the station's history."

The experiences elsewhere, we think, tend to support our idea that high-quality educational television can meet and conquer trash and clap-trap in the video wars. We can afford to be especially conscious of that on this campus with the announcement that WUNC-TV will, in early January, flash its programs to screens in this southern region. It will be tragic if our campus project, setting a precedent in this part of the country and in its phase of academies, fails in its mission—to educate.

Georgia Plan Won't Work, Students Say

Louis Kraar

"IF THEY do away with segregation in the schools here, my kids will go to a private school."

That's what a parent told me last week in Georgia, a state which has just given its legislature the power to abolish public schools.

This so-called "private school" amendment is one Southern state's way of fighting the Supreme Court's segregation ruling. Georgia politicians say that this plan is legal because it was submitted to the people of the state as a constitutional amendment.

But on the campuses of the University of Georgia in Athens and Georgia Tech in Atlanta—two colleges hardly noted for any rash of liberalism—one gets an entirely different story.

I rode down through Georgia past Athens to Atlanta last week, and the segregation story from the colleges is far from the tale that the Georgia politicians tell.

In Athens the students conducted a poll on the "private school" plan, and an overwhelming majority of the student voters were against it.

The reasons for the Georgia undergraduates going against their elders on the school plan are several. The students there will point them out to you.

First of all, they say, "the amendment would not guarantee segregation." Abolishment of the public school system would cut off about 15 million dollars in federal funds, which Georgia now gets. And the students point to another loophole—that no plan has ever been offered for the establishment and operation of these "private schools." They were just provided for.

The Georgia campus paper apparently summed the question up when it said the real issue was: "Do we want to endanger their future?"

But Georgians voted for the plan.

"WE'VE BEEN shafted," declared the student paper at Georgia Tech, after the passage of the amendment.

"There is no method for eternally circumventing a Supreme Court decision," the Engineers said. But their elders had other ideas.

Still the students pointed to the facts—that Georgia Tech would probably lose its national credit rating and that political appointees, not educators, would run the schools.

Perhaps, when the Georgia legislature meets, the issue will be fought out there. The students have pretty good company in their fight—all the educators of their state.

MANY HAVE said that the problem of segregation should be left to the students. I agree, particularly since their actions in this matter have been so successful thus far.

At the State Student Legislature in Raleigh recently, Carolina students saw to it that Negro students were welcome to a reception.

The students of both races congregated in the Raleigh Room of the Sir Walter Hotel after one of their sessions in the Capitol. These weren't collegiate idealists trying to show off their "liberalism." These were students who, after working together all weekend, found they could relax together too.

Aside from the drunken objections of several "gentlemen" attending another convention at the hotel, the reception went well. Students ran the whole show, and it worked.

'For Heavens Sake, Use More Restraint Than I Did'

Not Too Avant-Garde, Not Too Slick: It's The New Quarterly

YOU Said It

Ed Yoder

The presses of the Carolina Quarterly traditionally grind slowly, but this time they have ground out an exceedingly fine product. The Quarterly has undergone a drastic metamorphosis since yesteryear and now, in the words of Jim Dunn, its able editor, is "intended not for one intellectual level within the student body, but for as much of the student body as is possible without jeopardizing the interests of the magazine itself."

The new fall Quarterly, is the process of distribution today, is a magazine of great balance and readability. It has achieved a professional quality that steers between the Scylla of pseudo-ultra-supra-avant-gardism and the Charybdis of the "slick magazines."

This reviewer doubts that any cries will arise for the Quarterly's scalp this time; and there will be little reason to beg for a bullet in his head. Instead, the new war-cry, if it has to come, will be, "Shoot if you must the old black Tarnation, but spare the Quarterly!"

Down to the last detail, the new fall Quarterly represents an improvement and re-orientation in purpose. Someone has efen put the quiatus on the poetry editor; instead of patronizing the slobbering and unintelligible muse of last year, he has toned down his esthetic theory and allowed some readable poetry to be published.

The laurels for excellence this time must go to Raymond Lowery, Wyat Helsabeck, and Vin Cassidy for original short-story work; to N. C. Calder for a good lead article, "Reading, Writing, and Rugby," on life at Oxford and Cambridge Universities in England; to the book reviewers, especially Rod Renecke and Jim Graves; to James Boyer May for a penetrating piece of poetry; and to a writer unknown for an interesting sketch of Chapel Hill's minister, Charlie Jones of the new Community Church.

The other poetry, by Ben Greenwald, Lawrence Lipton, and K. P. A. Taylor, and B. J. Patterson's review of Francis Gray Patton's "Good Morning, Miss Dove," are all first-rate work. They belong to a perfectly sound second-flite.

The balance of the new Quarterly strikes a reader with force. The selection of short stories best illustrates the new feeling for balance of interest, theme, and style.

Graduate student Wyat Helsabeck writes "The Old Man From Memphis," a mature short story of ideas. Set in New Guinea, a rising conflict between Jack Spurgeon, a young educator who has come there to establish an effective school among the natives, and Mr. Hudson, an old-time educator from Memphis who believes in putting the foot-note ahead of the facts and ideas, ends in an effective comment on a touchy academic controversy.

Thurberesque in its playfulness and basically serious message is Raymond Lowery's "A State to Stay Out Of." A couple of pre-license aged drivers take off for a trip from Variety Springs, N. C., to a destination in South Carolina. The young boy, who has had a peculiar odium against people from South Carolina, gets his odium modified by contact with a real South Carolinian, clad in a white linen suit, who mops his brow with a green handkerchief.

In Vin Cassidy's "The Night Before Christmas," St. Nick himself returns from a certain part of Purgatory and enjoys playing his role as the real Santa Claus.

Two rather specific criticisms are invited by the new Quarterly, despite its dominant excellences. For a magazine supposedly literary in scope and infent, the Quarterly, aside from the book review section, includes no critical articles directly concerned with writers and writing. A glance at the first issue of the new Carolina Quarterly, the copy for Fall, 1948 reveals a Bernard Shaw article by Archibald Henderson; "Paul Green: Poet-Playwright" by Agatha Boyd Adams; and "A Literary Revival At UNC" by Hardin Craig. Perhaps this devotion to literary criticism and biography tipped the scales too much in one directon. But the new Quarterly tips them too much the other way; some remedy should be sought.

Finally, the biographical notes on contributors have been dropped. Of all omissions, this appears the most inexcusabel and ought to be changed.

Otherwise, the Fall Quarterly gets the green light and raises a demand for more of the same.

Petitions, Partitions, Predjudice

Editor:

As I studied social science in the library, a quietly moving student hesitantly thrust a paper before me. "Here's a petition we would like you to sign," he began, "please read it and if you don't want to sign it you don't have to, and thanks anyhow." I read his petition and politely declined the offer to sign.

I returned to my perusal of the early history of the development of the United States of America, the nation founded on democratic principles and professing to offer to the world today a hope that freedom and human dignity exists.

As he showed it to the student opposite me, I asked, "Is this that Dr. George thing?"

"Oh no, he replied, "this is being done by the students themselves. We have about fifty of these going around."

I wish all of you who have signed those verbose and inane petitions illogically waving the banner of a "states rights" plea, had read it a little closer. Or if you did, I wish you could have attended the State Student Legislature at Raleigh last week as I did. If you had heard the debates put forth by the students of the Negro colleges represented, or had met some of those students; you would have learned a lesson that defies the shallow "social and biological" prating that Dr. George and these bandwagon-hopping student petitioners profess.

Biological? Social? States Rights? No. I can only perceive one banner flying above you all, and that is the banner of prejudice.

"Freedom" Bill Is In Reality Totalitarian

David Mundy

The passage of two weeks very effectively lessens the news value of an event, but the N. C. Student Legislature still merits some comments on two particular issues.

Had the "model" legislature the powers of law, it would now be illegal to criticize college instructors. The bill embodying this measure, interestingly enough, was "For Academic Freedom." And understandably enough, it was introduced by the University of North Carolina delegation.

The substance of the bill came straight from the totalitarian rule books: communist and fascist. Capture the institutions of higher learning, and forbid criticism of them. Few of the delegates recognized the substance of the bill for what it was; an attempt to evade censure or criticism by foul means.

Most of them, as are most of what might be called "collegiate liberals," were simply blinded by the term "freedom," especially when it was preceeded by the word "academic." These fuzzy powers of observation are especially alarming when it is considered that the more vocal members of the model legislative assembly have already begun to plan their political careers.

A more promising area was that of race relations. The reception for the members of the legislative assembly at the governor's mansion was discontinued when Negro colleges were allowed to send delegates. Thanks to a fortunate error, several of the Negro delegates attended one of the Carolina parties, at which the other white delegations also appeared. A very small instance of progress, but it is something that doesn't happen every day in the South.

A bus trip from Raleigh to Chapel Hill immediately after the end of the legislature was even more indicative of the temper of what might be called the "younger generation." Half the bus was occupied by returning Negro delegates. There were three Carolina students (two coeds) and a few other people on the bus. Somehow it happened that the Carolina students and the Negro students started conversing, perhaps a bit too loudly. Witty comments — sometimes biting ones — flew back and forth. The bus began to look like a reunion of long-lost friends. Raised eyebrows? A middle-aged gentleman between the Carolina and Negro delegations put his back to the wall and appeared on the verge of permanently losing his breath. One lady looked as though she had swallowed a whole peck of persimmons. Two others, eyebrows reaching their already receding tresses, moved as far to the front of the bus as possible. Shock treatment may not have been effective, but at least a half-dozen more North Carolinians realize that Negroes and "Caucasians" can get along together.

Why the big silence? It is, I understand, at present illegal to actually lynch college administrators. Despite the N. C. Student Legislature, it isn't yet illegal to censure them. All this freedom is positively going to waste.

Do you realize that no campus politico has blasted South Building for at least two weeks? Why the era of good feeling?

Considering this great dearth of acrid comments, I can only assume that the areas of conflict between student government and South Building have been settled. It is quiet. It is pleasant. But it is so unusual that it is downright sinister.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some tthings, minimizing others . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was limping along in the lee of The Play—when I saw him. I wondered had his UNC 32, Duke 19 prediction blown up to give him a hotfoot?

"I am happy to report that the Silly Season of pinheaded pundits has ground to its silly end," The Horse sighed. "Who knows but that this past few months has driven a death-dealing wedge into our national stupidity of listing The Twenty Best Teams in Football, and its accompanying asininity of predicting scores."

I would say Amen to that so far as The Horse's predictions were concerned!

"Well, now, who would have predicted South Carolina's win over Army or Wake Forest holding the Trampling Terps to a tie?" The Horse hedged "My call in the Tar Heel-Dook what-was it was all of a few points less than the Gamecocks's amazing win over Army. Real conservative, you might say."

Was this The Horse's defense?

"I need no defense," The Horse shrugged, collapsing against The Playmakers' wall and maintaining his semi-vertical posture with difficulty. "The fact of the matter is, the new substitution rules have worked to equalize things twixt the high and the mighty weak. Now, it seems, any team in the land, no matter how mediocre, can topple the touted giants of the gme on any given Satiday by pointing for that particular game. "Viz: Pittsburgh 21, Navy 19."

Was this possible, really?

"Lou Little, of Columbia, is a past master at this sort of thing," The Horse pointed out. "It is done by rigging up a set of secret plays and saving them for the opposition; or, if it is early in the season, by not having been scouted by the opposition. And it is a good thing for the game."

In what way?

"Well, the little guy has his dreams to keep warm," The Horse saw it. "And in a way, it is a sort of cheering message to carry through life, for the lads who ain't there fustest with the mostest. We are all born more than less unequal, heredity and environment being what they are. But on some given day in the life of even the lowliest of us, we can be as good a man as the highest placed tycoon riding in the lowest slung Cadillac."

"A cynic," The Horse murmured. "A beardless G. Bernard Shaw, no less. A danged sales-manager type. A mouther of witty ideas in a half-witty way."

Oh, then The Horse aspired to that King For A Day feeling he had been picturing? A bunch of posies for Dottie O'Mare, some stunning day?

"Let's not get too radical," The Horse protested. "For right now, I've got my sights set on that thick steak."

Creative Energy On The Campus

Phillips Russell
In The Chapel Hill News Leader

It has sometimes been said that the thing that differentiates the University of North Carolina from other institutions of a like situation and size is that in Chapel Hill there has somehow survived, even under criticism and interference, a creative spark that has repeatedly manifested itself in great teachers and great executives.

The University here has never enjoyed particularly great financial resources, but it has shown the world that even in a time of shortages and stress, men will eagerly gather at a place where they may have the freedom to learn, teach, think, work and create.

Venable in a simple laboratory created a department of chemistry whose graduates enjoyed national respect and in which great discoveries were made.

E. K. Graham, beginning as an instructor in English, became president of a University that through the extension division made itself felt at the furthest boundaries of the state.

MacNider's studies in medicine gave him a national standing.

Wilson and Couch made the books of the University Press valued in all parts of the nation.

Koch's folk theatre drew visitors and students from the entire world.

F. P. Graham was one of the foremost university presidents of his day.

These are just a few examples.

It is true that (Dr. Howard) Odum's period here was a Golden Age. Bue we might expect to see it return provided the creative conditions are maintaind which give rise to creative men.

Free opinion and the free expression of it are too often viewed with suspicion in high places. Fresh thought and new ideas have on many campuses had to give way to loyalty oaths and loyalty searches.

The slogan now is security, not inquiry. The battle goes not to the strong, but to the orthodox. The rewards go to the obedient. Once an American citizen was held accountable only for his actions; now he is liable for his opinions, his associations, and even his activities of the distant past.

Dr. Odum himself was more than once attacked—not that his ideas were subversive, but that they were fresh and induced fresh thought. Only if minds are lined up, drilled, and marched away will the creative spirit leave the University. But that it will return eventually, we cannot doubt.

McGuire Rates Eagles 'Tough'

"Indicator" Contest Slated For 8 O'clock

By BERNIE WEISS

Carolina's cagey Tar Heels remove the wraps off their 1954-55 basketball fortunes tonight in Asheboro when they take on the powerful McCrary Eagles in a non-conference encounter.

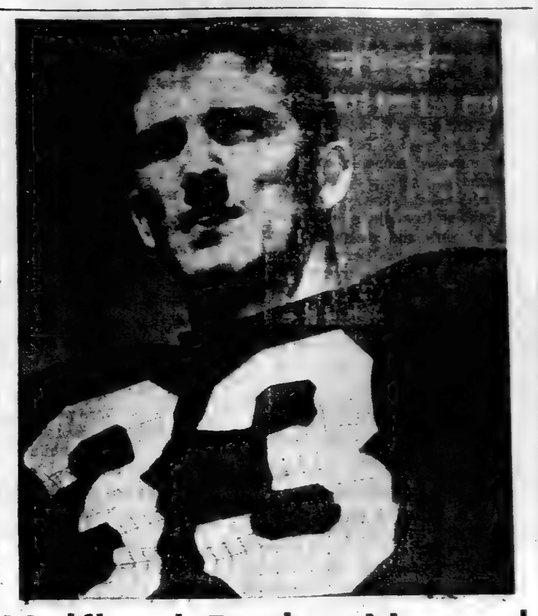
Gametime is 8 o'clock.

Head coach Frank McGuire today still had not named his fifth starter for the game, but had narrowed the choice down to Tony Radovich and Frank Goodwin. The other men previously named to starting berths were Paul Likins, Len Rosenbluth, Jerry Vayda and Al Lifson.

McCrary, one of the best independent teams in the State, figures to give the Tar Heels a real test. "The game is a tough opener away from home" said McGuire. The Eagles sport such outstanding stars as Sam Ranzino, who made a name on the N. C. State court a few seasons ago, Bob Shoaf, formerly a star for Guilford College, and Jim Duncan, a product of Duke.

An indication of how tough the Eagles are may be gained by noting that Wake Forest's varsity cagers managed to down them, 92-74, by getting hot in the last quarter in a recent practice game.

The Tar Heel starting line-up will average about six-feet, four-inches. Likins, a six-nine senior from Elkhart, Ind., is the tallest of the crew, followed by Rosenbluth at six-five, Vayda at six-four and Lifson at six-two.



Excluding Rosenbluth, who hung up a tremendous scoring record last year as a freshman, Vayda is the highest scorer of the four men who will definitely start. Jerry tallied 357 points in 21 games for an average of 17 points per contest. Lifson had a 14.6 mark.

Among all of last year's team, Vayda had the highest individual point score for a single game, racking up 26 against Virginia and Davidson on separate occasions.

Last night the team scrimmaged the freshman squad for the second consecutive evening. Monday night's scrimmage ended in a 40-40 tie, the closeness of the score being attributed to the outstanding ability of the frosh by McGuire.

The team will not display its wares before the home folk until Saturday night when it opens ACC competition against Clemson in the Woollen Gym. Gametime for that contest is 8 o'clock.

Coach Dale Ranson yesterday issued an invitation for all interested persons to come out for indoor track. Practice will start today in the tin can between 2:30-4:45 p.m.

Halfback Parker Named Athlete Of The Week

For his outstanding performance in last Saturday's clash with Duke, Halfback Larry Parker has been selected Daily Tar Heel "Athlete of the Week."

Coach George Barclay's comment, "He was the outstanding Carolina player on the field, and next to Barger the best player in the contest," aptly describes the hard-charging halfback's performance. Throughout the season, Parker has proved his worth with good consistent, if not spectacular, efforts.

"Peanut" Parker, as he is called by his friends, is a North Carolina product, hailing from the Queen City of Charlotte. An outstanding player in high school, Larry moved on to the UNC campus in 1951, where he played tremendous ball on the freshman team. Moving to the varsity the following year, Parker steadied into the reliable line-crashing back that he is today.

Larry scored the second and final touchdown for the Tar Heels in the Duke nightmare. He was the only consistent ground gainer for the Tar Heels throughout the afternoon, and as Barclay stated, "He played just as hard in the dying minutes of the game as he did at the beginning."

Parker wrote "finis" to his collegiate career Saturday afternoon, with a performance that typified his entire career.

It is the first time for a Southwest Conference team in the Gator Bowl. Auburn played last year and lost to Texas Tech 35-13.

Both teams have 7-3 records for this season.

Auburn dropped three of its first four games and then won the last six.

Coached by Ralph Shug Jordan, Auburn beat Chattanooga 45-0; lost to Florida 19-13; was beaten by Kentucky 21-14; lost to Georgia Tech 14-7; and then started its comeback. After the Tech loss, Auburn beat Florida State 33-0; Tulane 27-0; Miami 14-13; Georgia 35-0; Clemson 27-6; and Alabama 28-0.

Deacs, GW Battle Tonight

WAKE FOREST—Wake Forest's Deacons, runner up for the Atlantic Coast Conference championship last year, open the 1954-55 basketball season tonight at Gore Gymnasium against the strong George Washington Colonials.

Led by All-America center Dick Hemric and All-Conference Forward Lowell (Lefty) Davis, the Deacons will play a 26-game schedule which will include three tournaments.

Wake Forest will participate in the Birmingham Classic in Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 17 and 18, the Dixie Classic in Raleigh Dec. 27 through 29 and the ACC tourney in Raleigh Mar. 3 through 5.

The Deacons, who defeated N. C. State for the Southern Conference title in 1952, lost the ACC crown to the Wolfpack 82-80 in an overtime game last year. Wake Forest had a record of 17-12 for the season.

Hemric, named last year as the Most Valuable Player in the ACC, is a senior and will be playing his last year with the Deacons.

The 21-year-old scoring artist, who stands 6-feet-6 and weighs 227, has scored 1,841 in three years for Wake Forest, an average of 23.9 pts. per game. He scored 538 as a freshman, 623 as a sophomore and 680 as a junior.

The slender Davis, who is 6-feet-2 and weighs 156, is a junior. Last year, his first season on the Deacon varsity, he scored 505 points for a 17.4 average. As a one-two punch, Hemric and Davis averaged 41.7 points per game in 1953-54.

"Don't Shoot!"

From recent Student Council minutes:

CHAIRMAN: Next we come to the problem of the appalling dressing-habits of our freshman. We have noted such unorthodox attire as long-point collars, garishly colored shirts, some actually made of dotted swiss!

SCH. OF MUSIC REP.: Definitely not in harmony with our standards.

JOURNALISM REP.: To corn a phrase, they ain't on the ball team.

SCH. OF LOGIC REP.: Why not shoot 'em?

MED. SCHOOL REP.: Great idea! I'll work up a "Good Taste" serum, refined from some Van Heusen Oxfordian shirts. We'll inoculate 'em all!

PHILOSOPHY REP.: Who cares!

LAW SCHOOL REP.: (Happily) Yeah, inoculate 'em. Then maybe some of 'em will get sick, and I! . .

JOURNALISM REP.: Now let's don't go all around Red Robin Hood's barn . . . what we need is a campaign to tell 'em about the Oxfordian . . . the silky, smooth oxford shirts with the smart, modern collar styles.

BUS. ADM. REP.: And don't forget . . . fine long-staple cotton, woven tighter to last longer . . . at the amazing price (thanks to excellent production facilities) of only $4.50.

JOURNALISM REP.: I think we got the gem of an idea here somewhere . . . but first off the bag, we gotta . . .

MED. SCHOOL REP.: Inoculate 'em.

LOGIC REP.: Yeah, shoot 'em.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor of mass inoculation say Aye. (MOTION CARRIES.)

JOURNALISM REP.: Maybe some of 'em already wear Van Heusen Oxfordians. Don't shoot 'til you see the whites of their shirts . . ."

ART SCHOOL REP.: . . . and the colors! Don't forget Oxfordians come in the smartest colors this side of a Bonnard or a Klee.

PHILOSOPHY REP.: (eating Tootsie-roll) Who cares!

Campus Carousel:

Vacation Was Just Right

By ELEANOR SAUNDERS

The well-fed stomachs and healthy smiles have been seen on campus this week are solid evidences that Thanksgiving weekend has successfully passed. But there are many unhappy mommie and daddy turkeys. Their nests seem vacant without the family squabbles and gobbles from their robust and fattened sons and daughters.

But the turkeys' loss has been our gain. A weekend of hot turkey, cold turkey, turkey sandwiches, chopped turkey, sliced turkey, wild turkey and turkey hash was well worth the struggle with the ax or, more probably, with the grocer.

The brief vacation seems to have come precisely at the right time. It may have prevented several nervous prostrations and inefficiencies, and it most surely was a valuable way to kill time until that longer holiday finally arrives.

Perhaps for some, the weekend was not one of a partcularly large amount of rest, for who can relax when surrounded by the bright lights of Broadway and the loud ticking of the Biltmore clock? But, regardless of the Thanksgiving destination, travel experiences of the holiday dominate this week's Y-Court conversation.

Deke's nave returned with tales from tne Big City and from the slightly smaller city of Tarboro. Brothers split ranks during the holidays, as a fair representation took in festivities in both New York and the North Carolina town.

And Phi Kap's report that the holiday was tremendously enjoyed by those who stayed in Chapel Hill for Friday and Saturday night parties at the house.

KA's delighted in the vacation wherever and with whomever they ate their respective turkeys. Could it be that they were anxious to leave their delightfully atmospheric home in the basement of Cobb?

It seems a little early for beach parties, but Phi Delt's are this year's early birds. Some of the brothers are planning a beach trip for the oncoming weekend, while others will party in Durham.

Lambda Chi's are extending the football season to cover this weekend. They will compete with brothers from the Duke chapter in a tackle football game Saturday afternoon, and rivalry will be forgotten at that night's victory party.

Activities at the Pi Lam house are centering around their new pledge, Reese Glatzer of Silver Springs, Md., who was pledged during the holidays. Congratulations to both pledge and pledgers.

At the Chi Phi house rumours of a quiet Saturday night party at a quiet cabin somewhere in the woods of Durham are circulating.

The entire weekend promises to be dominated by sorority activities. These organizations plan parties and dances in honor of their pledge classes.

Alpha Gam pledges will have a party, probably at the Saddle Club, Friday night, and will be formally presented at a dance Saturday in the Naval Armory.

Turnage's in Durham will be headquarters for the Pi Phi pledge party Friday night. Pledges and their dates will be entertained at a formal dance Saturday night in the Inn Ballroom.

Tri Delt pledges will begin their weekend with the formal dance Friday night in the Ballroom of the Carolina Inn. Saturday night will find pledges, actives, and dates partying at the Robin Hood in Durham.

Pinnings

From the looks of things, turkey lives aren't the only objects missing after the holiday weekend. Quite a few pins have been won and lost.

Yale-Reid Hall Summer Session

The Yale-Reid Hall Summer Session in Paris is now receiving applicants for their six-week summer school session.

Associate Professor Theodore Anderson of Yale University, who announced the reception of applications, jointly directs the study program with Miss Dorothy F. Leet, President of Reid Hall in Paris.

Prospective students for this foreign study must have had two years of college French or the equivalent. They will sail from New York in mid-June and tour Normandy, Mont St. Michael and the Loire Valley before classes begin on July 4. Reid Hall, a mansion in Paris, will be the residence of these students during their stay. Several other tours are planned during the session, and after classes end on August 13 there will be three weeks of independent travel before leaving France for the United States.

Subjects offered will be French, Contemporary French Literature, French Art and French Politics, to be taught at Sorbonne and the Louvre. For work completed, college credits will be given.

March 1, 1955 is the final date for reception of applications. Further information and application blanks may be received by writing to Professor Anderson, 133 Hall of Graduate Students, Yale University.

GE Grants Announced

A new plan to provide additional financial assistance for American colleges and universities through direct grants of funds was announced recently by trustees of the General Electric Educational and Charitable Fund.

In announcing the plan, Philip D. Reed, chairman of the General Electric Board of Directors and chairman of the Fund's trustees, said the plan "is thought to be unique in business-education circles because it provides for joint participaton in the giving program by individual employees who are college graduates, and by the Educational Fund."

It is the intent within limits of the plan that gifts will be made from the fund in amounts equal to those made by G-E employed alumni during 1955.

The General Electrc Educational and Charitable Fund was created two years ago by the Company to implement certain phases of the overall program. Paramount in the program, according to Mr. Reed, is the fostering of an adequate supply of educated manpower and the maintenance and improvement of an economic, social and political climate in which it can continue to do business, progress and prosper.

Inquiries about any phase of the Corporate Alumnus Program should be directed to the G-E Educational and Charitable Fund, 1 River Road, Schenectady 5, N. Y.

The faculty members Long named as communist were John Meyers, Robert Lewis, Anatole Volkov, Elias Friedland and Hans Freistat.

A South Building secretary, however, when questioned yesterday, said the five were "graduate students here," and their connection with the faculty was through their part-time instructorship.)

Long's testimony was confined to the years when he was a communist himself. He said he understood Volkov had since left the party, but he had no knowledge of the more recent activities of the others.

(A check of University records, catalogue and 'phone book shows that none of the mentioned "faculty members" presently resides in Chapel Hill or is connected with UNC.)

Draft Decrease

Durham, (AP)—An additional decrease of 200,000 men in the strength of the armed forces is planned by June 30, 1956, it was revealed here yesterday.

Col. John E. Moore, director of personnel in the office of the Department of Defense, said the cut is part of "organization plan six." It is not expected to weaken the effectiveness of the armed forces, he said.

Col. Moore, here for the National Resources Conference at Duke University, described the plan as "the biggest change" the Eisenhower administration has brought about in the Defense Department.

"The military objective of the plan is to obtain political objectives," he said. "Eisenhower has given this emphasis."

The plan calls for an increase in the influence of civilians within the department, and the strengthening of the influence of the National Security Council to permit full consideration of the economy of the country and the shifting international situation, he said.

Cuts in the size of the armed forces are not expected to weaken the strength of the nation due to a shift of duties in many fields from the military to the civilian, Moore said. Technological advances have also reduced the need for men, he said, since modern weapons are more effective.

Debating Meet Soon

Committee Advises Late Rush

President Creasy Praises Report On Fraternities

Student body President Tom Creasy yesterday gave high praise to the special committee on fraternity rushing which he appointed last spring at the request of the student Legislature. The report, received by Creasy this week, recommends that fraternity rushing be delayed until the "sixth or eighth week of the first semester."

Presently, rushing starts around the second or third week of school in the first semester.

Said Creasy, "I appointed the rushing committee last spring made up of executive officers in student government, legislative officials and faculty and administrative officials in the University to study the whole area of fraternity rushing.

"They met for three months and studied carefully our rushing system and many other systems all over the country. After three months of debate and discussion on the problem they turned over to me a formal request which includes suggestions which they believe would better the system here at Carolina.

"I plan to turn this report over to the Inter-Fraternity Council for their consideration and action on any parts as they see fit.

"The committee did an excellent job and has made very good recommendations. I hope that many of these will be carried out by the IFC."

COMMITTEE

The committee was comprised of Ed W. McCurry Jr., chairman: Roy Holsten, administration; Gerald Barrett, faculty; Gil Ragland, Bob Young, Myron Conklin, Legislature; Jack Stevens, IFC; Art Newcome and Ray White, executive.

The report is as follows:

The problem of scheduling fraternity rushing at a time which avoids conflict with other University activities and interests is not new. It has been the concern of students, faculty members, administrators, alumni, parents and national interfraternity groups for more years than they would care to remember. While colleges and universities have experimented with a variety of programs, few have found a permanent solution which satisfies all of the requirements of their respective campuses. The only fact upon which everyone seems to agree is that the problem is complex and the unique qualities of each campus should be considered in arriving at an intelligent and workable policy.

Music, Dance, Drama Coming Here

THREE OF AMERICA'S most popular entertainers—Harry Belafonte, new folk-singing sensation, and Marge and Gower Champion, the country's top dancing team, will be in Chapel Hill with the new musical revue "Three For Tonight" next Thursday and Friday, Dec. 9 and 10. Also starred in the show, which has won rave notices all over the country, are the Voices of Walter Schumann.

Mock Trial Is Slated To Be Held Dec. 10

The annual mock trial sponsored by Phi Alpha Delta, legal fraternity, will be held December 10, at 7 p.m. in the Manning Hall Court Room.

Serving as judge will be J. A. Rousseau, Superior Court Judge of the 17th Judicial District, North Wilkesboro, N. C.

The case to the tried involves the fight that took place between Louis Krarr, associate editor and columnist for The Daily Tar Heel, and Dave Reid, Student Party legislator, over a UNC coed, Miss Connie McMahon, in Y-Court on the fourth of November. The fight took place for the benefit of the mock court preceedings.

Tickets Still Available For Champions' Show

John W. Parker, business manager of The Carolina Playmakers, has announced that good seats are left for "Three For Tonight" in all price ranges, but that the best seats are available for Dec. 9.

Marge and Gower Champion, Harry Belafonte and a company of 40 performers will give a program of music, dance and drama. Backing up the individual stars will be the choral group, The Voices of Walter Schumann.

The show's producers are Paul Gregory and Charles Laughton, who have collaborated on three recent shows, "John Brown's Body," "Don Juan in Hell" and "The Craine Mutiny Court Martial."

Gower Champion is responsible for the staging of "Three For Tonight." He has previously done the choreography for many of his movies and for the Broadway show "Lend An Ear" for which he won the Antoinette Perry Award.

Harry Belafonte will sing many folksongs, including "Mark Twain," "Matilda," "Scarlet Ribbons" and "When the Saints Go Marching In."

The Walter Schumann choral group will act, dance and sing throughout the production. Other featured performers will be singer Betty Benson and actor Don Beddoe.

Emilia Hodel in a review of "Three For Tonight" in The San Francisco News said, "The Champions are our top dance team. Marge especially has great charm and humor and an expressive face to make these come alive. Mr. Belafonte is known to television audiences and probably to the night-club circuit. He is an exciting new theatre personality.

"Three For Tonight is so perfect a 'concert' that it seems as if you were watching the twentieth 'take' of a technicolor musical, the one the director orders 'print.'

"It is a distinguished musical revue. But we'll wager it has Producer Gregory baffled. In his other successes he has been able to recast with new artists. But these 'three' can't be substituted. They are individual and great."

Training Program

Dean Fred H. Weaver of the Division of Student Affairs will speak this afternoon at the final meeting in a series of In-Service Training Programs being held here.

The program will be held in Hanes Hall at 4 p.m. Dean Weaver's subject will be "Plans for the Area of Student Life."

The In-Service Training Program is sponsored by the office of the Dean of Women.

Aid Drive Deadline Dec. 20

"This project copes with a definite need in this county," said Dean Katherine Carmichael about the Empty Stocking Fund.

"Without the results of this program, some families would have no evidence whatever of the Christmas season. The Christmas basket, provided through the Empty Stocking Fund, will bring to those families a manifestation of the Christmas spirit. Organizations and individuals in the University will do well to make contributions to this worthy project," continued Dean Carmichael.

All cases of needy people in the county are taken from the Welfare records, as well as those cases referred by any citizen in the county. Letters are sent to these cases which explain the Fund. Along with the letters, the cases receive a form which asks for information about the family, its size, the ages and sex of the children, their particular needs and directions for finding their home. If the cases wish to receive a Christmas basket, they are requested by The Junior Service League to fill out the form and return it.

The deadline for referrals-that is notifying the Junior Service League of needy people—has been set by the League as Dec. 8. Dec. 20 has been set as the deadline for all adoptions.

All referrals and adoptions should be made with Mrs. G. P. Childress, general chairman of the project.

The number of families wishing baskets as of now is over 300. Fifty of these have been adopted.

Money contributions should be sent either The Chapel Hill News-Leader or The Chapel Hill Weekly. With the cash contributions, the League will make up and deliver baskets for the families who are not adopted.

AFROTC Has No Mixup, Say Officials

According to T/Sgt. B. F. Riddle, non-commissioned officer in charge of cadet records, there has been no misunderstanding among the cadets concerning the length of the tour of duty expected from the graduates of the Air Force Training Corps program here.

Some colleges and universities where the AFROTC program is in operation have released contradictory statements concerning the lengthening of the enlistment for those cadets who finish basic flying school and continue in advanced pilot training.

According to a recent issue of The Air Force Times, air force trainees wishing to become "hard core, first line" pilots will have to sign a new four year active duty contract. Otherwise, graduates of basic pilot school will not get advanced flying training and can expect to serve in ground-type and non-operational flying jobs for the duration of their short terms.

The new arrangement begins with cadets who are already in flight training and graduate in January. Men in this and subsequent classes will be asked to sign a four contract instead of the original three year contract. If they agree, after they finish regular flight training they will enter advanced courses to become skilled in jet aircraft and assume cockpit jobs. Basic graduates declining to sign will remain on flying status but will take whatever duty that might be available.

The Air Force has been putting all basic pilot graduates into advanced flying. It has been a costly operation because many advanced graduates under the three year contract have only one year's active service retainability. Under the new contract arrangement, the Air Force can count on their services for at least three years.

Horton Stifles Word He Started Petition

Ex-Prexy Says He Signed It

By DICK CREED

Ham Horten, former president of the student body, yesterday spiked a rumor that he is the ramrod behind the petition recently circulated by a group of students urging the Governor to maintain separate schools for whites and Negroes in North Carolina.

Said Horton, "I signed the paragraph of the petition relating to states rights, but I can't take credit for either starting or spreading the petition."

The rumor that Horton, a second year law student here, wrote and promoted the petition has been making the rounds of student activities offices in Graham Memorial for the past few days.

The petition is made up of two paragraphs, the first of which Horton says he signed. That paragraph is a protest against the Supreme Court's abrogation" of the principle of states rights as "guaranteed by the Constitution."

The second paragraph, which Horton says he didn't sign, urges the Governor to use whatever legal power he possesses to maintain separate school systems in North Carolina.

Horton had "no comment" as to why he did not sign the second paragraph. About signing the first paragraph, he said, "I would do it again."

It is not yet known who is behind writing and circulating the petition. Ray Barbree, a sophomore, who was soliciting signatures for a copy of the petition in lower quad last week, said that it was put together by a "bunch of interested students" and that "some boys in the law school helped write it." He indicated last week that he knew some of the people who were behind it, but declined to say who they were.

Horton said he was approached by a student bearing a copy of the petition, and that the student asked him to promote and help circulate it.

"I told him I wouldn't do it because I don't think graduate students should take an active part in campus affairs," said Horton.

Horton and others have speculated that the petition arose out of the "feling among some students" that the editorial stand against segregation taken by The Daily Tar Heel is "not representative of the opinions of the majority of students."

It has been suggested also that the students behind the petition are waiting until there is a significant number of signatures before they release it to the campus and state presses.

Doyle Hits Reds

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—Rep. Clyde Doyle (D-Cal.), a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, said at current hearings here he would ask the next Congress for legislation to make sure that no person who hides behind the Fifth Amendment ever profits from government work.

Doyle made the statement after a Miami contractor, Polish-born Max Shlafrock, refused to tell the committee whether he was or ever had been a Communist, on grounds his answers might incriminate him.

Under questioning by Doyle, Shlafrock said he got some government building contracts during the war, including one for work on an army recruiting station in Miami.

Rep. Gordon H. Scherer (R-Ohio) moved during the Miami hearings that the committee consider referring to the Department of Justice for "possible perjury prosecution" the testimony of S[illegible] Hirsch, former University of Miami drama instructor.

Hirsch earlier told the committee he had never been a Communist. Ralph Long, a self-confessed former Red from Durham, N. C., who followed Hirsch to the stand, said Hirsch was a dues-paying Party member at the University of North Carolina.

Long testified the Communist Party operated only at the University but, to his knowledge, school officials never investigated or took any action.

Ex-Commie Long Once Wrote On Red Behalf

Ralph Long, former UNC student and now a self-confessed ex-communist, once wrote a series of newspaper articles on the principles of communism.

Long, presently being questioned by the House Un-American Activities Committee in Miami, Fla., this week revealed that he attended communist cell meetings while enrolled here. The meetings were held to promote interest in the party among students and faculty, Long testified.

Long's articles, which appeared in The Durham Sun, appealed to the reader to "look to the future" and "believe in an ideal with all your heart." Slanted toward collegiate readers, the stories asked that citizens consider the best interests of America.

The articles were written while Long was a student here.

Long entered UNC in the summer of 1946 and was graduated in the spring of 1951. He told the committee this week that he was a member of the Communist Party from 1946-48. Long majored in English while he was here.

'Jazz's Got To Swing:' Herman

"The spirit of jazz is abandon. When you present it too grimly serious you lose naturalness.' Thus Woody Herman, who brings his jazz orchestra, the Third Herd, to UNC for a hour Memorial Hall concert Monday, expresses his sentiments about his music.

"The basic thing about jazz is hat the music is meant to have a ball to music to enjoy and to be happy with. Any time you weaken hat, you lose.

"The first thing in jazz is to swing. And if you don't swing you re not in the jazz field. When ou stop swinging, you're competing with classical musicians nd to tell the truth, Toscanini cuts ou!"

Tarnation Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Tarnation staff this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Tarnation office, according to Rueben Leonard, editor.

He urged that all old staff members to attend along with any other persons who might be interested in working on the staff.

Leonard said that the deadline for the next issue is set for Dec. 13. He asked that all persons who would like to submit material bring it in as soon as possible.

Student Solon '53-'54 Slate Ends Tonight

The student Legislature will convene tomorrow evening for the closing session of its 1953-54 agenda.

This terminating session will witness the death of a 38-12 Student Party majority, brought about as a result of the recent elections in which the UP gained atotal of 10 seats.

The newly elected Legislature will boast a delegation consisting of 28 SP Legislators and 22 UP delegates.

Bills slated to be debated at the closing session are:

A bill to establish a legislative complaints board.

The incoming 54-55 Legislature will meet for the first time next Thursday evening, Dec. 9, at 7:30 in the Philatrophic Assembly Hall.

In Chapel Hill:

Cigarette Prices Vary

BY PEGGY BALLARD

The cigarette, which poet William Cowper once called "pernicious weed!" is going strong in Chapel Hill, as always. And the prices of said weed are as varied as the many stores, service stations and confectionaries that sell it.

Graham Memorial sells cigarettes for 20c. The vending machine in the student union has been placed there for the sole purpose of providing for those who enjoy smoking. Cigarettes are not sold for a profit, according to GM officials.

The Book Exchange handles the sale of cigarettes at the Scuttlebut, the cigar stand in Lenior Hall, the Circus Room in the Monogram Club and the Y. Cigarettes which are sold across the counter in these locations have their prices set by the Book Exchange. Prices are set to allow for a small profit which will meet overhead costs and are kept at a par with other cigarette dealers, in order not to be outsold. They are, however, lower than prices set by a few town district dealers.

Prices of regular size cigarettes and some king size brands Embassy, Pall Mall, Herbert Tareton Cork Tip, Raleigh and Chesterfield are 21c. Other king sizes, such as Philip Morris, Kool and Old Gold, sell for 22c. All filtered tips sell for 23c at the University's stores, except for Kents, which have a sale price of 28c.

The University Service Station does not have a vending machine but sells all regular size cigarettes for 21c, all king size for 22c and all filtered tips for 24c. The reason given for having all inclusive prices is that it is simplier in the operaton of a gas station.

At the Goody Shop, cigarettes are sold from a vending machine filled by Dixie Wholesale in Durham. The wholesalers set one price and a profit-making price is added to this by the Goody Shop. All of Spero's cigarettes sell for 23c.

It is a fact that some chain drug stores such as Liggetts and Walgreen's sell cigarettes at cost or even below cost. This policy, say officials, is a means of getting cusomers to remain permanent customers and to increase chances that customers will buy other articles while in the store. Prices at Sutton's Drug Store, however, are two cents higher on filtered cigarettes than the Book Exchange prices.

The A & P Food Store probably sells cigarettes for the lowest price in town. For regular size cigarettes two packs are sold for 35c, or one for 18c. Filtered tips are sold two for 39c or one for 20c. These prices are set by the Charlotte office, which executes the policies of A & P units.

Ralph, Meet Nell

Batten down the hatches, men, we're heading full into a hard hot wind from the South. Ralph Long, a former campus Communist who is at present busily engaged in saving humanity from the Red scourge, showed up in Miami Tuesday before the touring House Un-American Activities Committee.

And what revelations did he make? He said there was a small Communist cell here in the late 40's, something everybody knew at the time. He named five part-time instructors as "faculty Reds." All five were known to the FBI then and still are; all have long since left Chapel Hill. He exclaimed the University "made no investigation, did nothng about it." There was nothing illegal about being a Communist at the time, and by Long's own testimony the group operated openly, not as a secret conspiratorial organization.

Long and his Communist friends in Chapel Hill in the late 40's succeeded only in drawing a few chuckles from the community. Now that he is a professional testifier, however, we suggest he is doing more harm to the University than he could ever have done as a Communist. He has revealed nothing that the FBI and, in most cases, the public, did not already know.

Unfortunately for the good name of the University, he appears to be enjoying the role of anti-Communist crusader and between him and Nell Battle Lewis, we are likely to be breathing a good deal more of this hot air for some time to come.

Clear The Shelves Of Rep Ties, Milton, It's 'Coon Coat Time Now

As students waited at the stadium gate before the Duke game Saturday, a real raccoon coat, bundled on the shoulders of a Carolina rooter, broke the age of sartorial conversation.

When that lone student appeared, clad in a symbol of the liberties of by-gone dress, we got to thinking. We were reminded of Jay Gatsby and his pink suits, of loud blazers, checked pants, white knickers, and all of those bright articles of clothing that have escaped the wardrobe of the present-day college student.

(Contrast a red blazer, combined with a pair of checked trousers and a broad tie complete with diamond stickpin to the bleak blacks and browns of our day.)

Why not a new school of sartorial iconoclasm? A rash of raccoon coats couldn't carry revolution on its shoulders alone. But why not let them become the insignia of a swipe at the conformity rampant in today's tailoring shops?

We want revolution; and the ammunition dump, if mothballs have done their job, is as near as the nearest attic trunk.

Onward & UPward

Hooray, we say, for the University Party! They're finally owning up, albeit a little timidly, to the fact that they are a political group. For evidence, we offer the remark of newly-elected UP Chairman Charles Yarborough, who, in a burst of honesty, said at his inauguration, "Political action is necessary in any form of government. . ."

There is a tremendous candor for the UP, which did a good job of old-fashioned politicking in the last election to gain back a big hunk of dormitory votes from the Student Party. It can only be appreciated in comparison with UP Student Body Pdesident Creasy's "Politics is a necessary evil" and out-going UP Chairman Leonard's disavowal of the party's political function.

True, even Yarborough back-tracked a little. "As party chairman," he said, "I shall do my best to keep politics at a respectable level."

But it's an improvement over the blushing little little white lies of the past and if the UP keeps at it, the first thing we know they'll be acknowledging that they're out to get votes and win elections.

An Adventure In Economics And Cocktails

Louis Kraar

Interested in farming? Like to know what "neophytes utter sagely?" Or could you possibly wonder what an olive at the bottom of a cocktail glass is like?

If any of these diverse and complex problems have been bothering you lately, let me recommend a remedy. Try reading "Economics," by Paul A. Samuelson.

I found myself dipping into this text (complete with graphs and charts), not in quest of the answers to farming, neophytes or olives in cocktails, but for class assignment. Thus, my discovery about these things was accidental knowledge, which is always more exciting than intentional knowledge.

Say you're wondering how to be a successful farmer. Just look on page 436 which says:

". . . When all farmers are lucky enough to have a large crop, their total revenue actually goes down. Does this mean that farmers pray for drought and bugs? Not necessarily. The more calculating ones pray for bugs on everybody else's field, but none on their own. But since that cannot be expected to happen often, the next best thing is for everyone to have bugs."

Reading on further, I found myself in the realm of the cocktail glass. On page 439 it said, "Price is at equilibrium, just as an olive at the bottom of the cocktail glass is at equlibrium. . . ." You see, an entirely new outlook on the olive in the bottom of your glass.

I found sage advice for neophytes who "utter sagely" on page 445. There the text declared: "This should help to debunk the tendency of neophytes who have just mastered the elements of market price determination who utter sagely, 'You can't repeal the law of supply and demand. King Canute could not command the ocean tide to retreat from his throne on the seashore. . . .' "

Somehow I can't picture a student uttering words about "King Canute," but who am I to argue with an economics professor? Anyway, think of all the stray, unexpected knowledge I picked up in reading the text.

'Hey—We've Found A Ship Over Here Too'

YOU Said It: The 'Racists'

Editor:

It's funny how things change, isn't it? Six years or so ago in Chapel Hill, it was a small group of Communist fanatics which was sounding off and attracting a lot of attention. Now it's a small group at the other extreme which is bringing discredit on Chapel Hill and the University. I mean the group of racist, white supremacist fanatics who share Hitler's and Dr. Malan's view that nobody but white Nordic people is an good.

They split Charlie Jones' church and they darn near split the Baptist church. Now an aging professor of anatomy comes out with a petition to "protect both races from destruction" by maintaining school segregation.

I brag a lot about UNC up here, and the other day a friend of mine handed me the enclosed clipping about Dr. George from the Washington Star and asked if this was the same great Southern liberal institution I'm always telling him about. All I could do was ask him please not to judge us by what is unusual enough to be printed in the national press about us.

I wish you could send a reporter around to ask Dr. George two things (if you haven't already done so.) One is this: How will school integration, or even social intermingling of the "races", result in their "destruction?" The other is: What possible interpretation of Christianity justifies continued segregation?

Of course he will probably have the stock racist answers to these questions; but if you keep picking at errors of fact and logic, he will eventually fall back on a purely emotional defense, the inevitable "Would you want yore dotter to marry a Nigra?"

Another question you might ask him is this: Just what are the major anatomical differences between the two "races?" And incidentally, what is a "race," physiologically?

Here is a great opportunity for Professor George to educate some of us who don't understand quite how his distinguished mind works.

The Daily Tar Heel is a ridiculous rag, a journalistic farce, and a haphazard collection of insidious libelism. It is permeated with a revolting pseudo-radicalism so gross in its character that the reader is overcome with revulsion at the turning of one page.

Editor:

There are many courses that a chemist must take to graduate and one of these is Chem. 62. The first time through at W. C. I thoroughly enjoyed this course. Naturally there were days when I was upset because the girl next to me had a leaky faucet, and she and I spent the hours knee-deep in water. However the important thing is I make a "C."

Then I came to Carolina and the news arrived from the "not so Consolidated University" that it was essential I take Chem. 62 over again because the course here had more "spice." Just think, a chance to take that stimulating course once more. Well, twenty hours of lab a week was a real work out, but what I enjoyed most was being locked in the building at 10:30 p. m. because I was still in lab working.

It is now November, 1954, and on the fateful day of the sixteenth I was given the joyous news that I am to take Chem 62 once more as I made a "D" the second time and need a "C".

My eyes grow misty as I think of the happy days ahead of having the young man next to me pour acid down the back of my leg; as I think of the suffocating smells and the young men (asphyxiated) lying on the floor; and of the explosions and the cozy fires. And I think if I'm lucky I may even get to take Chem. 62 for the fourth time.

Mad At Coeds

Editor:

I'm sick and tired of this coed situation. The coeds on this campus give me the cold shoulder all the time. They act like they're about 10 times better than I am, even though I am superior to nine-tenths of them in brains, poise and attractiveness.

Really, I can't understand it. I came here from a good high school, in a medium-sized town, and when I was there I dated almost every decent girl in my class, and quite a few in the other classes. But here, I try to get a date and the first thing these co-ed's ask me is, "Have you got a car?" Of course, when I telf them I haven't, they turn me down.

What kind of a bunch do you think that is?

Believe me, from now on when I want a date, I'm going back home to the high school. The girls there are more mature than these snobbish Carolina coeds.

Quote, Unquote

Segregation is not a question of state's rights or political theory, but rather, a question of humanity. A man proves what he is by his individual actions. Therefore, judgment of a person is not to be based upon his race, religion or creed but what he himself proves by his actions. If the man is placed under the restrictions that are placed upon the Negroes under segregation he has little chance to prove himself for what he really is capable of being. Segregation places a limit to his abilities and the chance to make use of them. No race has the right to say it is superior to anotherrace. . . . — Bruce Mooney in Stacy Dormitory's Rebel Yell.

The Old Man & The Poignant Vernacular: Hemingway's Way

Alistair Cooke
In The Manchester Guardian

The early nineteen-twenties are far enough away to have become all things to all men: the jazz age of Wilsonian idealism, the era of "the lost generation" and the Era of Wonderful Nonsense. To Ernest Miller Heringway, living over a sawmill in Paris, it was a time when a lot of stories he had cast on the waters floated back to him with tart little notes of rejection from editors protesting that they were crude or amusing "sketches, notes, contes, but not by any acceptable definition stories." Acceptable to whom? Not to Hemingway, a husky Midwestern boy with black hair and a clipped Guard's moustache, who already had a sharp vision of what he wanted writing to be about. All young writers suffer from sharp visions and mean to make the world over.

Considering now what came after, Hemingway had rather less conceit than he should have had about the memorable break with the past he was attempting and would achieve. He had been a schoolboy in Illinois, a reporter in Kansas City and Toronto, a soldier in Italy. Probably he would have been the same wherever he was born and whatever he did, but the direction he took in breaking away from a century of English prose was a particular turn that could only be taken via the Midwest, by someone almost totally alien to the overwhelming tradition of educated nineteenth-century talk and writing.

In school Hemingway was no doubt on nodding terms with Scott and Lamb and James Russell Lowell. But it must have been a very distant nod. What moved him most in those days were the shooting trips he took with his father into the Michigan woods. They were remembered in the blood, for they contained the elements of the essential romantic trauma to which he was most susceptible: lonelines male companionship, and the hunt, with its dignified promise of the first primitive contest, between human mettle and the doom of an animal's courage. In the Paris sawmill he wrestled with the task of recalling them and putting down "what really happened in action, what the actual things were which produced the emotion that you experienced. The real thing, the sequence of motion and fact which made the emotion and which would be as valid in a year or ten years was beyond me" in his earliest stories but he stammered toward "the real thing" in a crafty reworking of what has turned out to be the most powerful dialect affecting English writing in this century: the flat, self-defensive, sometimes poignant Midwestern vernacular, at once as bare as the prairie and as sinuous as the rivers that run through it.

Mark Twain was the Chaucer of this emerging language, and "Life on the Mississippi" and "Huckleberry Finn" have already the dawning grandeur of Hemingway's high noon brilliance a half century later. As a scholarly matter, an item for the critics who will be annotating these labour pains with infinite care when the language has travailed and been reborn again, it may be fascinating to recall that Mark Twain knew exactly what the ingredients were that brewed this fertile compound, a language absolutely unknown to literary men until its lated distillation in Hemingway. In an introductory note to "Huckleberry Finn," Twain says:

"In this book a number of dialects are used, to wit: the Missouri Negro dialect; the extremest form of the backwoods South-western dialect; the ordinary Pike County dialect; and four modified varieties of this last . . . I make this explanation for the reason that without it many readers would suppose that all these characters were trying to talk alike and not succeeding."

Fifty years later, the effect of the maturing Hemingway—"Men Without Women," "A Farewell to Arms," "Death in the Afternoon"—was in many places the same as Mark Twain would have had on the American literary critics if they had ever deigned to consider him anything more than a comic strip. Once again the professors were overcome with concern for the virgin purity of that old unheeding bastard—the English language. Hemingway acquired an irrelevant public fame as an American caught in the blustering attempt to make illiteracy literate. The attack on what was thought to be a self-conscious, tough-guy, nononsense style did not begin in Wyndham Lewis's 'Ernest Hemingway, the dumb ox," or end with Max Eastman's "Bull n the Afternoon." But in the mid-thirties the attack was at its height, because the imitators were succumbing in multitudes, from Hollywood to Glasgow.

What these critics missed, and most of the imitators could only guess at, was the natural element out of which Hemingway had created a personal style: nothing more mysterious than the ordinary vernacular of the Mississippi Valley as it may be heard coursing through the smallest spurts of conversation of garage mechanics, farmers, schoolboys, shopkeepers, soldiers—anywhere from Cairo, Illinois, to Duluth, Minnesota; and which these innocents could no more affect or

With prophetic blandness Gertrude Stein first saw the creative possibilities of this idiom, and Hemingway has paid her an unmistakable tribute. Yet this happened even earlier than Hemingway, and it was at once clear to the British and Eastern seaboard critics that Miss Stein was trying to pass off an obnoxious and precious gibberish as a chic variation on Dada.

Of course, it was all well to say that some odd or offensive style of writing has a natural root in some part of the world with which one is not acquainted. That may defeat the charge of affection but it does not support a plea to be making literature. I do not know by what chemical or mythical force Hemingway's writing at last imposed itself on the unwilling. But he acrieved in time "the real thing," transmuted the Midwestern ore, and passed on something precious into literature. It is a testimony of his universal appeal that in the Nobel country itself, his example is transforming Swedish. Even in France, which has admired him so long—but rather as a "brave homme" than a writer, the young who are not busy cross-breeding Faulkner with Boileau are writing and hoping they will sound as if Voltaire were born in Oak Park, Illinois.

What is easily overlooked in his great achievement, is the concentration of daily labour that has gone and still goes into it. He writes two or three hundred words at most, over some hours. He revises later in the day and is all in. He is as unflagging as Flaubert, not to find the adjective or the phrase but to isolate in the natural channel of a sentence that "sequence of motion and fact which makes the emotion." Thirty years ago he "was working very hard to get it" and to-day, far below the surface of his boisterous good fellowship, he still trusts to the clinical humility of the good surgeon who at 60 as at 30 must every morning cleanly cut the skin, stanch the blood, dodge the muscles, and lay bare the viscera with the same watchful tenderness of his student days.

And what is this vaunted but never defined "great achievement"? It is no more and no less than Dryden's: to have revolutionised the ordinary English sentence.

ROLAND PERDUE, 6'1", 195-pound tackle, was the only Tar Heel picked on the Associated Press All-Atlantic Coast Conference first team. The 20-year-old junior hails from College Park, Ga. As a freshman Perdue showed signs of potential greatness, and was elevated from the Jayvees to the varsity. But injuries hampered him in his sophomore year. This year the husky pre-ministerial student lived up to expectations in developing into the bulwark of the Carolina line.

Klochak Top Rusher, Bullock Led Passers

Don Klochak, the line crashing sophomore fullback, topped all other Tar Heels in rushing yardage for the 1954 grid season. Gaining 377 yards in 55 attempts, while losing only 11, the big fullback averaged 6.6 yards per carry. Halfback Connie Gravitte finished in second place, with a net gain of 348, followed by Larry Parker with 267.

Quarterback Len Bullock topped all passers, picking up 283 yards through the air lanes. Bullock threw 55 times, completed 31, three of them for touchdowns, and had five passes go astray into opponents arms. Following Bullock is Albert Long, with 200 yards gained, and Marshal Newman, with 193.

Halfback Ken Keller led the Tar Heel scoring, amassing 33 points in ten games. Keller scored four touchdowns, and kicked 11 extra points for his total. Larry Parker finished second, with 24 points, all via touchdowns, and Don Klochak third, with 20.

Don Klochak finished the season with the best punting average, as he punted twice for a 41.5 average. However Larry Parker and Albert Long were the workhorses of the punting department. Long booted 14 times for a 36.7 average, and Parker kicked 29 times for a 34.4 average.

End Will Frye led the team in pass receiving, gathering in 12 passes for 100 yards. Norman Lane grabbed 10 tosses for 112 yards and 1 touchdown to finish second, and Connie Gravitte snagged 9 for 140 yards. Halfback Larry Parker caught the most touchdown passes, as he gathered in three for scores.

Parker also led in kickoff returns, carrying the leather for 223 yards on ten attempts.

The Tar Heels as a team ground out 94 first downs on the ground, 36 in the air, and six via penalties. The team picked up 2,575 net yards, 1850 on the ground, and 725 in the air. Tar Heel passers attempted 141 passes, completed 68, and had 17 intercepted. The punting department averaged 34 yards per kick. The Tar Heels were forced to punt 53 times. On the dark side of the ledger, the Carolina squad was penalied 57 times for 515 yards.

McGuire's Quint In Front Whole Game; Lifson Sews Up Opener With Two Goals In Last Minute

ASHEBORO Dec. 1 (Special to the Daily Tar Heel)—Carolina's Tar Heels got their basketball season off to a fast start here tonight, downing the McCrary Eagles, 79-75, in a non-league battle.

Bill Langon paced the Eagles with 21 points. Sam Ranzino, former N. C. State All-American, tallied 13.

Rosenbluth saved the day for Carolina. The Tar Heels were ahead, 44-31, at intermission but McCrary got hot and almost caught the winners in the second half. Rosenbluth, however, also got hot. In the second half he racked up 18 of his 22-point total.

Carolina was ahead by a slim margin going into the final minute of play, but Lifson sank two buckets in the closing seconds to sew up the contest.

The Tar Heels were never behnd.

The Carolina scoring:

Vayda*	8	3	3	19
Rosenbluth*	8	6	3	22

Vol Coach Fired?

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 1 (AP)—The Knoxville Journal said tonight the entire Tennessee football coaching staff, from Head Coach Harvey Robinson down, will be dismissed when the men's contracts expire Dec. 31.

Quoting an anonymous "reliable source," the Journal added: "Bob Neyland will remain as athletic director. It will be up to the new coach to select his aides."

Neyland declined to comment.

Tennessee's Vols, under Robinson, had their poorest season in 3 years this fall, losing six games and winning four. They won only one Southeastern Conference game, from Mississippi State.

On Campus with Max Shulman

(Author of "Barefoot Boy With Cheek," etc.)

DECEMBER AND MAY: ACT I

Of all the creatures that inhabit the earth, none is so fair, so warm, so toothsome, as a coed.

This is a simple fact, well-known to every campus male, and, to most campus males, a source of rejoicing. But not to all. To some, the creamy brows and twinkling limbs of coeds are a bane and a burden. To whom? To professors, that's whom.

Professors, according to latest scientific advice, are human. Stick them and they bleed, pinch them and they hurt, ring a dinner bell and they salivate, comfront them with a round young coed and their ears go back, even as yours and mine.

But, by and large, they contain themselves. After all, they are men of high principle and decorum, and besides, the board of regents has got stoolies all over. So, by and large, they contain themselves.

But not always. Every now and then a coed will come along who is just too gorgeous to resist, and a professor—his clutch worn out from years of struggle—will slip and fall. White though his hair, multitudinous though his degrees, Phi Beta Kappa though his key, he is as lovesick, moonstruck, and impaled as any freshman.

But he's far worse off than any freshman. After all, a freshman can thump his leg, put on his linen duster, and take out after the coed with mad abandon. But what can the poor smitten prof do? How, in his position, can he go courting a young girl undergradunte?

In this column and the next one, I am going to deal with this difficult question. I will relate to you, in the form of a two act play, an account of a professor's attempt to woo a coed.

The scene is a typical office in a typical liberal arts building on a typical campus. In this shabby setting, we find two men, Professors Twonkey and Phipps. They are lumpy and bent, in the manner of English lit professors.

PHIPPS: Twonkey, a terrible thing has happened to me. A terrible, ghastly thing! I've fallen in love with a coed.

TWONKEY: Now, now, that's not so terrible.

PHIPPS: Oh, but it is. Miss McFetridge—for that is her name—is a student, a girl of nineteen. How would her parents feel if they knew I was gawking at her and refusing my food and writing her name on frosty windowpanes with my fingernail?

TWONKEY: Come now, Phipps, no need to carry on so. You're not the first teacher to cast warm eyes at a coed, you know.

PHIPPS: You mean it's happened to you too?

TWONKEY: But of course. Many times.

PHIPPS: What did you do about it?

TWONKEY: Looked at their knees. It never fails, Phipps. No matter how pretty a girl is, her knees are bound to be knobby and bony and the least romantic of objects.

PHIPPS: Not Miss McFetridge's—for that is her name. They are soft and round and dimpled. Also pink.

TWONKEY: Really? Well, I'll tell you something, Phipps. If I ever found a girl with pink knees, I'd marry her.

PHIPPS: It is my fondest wish, but how can I, a professor of fifty, start a courtship with a girl of 19?

TWONKEY: Very simple. Ask her to come to your office for a conference late tomorrow afternoon. When she arrives, be urbane, be charming. Ask her to sit down. Give her a cigarette.

PHIPPS: A Philip Morris.

TWONKEY: But of course.

PHIPPS: I just wanted to be sure you mentioned the name. They're paying for this column.

TWONKEY: Give her a Philip Morris.

PHIPPS: That's right.

TWONKEY: Then light her Philip Morris and light one yourself. Say some frightfully witty things about English lit. Be gay. Be insouciant. Keep her laughing for an hour or so. Then look at your watch. Cry out in surprise that you had no idea it was this late. Insist on driving her home.

PHIPPS: Yes, yes?

TWONKEY: On the way home, drive past that movie house that shows French films. Stop your car, as though on a sudden impulse. Tell her that you've heard the movie was delightfully Gallic and naughty. Ask her if she'd like to see it.

PHIPPS: Yes, yes?

TWONKEY: After the movie, say to her in a jocular, offhand way that after such a fine French movie, the only logical thing would be a fine French dinner. Take her to a funny little place you know, with candles and checked tablecloths. Ply her with burgundy and Philip Morris. Be witty. Be gay. Be Gallic . . . How can a nineteen year old girl resist such blandishments?

PHIPPS: Twonkey, you're a genius! This will be like shooting fish in a barrel . . . But I wonder if it isn't taking unfair advantage of the poor little innocent.

TWONKEY: Nonsense, Phipps. All's fair in love and war.

PHIPPS: You're right, by George. I'll do it!

(So ends Act I. Next week, Act II)

Committee Recommends Delay:

Rushing Report Tendered

The committee agreed that for this reason its attention should be focused on the major difficulties which have been evidenced at this University and that these difficulties should be evaluated from three points of view: (1) the student and student organizations, (2) the faculty, (3) the administration, representing the total University. While the limited amount of time did not permit an exhaustive study of the subject, the discussions resulted in a fairly accurate appraisal of the scope of the problem and the essential points of conflict. Our recommendations are based on these discussions within the above outlined framework, together with a review of material submitted by the Student Activities Fund Office and other interested individuals.

RUSHEE'S PROBLEMS

The committee agreed initially that one of its primary concerns should be the potential rushee and the problems with which he is confronted. As an individual experiencing university life for the first time, the entering freshman encounters a significant adjustment period. For many it is the first extended absence from home. For others, developing proper study habits and learning to accept additional responsibilities is a serious problem. While the length of the adjustment period varies with the background and the maturity of the individual, a minimum adjustment is required of all students. In the sense that the first few weeks on campus are important in establishing the tone of an individual's work, it was felt that as little outside pressure should be permitted as possible.

The observation was made that the grades of the average freshman in a fraternity were comparatively lower than the average nonfraternity freshman. This was attributed to some extent to a time-consuming rush schedule which occured at a time when many freshmen were not adjusted. It was pointed out that, in addition, this period was frequently the period when first quizzes were given.

The committee agreed that fraternities also required some time at the beginning of each academic year to prepare themselves both for their academic work and the related activities of the fraternity. The first few weeks of school did not seem to be adequate, considering the additional study requirements and the myriad activities of the fall.

DELAYED RUSH PERIOD?

The suggestion was made that individuals interested in fraternities would not have an opportunity to appraise them without a longer waiting period. At the same time, fraternity members could not evaluate the prospective rushees properly. For these and other reasons, it was felt that a rush period at the end of the first semester might be desirable. There were a number of significant points, however, which were brought out in support of an early rushing program.

Financially, fraternities are faced with a serious problem if a system of delayed rushing is initiated. Figures presented to the committee by the Student Activities Fund Office showed that at the present time fraternities would lose on an average between $50 and $100 per week operating at less than maximum capacity. It was explained that this situation was created by the fact that fewer boys were using the facilities. Records showed that as pledge classes joined the fraternities, they were able to absorb the costs of these operating losses so that by the end of the year most of the fraternities were able to break even or show a small profit. If pledging were delayed, the costs of joining a fraternity would be raised considerably and would keep some students who were now able to participate in fraternity activities from joining. A delay in joining a fraternity and the resultant stret, silence periods would cause undue pressure on freshmen and they would frequently be unable to meet socially with friends that they had known prior to coming to the University.

THE RECOMMENDATION

After carefully considering each of these matters, as well as several other less significant points, it was agreed that the following recommendation should be made: Frtaernity rushing should be delayed until the sixth or eighth week of the first semester and that an individual should be required to have a satisfactory academic record before pledging a fraternity. A satisfactory record was defined as not more than one unsatisfactory report at mid-semester. This was recommended with the thought that it would allow freshmen to get a substantial footing and yet not burden fraternities financially. A mid-semester rush period seemed to solve the major aspects of all the problems considered. By removing rushing from the quiz period and also requiring a satisfactory academic record, the recommended system would minimize much of the interference between rushing and the academic process. The committee felt that if a person with academic difficulties undertook pledge responsibilities, it would be harmful to him, the fraternity and the University, and was, therefore, not desirable.

The committee agreed also that a person not eligible under this system should not be permitted to pledge a fraternity until a .75 average was obtained. This would prevent students taking additional responsibilities when they were poorly situated academically and would result in a higher level of fraternity scholarship. The committee agreed that first semester difficulty was not necessarily indicative of a poor college record; therefore, they felt that the latter policy should be included as a recommendation.

Finally, the committee felt that it would be appropriate to submit some additional recommendations on rushing in general. It was agreed that the present system evidenced a number of problems both for the faculty and the students concerned. These recommendations are:

On Sunday afternoon, Monday night and Thursday night, rushees will visit all fraternities from which they received invitations. Fraternities will then send out a second set of invitations. The second week of rushing will take place on Sunday afternoon, Monday night and Thursday night. Shakeup night will be Friday and pledging will be after Saturday noon, when rushing will end.

The committee recommended the above schedule for the principal purpose of permitting minimum interference between fraternity rush and academic work and, in addition, to clarify some of the administrative problems of rushing. It should also eliminate some of the unsatisfactory methods of informing students they cannot pledge a particular fraternity at that time.

Dr. Ordway Has Joined Staff Of UNC School Of Medicine

Dr. Nelson Kneeland Ordway, formerly of Louisiana State University, has joined the School of Medicine staff here as professor of pediatrics, it was announced by Dean W. Reece Berryhill of the Medical School and Dr. E. C. Curnen, chairman of the Pediatrics Department.

Dr. Ordway, who was professor and head of pediatrics at LSU School of Medicine, has a long record of research, publications and European study and travel, in addition to his formal academic training.

He received his M. D. from Yale after undergradate study at Yale, Ecole Internationale in Geneva, Switzerland and University of Freiburg, Germany. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Alpha Omega Alpha.

During World War II, Dr. Ordway spent four years in war gas research at Yale, where he was research assistant in pathology. He continued at Yale from 1945 to 1947 as instructor in pediatrics.

Dr. Ordway joined the LSU faculty in 1947 as assistant professor of pediatrics, and was later advanced to associate and then full professor.

His professional affiliations include American Pediatric Society, Sodiety for Pediatric Research, American Academy of Pediatrics, American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Medical Association and National Association for Retarded Children, for which he has done research.

Dr. Ordway held a World Health Organization fellowship in cardiology, working chiefly in France and Sweden, in the summer of 1952. He has recently returned from Zurich, Switzerland, where he represented The American Academy of Pediatrics at the International Pediatrics Conference on Electrolytes.

A member of the Council of the Society for Pediatric Research, Dr. Ordway is also listed in "Who's Who in the South and Southwest," and American Men of Science, for 1949.

His research has been centered on war gas poisoning; abnormal physiology of congenital heart disease; fluid, electrolyte, and acid-base balance of infants and children, and miscellaneous laboratory methods.

Nineteen study projects carried out by Dr. Ordway, some in collaboration with other researchers, have been published in medical journals or presented as papers at medical meetings.

LEGISLATOR NORWOOD BRYAN'S GASOLINE MAP
. . . looks like the roads from The Hill lead to cheaper petrol

Legislature Survey Shows Gas Prices Are Up In Chapel Hill

By LOUIS KRAAR

Norwood Bryan, member of the student Legislature's Gasoline Committee, took two weekends to poll the gas sellers. And a look at his results readily shows that——for the most part—the further you move from The Hill, the cheaper you can buy gas.

Regular gas averages 37 cents and 35.2 cents for premium locally. In Carrboro, the price lowers to 31.36 cents on regular and 34.2c on premium. Bryan said he checked seven Chapel Hill stations and 11 in Carrboro. An eight-mile drive to Durham will yield gas prices which average 31.9c for regular and 34.7c for premium, according to the Bryan survey.

And in Raleigh, 30 miles from The Hill, regular averages just 28.9 cents and premium 32.6 cents

Bryan pointed out that he checked only standard brands—Esso, Gulf, Texaco, Pure, etc. This would eliminate the possibility of the minor, cut-rate brands cutting down the averages.

GAS IMPORTANT

With approximately 1,300 student cars here, the price of gas figures in a big way for a considerable segment of the University.

Realizing this, the student Legislature established a Gasoline Committee. University Party legislator Max Crohn heads the group.

The Gasoline Committee met before the Thanksgiving holidays with two dealers, three Esso Company distributors, and Harvey Daniel, executive secretary of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association.

The two dealers offered no solution to the question of higher Chapel Hill gas prices, according to Bryan. But the Esso representatives declared that their company is charging 2.1 cents lower on the wholesale price. The lower Raleigh price, the dealers said, is to aid dealers in what they call a "subnormal market condition."

Bryan described the "sub-normal" conditions as heavy competition.

But what causes all Chapel Hill gas prices to run highter?

(The next article in this series will give the Chapel Hill gas dealers' views on the question.)

Resident M. D. Wins Grant For Research

Dr. Dan. A. Martin, resident in medicine in North Carolina Memorial Hospital, has been awarded a research followship in Medicine by the American College of Physicians, according to an announcement made by Dean W. Reese Berryhill of the School of Medicine here.

The fellowship award was for $4,200 and will cover the period July 1, 1955 to June 30, 1956.

Research covered by the fellowship is in connection with studies of the influence of adverse life situations and emotions on the development and course of congestive heart failure.

A native of Benson and a former resident of Raleigh, Dr. Martin received his B. S. degree from the University and did two years' medical work here. He completed work for his M. D. at Harvard Medical School in 1952.

Phys. Ed. Meet

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation will be held here today.

The program will be attended by classroom teachers, health and physical education teachers, coaches, administrators, supervisors and recreation leaders from all parts of the state.

Included will be personnel from all levels of the education profession, from elementary school through college, according to Miss Nell Stallings, president of the Association.

All sessions will be held in Woollen Gymnasium.

Legislature Is Opposed To Any Hike In Student Fees

Letters To State's Legislators Will Object To Tuition Raises

By DICK CREED

The student Legislature last night reiterated its stand against any raise in tuition and dormitory fees by okaying a letter to be sent to every member of the state Legislature.

The letter states that already student fees are "as high as a great many of our students can pay."

It states further that the student Legislature has gone on record against any raise in student fees and that "we therefore hope that you as one of the (state) legislators will find it possible to agree with us and oppose such legislation should it be introduced.

It is anticipated by both the administration and student body leaders that a measure will come before the next session of the General Assembly calling for a raise in tuition and dormitory fees here to help offset the cost of building a new dormitory.

Administrative officials here and at State College and Woman's College have come out against the proposed hike in fees.

Charles Hyatt (SP), author and introducer of the letter and the resolution to send ,it said, "By sending this letter we can call to the attention of our legislators that we are already paying as much as we can.

He said that "many students are here on the shoe string" and that any hike in fees would be "like telling thm to gt out of school."

Charles Ackerman (UP) opposed the bill saying that it would be better to raise student fees to make up the deficit than to raise the cost of food and books on campus.

Said Ackerman, "A tuition raise is necessary to make up the part of the budget which it is up telling them to get out of school."

He said, however, that the "basic idea "of the letter and resolution was "fine"

Dave Reid (SP) favored the resolution and letter and recalled to the student Legislature the "fine" fight against Saturday classs waged by students two years ago.

He said that when the General Assembly meets, "a pressure group should descend on Raleigh and make the students' feelings well known."

GMAB's Polls Committee Now Taking Opinion On Swain Hall

The Polls Committee of GMAB is now taking a student opinion poll for the department of radio, television and motion pictures.

Earl Wynn, chairman of the department, and his staff have submitted the poll.

The poll consists of 12 questions with parts under each concerning the areas of radio, television and will concern general effectiveness and the preference for programs on each medium.

The 600 students who will receive the poll have ben picked as random.

Annette Levenson, chairman of the Polls Committee, said the poll will be one of the major ones for the year.

Ancient Music Tonight

William Klenz and the Collegium Musicum of Duke University will present a program of early instrumental and choral music tonight at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

The performance will include Medieval, Renaissance and Baroque instrumental and choral music, both sacred and secular.

Among the comosition to be heard are William Byrd's "Quia Illia," the 'Ave Vera Virginitas" of des Pres, Binchois's "A Solis Ortu Cardine," a motet by Lymburgia, and chansons and madrigals by Goudimel, Arcadelt and Monteverdi. There will also be a group of anonymous carols.

Spokesman for the English Club, sponsor of the program, invited all students and faculty members to attend. There will be no admission charge.

'Mama' To Be Read

The Community Drama Group will meet next Sunday at 8 p.m. in the assembly-exhibition room of the University Library. John Van Druten's play, "I Remember Mama" will be read, under the direction of Elizabeth Deutsch. There are parts in this play for men, women and children and everyone is most welcome to come and participate in the reading.

University Women Set 'Chinese Sale' Tonight

A special feature of the AAUW-Penland Craft Fair will be a Chinese auction to be held tonight from 8:30 to 9:30.

In a Chinese auction, secret prices, known only to the auctioneer, are set in advance for each article. Bidding begins and proceeds usually by raises of a nickle. Each bidder puts into a cup only the amount by which he has raised the bid. When the pre-set price is reached, a bell rings, and the buyer wins the article.

Besides the jewelry and woven products to be on sale, the Fair, sponsored jointly by the Chapel Hill branch of the American Association of University Women and the Penland School of Handicrafts, will feature weaving demonstrations, folk tales and folk dancing.

At 8 o'clock tonight Miss Lucy Porgam will tell the story of the Penland School. Tomorrow at 2 p. m. A. P. Hudson will tell folk stories.

The Fair will be held in the Roland Parker Lounges of Graham Memorial today from 2 p. m. until 10 p. m. and tomorrow from 10 a. m. until 5 p. m.

Debate Squad

The University Debate Squad will debate the question, "resolved: the United States should extend diplomatic recognition to the Communist government of China at the Appalachin Mountain Debate Tournament of this weekend. The squad left yesterday to attend the tournament, which is being held at Boone.

Phys. Ed. Measure Approved

BY NEIL BASS

The '53-'54 UNC student Legislature in an absence-spiked closing session last evening passed with little opposition a resolution which will, if carried into effect, exempt veterans from the physical education program entirely if they complete and successfully pass the fundamentals test. The University Party-Sponsored resolution further stated that veterans who fail to pass the test would be required to participate in the program for one year taking phys. ed of their choice.

GAS PRICES ASSAILED

The assembly also heard a report from Max Chron (UP) which related the findings of a gasoline price survey. Chron said that "Chapel Hill gas prices were on the average higher than those of surrounding cities primarily because tankers had to transport the gas farther and a reasonable profit had to be made by the establishments to survive." The committee findings showed that a certain Carrboro station boasted prices considerably lower than other local establishments.

DATE TICKETS THRASHED

A Student Party introduced resolution which opposes the $3.50 that students must pay for guest tickets to athletic events was referred to the Student Welfare Board on the basis that it was "prepared too hastily."

Bob Harrington (SP) proposed a substitute bill for a "flaw in the election law." The flaw, accordng to Harrington, was such that "persons who attended summer school without the designated amount of hours credit are declared ineligible to run for political office."

A report of the Band Improvements Committee cited that the band was receiving no monatory aid from the University and that the student Legislature would introduce at the next session a bill to appropriate such funds

Nine SP legislators and five UP solons were absent from the meeting.

Faculty Men Take Part In S. C. Program

Seventeen members of the University faculty, including 11 from the English Department, participated in three-day sessions of the South Atlantic Modern Language Association held recently at Columbia, S. C.

Representing the English Department were A. P. Hudson, George F. Horner, Hugh Holman, George Harper, H. K. Russell, J. O. Bailey, Sam G. Barnes, W. J. Barnhart, Raymond Adams, Clifford P. Lvons and Norman Eliason. Several of the group took part n the program and presented papers.

Holman was selected chairman of th American Literature Section for next year's meeting.

'Fury' Moving Along

Sound and Fury, a musical comedy, including a cast of shapely UNC coeds with witty dialogue, will be presented in Memorial Hall Dec. 18 at 8 p. m.

The two act play concerns students attending Goofus University—a satire on UNC campus life. "Pajama Dame," first act of Sound and Fury, borrows lyrics from the Broadway musical hit, "Pajama Game." "Ah, Paris," the second act, has songs from "Can-Can."

Appropriate phrases have been added to the songs by writers of Sound and Fury. Miss Bo Bernardin and Joe Raff, Max Warner, pianist, together with other talented musician, will furnish accompaniment for the performance.

The Dance Committee of Graham Memorial is sponsoring the play. Director Bernardin and cast are holding rehearsals daily in GM's Rendezvous Room and Memorial Hall.

The cast includes Elen Ozon, Bobbie Moretz, Tom Davis, Kem Dowry, John Whitney, Carl Williams and Pat Sietz.

Make-up and costume are directed by June Craft, scenery by Dave Partington and Jim Buyer and choreography by Blynn Derning and Billy Barnes.

In Front Of BVP:

Ed Perry Used To Wrestle With Tom Wolfe

BY BOB EBERLE

THOMAS WOLFE
. . . "That Man With The Wild Eyes"

There are not many people in Chapel Hill who can say that they knew Thomas Wolfe or remembered when the University Inn was standing, but if any student drops in the University Restaurant, he can get first-hand information from an employee named Edward Perry.

It was Ed's first year as a waiter at the University Inn in 1916 when Thomas Wolfe first came to the University, and it was then that their friendship first started. In 1920 Thomas Wolfe graduated, and in 1921 the University Inn burned down, but those days have not been forgotten; as Ed recalls it, "They were great days."

"He was a nice man," Ed recalls of Thomas Wolfe, "and he was not very big, but he had the wildest eyes of any man I have ever seen. Most of his friends were from Asheville and round abouts, and we use to have a lot of fun playing and wrestling on the campus in front of BVP. Battle Dorm was just built then, and Wolfe lived there while he was a student."

Thomas Wolfe never forgot

Plaudits

President Creasy's fraternity rushing committee, after three months of mulling the matter over, has come up with an intelligent set of suggestions that should be adopted by the Inter-Fraternity Council.

Here is how the committee would change the rushing procedure:

1. Postpone rushing until the sixth or eighth week of the first semester.

2. Require a satisfactory academic record of a rushee before he could pledge a fraternity.

4. A stretching out of rushing into two weeks with "off-nights" for fraternities and rushees.

These reforms, if put into effect, would be a marked improvement over the present system, which shows consideration for the fraternities only.

The most important suggestion is the first one, which calls for a delayed rushing period. It would work a two-fold advantage for new students: It would give them time to establish a solid academic beginning, and time to absorb a little Caroliniana from the point of view of a dormitory student—a point of view he may prefer to keep, and one he should definitely know something about before making the big move to Fraternity Court.

In promising to work hard for the adoption of these changes, President Creasy, himself a fraternity man, has shown that he has the interests of new students in mind and that he is willing to try to protect them from the disadvantages of too much fraternity rushing too soon and with too little preparedness. He deserves the thanks of the campus for that.

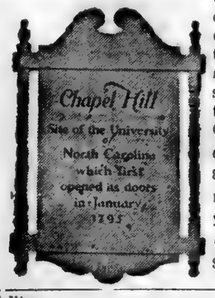
Mr. Ervin, Mr. Scott, & Appleton's Pride

The martyred Senator McCarthy, in his post-censure swan-song, told the American people: "I am being censured because I dared to do the "dishonorable thing of exposing Communists in government." Men voted against the Senator from Wisconsin day before yesterday who have been disturbed about Communism much longer than he.

No North Carolinian who concerns himself with the balance of national affairs of Senators Ervin and Scott when the Sencan fail to take pride in the action and vote ate censured McCarthy.

We think Senator Ervin's pre-Thanksgiving oration, a crafty and eloquent statement of senatorial duty in the matter, tripped the lever that led Wednesday to a 67-20 vote for censure on the first count. When the censure movement began to totter on its underpinnings, Mr. Ervin's shoulders, as well as any, held it suspended.

And Mr. Scott began what we believe will be a fine voting record by joining his colleague in voting for censure. North Carolina's part in bringing justice to bear in the Senate Hall was no little one; we are grateful for the state's representation there.



Look! Cultcha!

The week has ben notable for a cultural aura, an appealing touch of finer things. For example, the Carolina Quarterly is out—and a temperate, literate example of campus writing. The University Symphony night before last presented a pleasing, well-rounded concert to a filled-up Hill Hall. And look what's been going on in Raleigh: Chapel Hill students and townspeople played big parts in the annual meetings of the State Art Society, the Roanoke Island Historical Association, the North Carolina Society for the Preservation of Antiquities, (pause for breath), the State Literary and Historical Association, the North Carolina Folklore Society and the North Carolina Poetry Society.

It is enough to give rise to a hopeful idea: That maybe the Graham Memorial poolroom and the booth in the back of Spero's, revered institutions that they are, do not represent the ultimate in University thought and opinion after all.

(SP & UP) Party Girls Move Upward

Louis Kraar

WHOEVER SAID that this is a woman's world (and I suspect it was Adam) might have been looking at the campus political parties.

The coeds aren't exactly running the massive Student Party and University Party, but they're moving up like members of their sex in the national Congress.

The Student Party picked a coed for vice chairman, Amy Cooke, and for secretary, Donna Ashcraft. Still another female won a place on the coveted (at least in party circles) SP Advisory Board—Pat McBane.

The University Party, not to be outdone, picked a coed for secretary, Jane Cocke. Since the UP has no formal advisory board, it's more difficult to appraise the place of the coed in the party. But I'm assured that they're vital in party work.

The recently-elected 84th Congress has more women members than ever before in history, so apparently the campus parties have taken their cue from Washington.

Of the seventeen women in the Congress to convene next January, you might be interested in knowing that seven are Republicans and nine are Democrats.

Although I haven't checked the rolls of the campus parties (if rolls exist), the coed membership in both parties here seems about equal. All of which goes to prove little, except that even the political arena is whirling with women in this women's world.

DON GEIGER, whom the SP picked as chairman the other night, told his party that student government has been too filled "with Mickey Mouse politics."

Geiger said that he knew politcs were vital, but that parties should remember their purpose—"to serve the students."

Since the legislative branch of student government has been largely in the hands of the SP, Geiger actually was chiding his party as well as the opposition.

The Geiger talk is a refreshing breeze of frankness for the smoke-filled rooms. And now that he's chairman, perhaps he will act to remove Mickey Mouse politics (which sounds like something bad; but exactly what, I'm not sure).

FROM THE University of Kansas comes the story of coed Joan Gavin, who had to pass as many as 1,200 admirers on her way to engineering drawing class.

The five foot, 5½ inches tall blonde even tried going to class by car, but the auto was halted by swirling masses of men.

"At first I thought it was fun, but not any more," she told reporters over the holidays.

And she added, "Next Monday I'm going to walk. And I'm going to bypass the main streets where crowds gather, and go to class by the back way."

Yes, there's nothing like advertising, Miss Gavin.

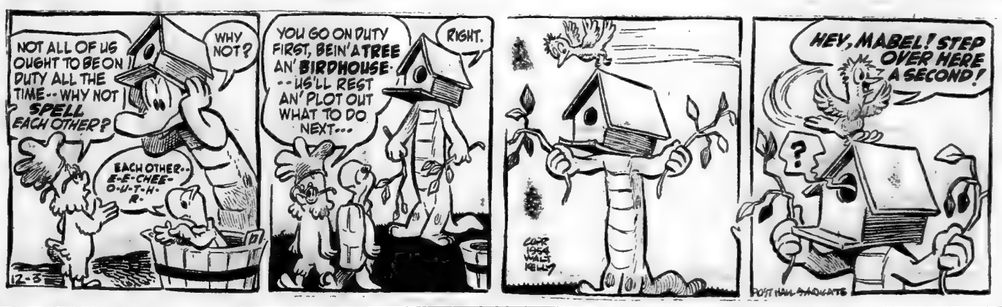
'This Isn't The Kind Of Blockade I Had In Mind'

Dulles and The 13 Men

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Dulles had known about the 13 U.S. fliers held by China ever since the Korean truce. They had been mentioned frequently in Peiping radio broadcasts, so anyone listening in also knew about them . . . Nothing was done to secure their liberation . . . Prediction: Look for Moscow to intervene with Red China to free the 13 Americans as part of the current coexistence overtures. . . . Ike is not going to be able to squeeze Senator Knowland out of the Senate GOP leadership no matter how often Knowland punctures and pillories the Eisenhower foreign policy. Ike has been pretty peeved at Knowland's speeches, but when his errand boy, Vice President Nixon, talked to GOP Senate solons they wouldn't stand for bouncing Knowland. . . . incidentally, they didn't know whether "McNixon" was speaking for himself or the President, because Dick would like nothing better than to get his fellow Californian, Senator Knowland, demoted. . . . Sen. Herman Welker of Idaho mistook the new Senator from Nebraska, Roman Hruska, for a Senate aide and started ordering him around. Hruska promptly told Welker to get his own glass of water. . . . Friends of Colorado's Gene Millikin, one of the most respected members of the Senate, would like to work a deal whereby he would resign to let Governor Dan Thornton take his place prior to January 1. Thornton would step down from the governorship to be succeeded by Lieut. Gov. Allott, who becomes Senator in January. Allott would then appoint Thornton to the Senate. . . . If this triple play is too long delayed, Big Ed Johnson, Democrat, will step into the governor's mansion and the deal won't work.



Dixon-Yates Dickers

The Dixon-Yates combine has been dickering with the famed Steve Hannegan public relations firm to improve its relations. They need it. (Only trouble is that one of Ike's closest golfing partners, William E. Robinson, is head of the Hannegan firm.) . . . When Congressman Charley Howell, Democrat, who ran for the Senate in New Jersey, got a letter from the Democratic National Committee asking for $100 to pay for the recount of Senate votes in Ohio, he wrote a caustic note that if the Democrats really wanted to pick up another Senate seat they could spend their money recounting ballots in New Jersey. There, he pointed out, Clifford Case, Republican, has a margin of some 3,000 votes, while in Ohio, George Bender, Republican, has a 6,000 margin over Senator Burke, Democrat. . . . Democrats say they are so tired of having Republicans count them out in Hamilton County, Ohio (Cincinnati), that it's worth $75,000 (cost of the recount) to teach the Republicans a lesson. . . . The Food and Drug Administration has given a clean bill of health to use of boric acid in baby powders. After a careful examination, FDA found boric acid beneficial.

John and Joe

Republican leaders are wire-pulling the White House to get John Lodge of Connecticut made Ambassador to Portugal. He speaks a lot of languages; should make a good envoy. . . . When Joe McCarthy complained to the Carroll Arms Hotel about housing the committee for an effective Congress, the committee was booted out. Later Joe gave the hotel a plug on the Senate floor. . . . Joe, plus his henchmen, spend so much time at the hotel that a McCarthy table is reserved permanently.

Reaction Piece

Dean & Harry Foster & Ike, Foreign Policy

David Mundy

U. S. foreign policy in the Truman-Acheson era was inept to the nth degree, criminally and traitorously inept. Alexander the Great and all the Caesars, in centuries of conquest, never obtained control of so much territory and so many people as did the Communists during the few short years of the Trumah-Acheson policies, plans and plots. The measuring stick of history, 600,000,000 people lost to the communists, is so great that it seems almost presumptuous to lay it against the little man from Missouri.

With the change of administrations two years ago, many citizens expected some improvements in foreign policy.

They, we, or at least, I, have been seriously disappointed. Secretary Dulles has been playing for the plaudits of the middle-of-the-roaders and very occasional kind remarks from the political left.

Of course, there have been some successes. Harry's little police action in Korea has been turned into something resembling a truce. We weren't able to pull France's colonial chestnuts out of the fire in Indo-China, but we did help douse the fire. Behind the scenes, fancy U.S. footwork managed to heal some of the scars left by British imperialism in Iran. Other U.S. negotiations — threats of cutting off aid — managed to soothe assorted Jewish-Arab difficulties in the Middle East. And the policies, while building a strong defensive alliance for Europe and the Americas, even managed to find a friend in Asia; Pakistan.

Success? Yes, but even under the Acheson "let the dust settle" philosophy some of them might have been achieved.

Since World War II our policies have at the very best been defensive plays. In the Acheson-Truman era the Communists the turns and won handsomely. In the "Eisenhower-Dulles" era of proposed compromise and "possible co-existence" the Communists still call the turns. Only now, thanks to our stronger foreign policy, they don't win so much. They still make all the initial moves. They still decide when "what" will happen. Meanwhile, harum-scarum U.S. policies try to plug innumerable holes in the old and eroded dikes.

New dikes, a new and aggressive foreign policy are needed. At the very least, we should engage in a critical review of present policies.

The Communists, still consolidating their positions, can only be aided by a policy of the again proposed co-existence.

They have for years been a threat, only lately recognized by many "liberals." Why should we not do a little "threatening" and "bluffing," now that the times are auspicious? Don't say that it wouldn't be cricket.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some tthings, minimizing others . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was noodling along Campus Cameron when I saw him. I trusted he was in the pink?

"Roger!" The Horse exclaimed. "That word you used — pink! Don't you know that Battling Nell Lewis, of the Raleigh Sunday Noose & Observer, may be listening?"

So what?

"Whenever Battling Nell runs out of copy, she gets onto the Commies-At-Chapel Hill theme," The Horse explained. "And whatever the reason, the usually kindly Battling Nell does not seem to be over-burdened with things to say, of late."

I hadn't noticed that. Was The Horse sure?

"Yup," The Horse nodded with authority, slumping down on the lea in the lee of The Old Well. "Any day, I was expecting her to cut loose with her usual tirade agin' Northerners and other furriners—a reliable if somewhat shopworn stop-gap device of Nell's when the copy flows sluggish—when up jumps the FBI with Junius Scales, and up popped Battling Nell with the equally shopworn Reds-At-The-Hill hogwash."

"No," The Horse agreed. "The FBI knew where Junius was, and presumably had known his where abouts for some time past. At any rate, they picked him up pronto as soon as a North Carolina court came up with an indictment against him. I do feel somewhat chagrined on Battling Nell's account, however, in this regard: Junius Scales is not alone not a Yankee or other type of dangerous furriner, but worse, is a dyed-in-the-cotton Southern gentleman, suh. And worst, his grandpappy, y-clept Scales, likewise, was once a governor of North Carolina."

"I wouldn't mention that too loudly, if I were you, Roger," The Horse said nervously. "Need I remind you that within the past century there is historic precedent for just such activities in this and in neighboring Southern states?"

Oh, well, that was different. Battling Nell had some ancestry engaged in that attempt at violent overthrow. However, thanks for the warning . . .

"Wait and see," The Horse predicted, "a certain rural newspaper popped into the hue and cry with a sort of facsimile of Battling Nell's recent tirade There is working for this sheet, if his journalistic imitations can be called working, a character who is so sterile of ideas that he even stoops to copy the Lewisian sterilities anent Chapel Hill, with emphasis on anything of a derogatory nature, being a Dookian and thus inclined that way by bent if not by birth."

Oh, yes! Wasn't this the Cretan who had learned that Junius Scales lived in P. O. Box 62, Chapel Hill, N. C., Post-Office?

"All by his little self," The Horse confirmed, "and from a printed sheet said Scales caused to be distributed with that return address on it. Forthwith, with the evidence of a return-address to back him up, this pundit of pungent journalism announced that Scales lived in Chapel Hill."

And Battling Nell Lewis?

"Ah, Battling Nell has what she describes as a 'fat folder' on Communistic activities at The Hill," The Horse stated. "Any day now, she intimates, she will open it — a latter-day Pandora, no less!"

And, The Horse thought of all this . . . what?

"I think," The Horse said sagely, "that The Battler would do better by herself and her readers to quit sitting on her big, fat folder and start to make with her demonstrated writing ability again."

And, what for the country-newspaper Cretan?

"Wump!" Mr. Wump answered for The Horse.

An Alumnus Speaks On The Duke Game & Officials

Editor:

Won't you please publish this in the interest of better officiating at public sports events.

At the Duke-Carolina football game last Saturday, about five minutes before the end of the game at the time Duke made their last touchdown, a Carolina man lay on the ground and a Duke player walked over and kicked and stamped him in the face several times. The Carolina player was taken out of the game unable to play further. There were five people in my party and we were up in the near top of the stadium. All five people saw the event and everybody around us saw it. Another Carolina player was substituted and the game went on. There was no penalty, no objection by any of the Carolina coaching staff. People in the stands looked amazed.

When officials allow things like this to go on, it's time to give the game back to the Indians.

While I am on the subject I can't refrain from relating that a player was put out of the game and his team penalized 15 yards for arguing with the official. I suppose the referee's kick in the pants "hurt worse" than several kicks in the face with heavy shoes and football cleats. Let's hear their answer . . . .

A Cello Concert

Last Sunday, Graham Memorial presented another of its "Petites Musicales," featuring William Klenz, violoncellist.

Klenz, who has studied widely abroad as well as in the states, presented a program which included works ranging from the Eighteenth Century to the present day. The latter was represented by his own "Ballade: 1954," which he played for the first time publically.

The "Ballade," with its sections of pyrotechnics and eloquent lyricism, proved a fitting vehicle for Klenz's prowess. His tone is rich, sonorous, and remarkable for its wide range of dynamics.

Klenz was assisted by William Trevarthem on the piano. The performance was very well attended by an enthusiastic crowd, despite the disagreeable weather.

Although the concert is the last planned for this semester, Graham Memorial plans to present seven more concerts next year, beginning in February. Among next year's programs are a wood-wind quintette, two piano recitals and a program of Gilbert and Sullivan music.

Over The Hill

By
FRED BABSON

Local fans will get their first glimpse of the 1954-55 edition of Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Heel cagers when Clemson invades Chapel Hill tomorrow night.

Last Wednesday night the cagers got their season underway with a surprisingly close victory over the semi-pro McCrary Eagles in Asheboro. As was expected, Lenny Rosenbluth, Jerry Vayda, and Al Lifson were the spark plugs for the locals. Vayda and Lifson were the big guns last year for the varsity, while Rosenbluth was shattering all scoring records as a frosh. If McGuire could find two more worthies to work with his big three, he could sit back and relax. To date, he is still looking. Paul Likins and Tony Radovich rounded out the starting five against McCrary. Radovich, a 6'2" junior, came here three years ago from Hobcken, N. J., with practically every scoring record for the state of New Jersey in his possession. Last year as a sophomore he started a couple of tilts, but the 190 pounds he carries around seems to affect his speed adversely. Likins, a 6'9" senior, came here from Elkhart, Ind. (17 miles from Notre Dame) strictly on his height. That remains his forte, as he shoots very little, seldom scoring over ten points. His value lies in grabbing rebounds. Incidentally, Big Paul is a physics major. He is so brilliant in that field that special exams are made up for him. He has the highest scholastic average in the University, and is president of Phi Beta Kappa. So, what if he's not another George Mikan?

Young is a 6'6", 200-pound husky, who looks more like an All-American gridder than a basketball player. However, the well-built sophomore made quite a name for himself while playing for Adelphi Academy in New York City two years ago. He averaged 27 points a game his senior year in high school. Playing in the famous Glen Falls, N. Y., high school tournament, Young led Adelphi to the finals, only to be defeated by Staunton Military Academy, whose star, incidentally, was Lenny Rosenbluth. Young was runner-up high-scorer in that tournament, and runner-up in the "Most Valuable Player" selection. Rosenbluth walked off with both these honors.

Goodwin, 6'1" sophomore, transferred to Carolina from Steton Hall two years ago, which necessitated a one-year lay-off from inter-collegiate competition, in accordance with NCAA rules. Out of action last year, the Belleville, N. J. lad wth the red hair let his weight soar to 194, and appears still to be in the process of regaining his old form.

McCabe, 6'3" forward from New York, saw considerable action last year as a sophomore, starting several games. On a radio broadcast last year, McGuire made the statement that McCabe probably had the best jump shot in basketball. In addition to his deadly eye, McCabe snares a lot of rebounds.

Green, a junior transfer student from Chowan Junior College, is brand new here. The 26-year-old veteran from Zebulon (U. C.) does not possess the finesse of the New York and New Jersey cagers, but he jumps under the backboard as if he had springs in his legs. When this is added to the fact that Green stands 6'5", it offers a valuable asset in McGuire's brand of "control" ball.

Last, but not because of the lact of talent, is Dick Ward. Hailing from Wilson (N. C.), where he was something of a sensation in high school, sophomore Ward is one of the few home-bred products on the squad. A slender 6'1", Ward was second only to Rosenbluth in scoring on last year's frosh quintet. In several games he actually outscored the masterful Rosenbluth. Ward's constant hustle is motivaed by a burning desire to play, but this exercises no unfavorable effect on his craftmanship. He has a sure eye and a varied assortment of shots, in addition to a speedy floor game.

Carolina's 1954 Soccer Squad

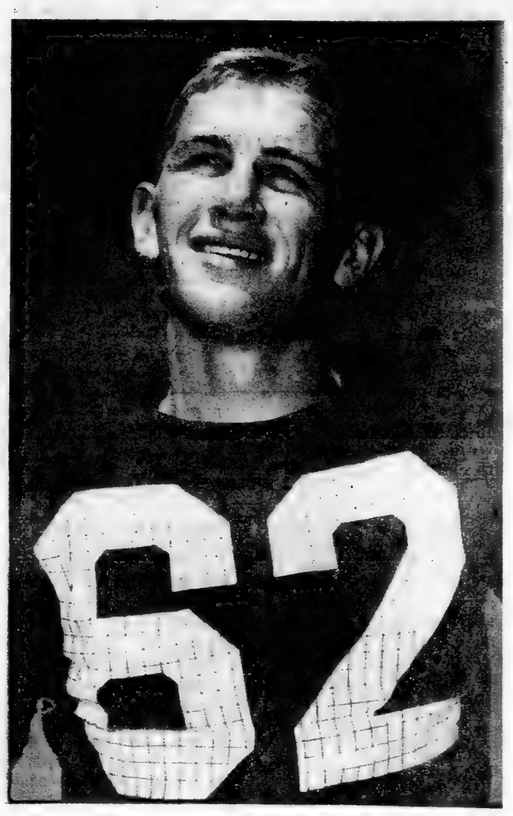
Soccer Team Feted; Lane Chosen Captain

BY DICK ARMSTRONG

North Carolina's 1954 varsity soccer squad was honored Wednesday night in a banquet held at the Carolina Inn. A fine turkey dinner and auld lang syne talks by Coach Marvin Allen and the graduating seniors constituted the highlights of the evening. Senior Jerry Russell, captain of this years team, was "emcee" for the after dinner speeches.



Calvin Lane, who suffered a broken leg in a mid-season game, was elected captain of the 1955 squad. Lane had been out of action for the last half of the schedule as had Al Korschum, whose leg was broken in a practice session early in the season. Lane and Korschum were presented with gifts by the team, as was Coach Marvin Allen.

The UNC mentor was well pleased with the performance of the team this year, and stated that the team spirit and will to win were the dominant factors in the fine comeback of the team after losing their first three games. Carolina finished second in the ACC behind Maryland's repeating champions.

The overall record for the year was three wins, four losses, and one tie. But the Tar Heels won the important games and emerged with a 3-2-1 record in the conference. The three wins consisted of two victories over Duke and one over N. C. State. The team reached its top form in mid season, and after its three opening losses, finished with a fine 3-1-1 record for the remainder of the schedule.

Coach Allen has high hopes for his 1955 team although he is losing eight seniors, five of whom were starters. The graduating seniors are Jerry Russell, Chip Bryant, Don Gladstone, Noel Sullivan, Harry Brown, Dick Dodson, Sonny Clifton, and Wilbur Jones.

All-Conference End

WILL FRYE, Carolina's 190-pound, six foot, left end, was named on the first string All-Atlantic Coast Conference team as chosen by the Atlantic Coast sportswriters. Frye's devastating defensive play brought rave notices from the press practically every Saturday during the season. When the final statistics were examined, it was noted that the aggressive lad from Hickory was also the Tar Heel's leading pass-receiver, having caught 12 passes.

Tar Heel Lambda Chi Alpha's To Play Duke Chapter In Tilt

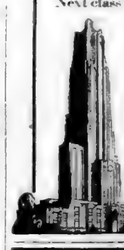
Game Scheduled For 2 P. M. in Kenan Stadium

Tar Heels To Operate From "T" Formation

BY BOB EBERLE

At 2 P. M. tomorrow afternoon, Kenan Stadium will be the site of a Carolina-Duke football game for the second time this year. In a benefit game of regulation tackle football, the North Carolina chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha will play the Duke chapter with all proceeds going to the Methodist Orphanage in Raleigh.

The North Carolina team, which has been practicing for the past three weeks, will be running from the T-formation with Bo Thorpe calling signals at quarterback, and will have a backfield averaging 162 pounds and a line averaging 187. Because of Duke's heavier team they are slightly favored over Carolina, but the Tar Heel Lambda Chis are hoping that their fast half-backs, Johnny Wooten and Lawrence Conder, and fullback, Charlie Weiss, will help to pull an upset.



The North Carolina Athletic Association has helped considerably by letting the Lambda Chis have access to football gear, and giving full support to the program. Tickets are being sold in the form of 25 cents donations, and all proceeds will go to the Methodist Orphanage in Raleigh.

Assistant freshman football coach, Dick Lackey, will act as head official at the game which the Lambda Chis hope will become an annual affair, and Bill Starrett will serve as head cheerleader.

Mural Office Announces Team, Individual Fall Sport Winners

The Department of Intramural Activities yesterday announced the team and individual winners for the fall intramural program. The program is directed by Coach Walter Rabb with the invaluable aid of student assistants George McGinty and Bill Williams.

The point system sports—tag football, wrestling, and volleyball—received the usual enthusiasm from spectators as well as participants. 77 teams participated in the tag football program alone, which included 34 fraternity squads and 33 dormitory teams. More than 800 players saw action in a total of 280 scheduled games.

Zeta Psi and Law School 3 won the team football honors in the fraternity and dorm brackets, respectively. The Zetes also won the campus championship by defeating the lawyers. Runners-up in the two divisions were Winston 2 and Delta Kappa Epsilon.

The team wrestling champions also went to Zeta Psi and Law School. A total of 135 individuals participated in 130 matches, with 19 fraternity and 15 dorm teams entered in the program.

The volleyball champions will be determined this week when the Med School and Phi Gamma Delta squads tangle for the campus championship. Med School defeated Law School in two straight games to take the dorm honors.

Tennis was the dominating activity in the all-campus sports division. This division, which includes tenns, golf, badminton, fencing, and chess, is not under the point system. In the novice tennis doubles, Lino Castillejo and Mike Furhata defeated Bill Mast and Bob Rutledge by 6-0 and 6-2 scores. In the novice singles, Dave Smith was the winner over Mike Furuhata. There was a total of 74 participants in the tennis tournament.

The fall golf tournament has not been completed. Qualifying players have been grouped into four flights. The flight that each player is in depends on the score he received in his qualifying round. Two flights have been completed. Jimmy Sykes won over Joe Correll in the Championship flight and Charley Phillips defeated Thad Wright in the second flight. The remaining two flights will be played in the next few weeks.

Doug Kahn, newly-appointed inter dormitory social chairman, is now making plans for the championship chess play-offs between dorms. The schedule for the matches will be announced in a few days.

No intramural fencing matches have been held as yet, but fencing instructor Pebley Barrow has a strong campus team which is planning to have future matches with other schools. In the badminton tournament, Old West defeated Stacy 1 for honors in that sport.

In the popular Co-recreation Sports Party, which was held on November 8th, the paired winners were the Sigma Nu fraternity and the Alpha Delta Phi sorority. Dave Elliott and Jean Ellis were the individual point winners. 13 mens' and 13 womens' organizations were entered in the competition, with a total of 250 participants entered in the games. There were 14 events in which the teams competed for top honors. In the archery contests, Amy Morse was the winner in the women's division, while Chi Phi's Charlie Bowen and Jim Carraway tied for the men's trophy.

IDC Says That Three-Man Situation 'Inhibits' Study

Council Heads Answer

BY ARCHER NEAL

Charges that the UNC honor system is outmoded and out of date have been answered by the chairmen of both the Women's and Men's Honor Councils. The charges were implied in an editorial which appeared in the Nov. 18 issue of The Daily Tar Heel.

Miss Nancy Whisnant, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, and Herb Browne, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, presented their views on the implications in the editorial at the request of the Daily Tar Heel.

Kuralt said there were four changes which must be made in the present system of the Honor Council if the rights of defendants under the law are to be adequately protected. They are:

1. The accused should in all cases hear all of the testimony against him.

2. The accused should in all cases be supplied with counsel.

3. The accused should have the right to subpoena witnesses through the court.

4. The accused should have right to an open trial.

It was in reply to these four proposed changes that Miss Whisnant and Browne made their particular comments.

In regard to the first, that the defendant has a right to hear all testimony, both chairmen said that no defendant is ever denied the right to hear all the testimony that is presented, nor the right to face his accusers. In practice of the Men's Honor Council, the accused usually leaves the room when the testimony of accusers or witnesses is given, especially when the defendant is pleading guilty. This is to save unnecessary embarrassment both to himself (the defendant) and to the person reporting the alleged violation. In all cases he is informed of all the charges and any testimony that is presented to the council, whether or not he is present when the testimony is given. The accused has the right to question any persons giving testimony in his case if he so desires, they said.

In the Women's Honor Council, all defendants hear all the testimony against them. It is one of the constitutional rights for the defendant to face her accuser and hear all the testimony against her. She also has the right to cross-examination.

In reply to the second change that was advocated, both Browne and Miss Whisnant said that the accused always has the help of a council member in his or her case if the accused so desires such help. Miss Whisnant said that the procedure rules of the Women's Honor Council state that the defendant "has privilege of assistance by a member of the council in her case, if requested." She always has counsel from the server of the summons. The server never votes. The chairman serves as prosecuter in investigating the case, and does not vote, except in case of a tie, Miss Whisnant added.

Browne said the Student Government Constitution provides that any student charged with violating campus law has the right to assistance by a member of the council, if requested, in presenting his case before the Honor Council. In some cases it isn't necessary, but the defendant is never denied the right to counsel. If the defendant receives this assistance from a council member, that member does not vote in the decision of that case.

As for a prosecuter, the Men's Honor Council does not serve in the same manner as a court of law, but strives to bring out all the evidence, for and against the defendant. One member of the council, usually the chairman, investigates the case, seeking all the facts, and not just these that would lead to a conviction, Browne said.

Defendants have the right to call witnesses though both honor councils, but neither of them has the power to force a witness to appear. However, it has not been in the experience of either chairman that a witness who has been called has refused to appear, but both councils have always had the fullest cooperation in this respect, he added.

Precedent of both councils is that all cases are closed, unless the defendant requests an open trial. This is in protection of the defendant, to keep him from any embarrassment or inferences that might be drawn from his appearence before the council if his case were made public. In the past few years there has been no request by a defendant for an open trial, Browne said.

Yes, Governor...

RALEIGH, (AP)—Gov. Hodges said yesterday that in looking for an administrative assistant for his office he had wanted a man who was not actively involved in politics.

He indicated today he had found such a man when he announced appointment of Paul Johnston of Chapel Hill, an assistant director of the Institute of Government, to fill the post.

"Is Johnston a Democrat?" a reporter wanted to know.

"I forgot to ask that but I hope the lord he is," said Hodges, a Democrat himself. "I'd be embarrassed if he isn't."

Long Started Telling Story Six Years Ago

DURHAM, (AP)—Ralph Vernon Long, the star of the current Communist conspiracy hearings in Florida, has been citing chapter and verse on his former comrades for six years now.

A stocky, affable man of middling height, he joined the Communist Party at the University of North Carolina in mid-1946, his freshman year. He went to the FBI in the spring of 1948 with the declaration that he was "through" as a red.

In May, 1952, while a sports writer with The Durham Sun, Long wrote a series of 15 articles for The Sun. He had this to say about himself in the first article:

"I was not born in Russia. I do not wear dark glasses: Nor do I smoke a pipe. I have no whiskers. My real name is Ralph, not Igor. I was born in Fayetteville, N. C., hardly a radical community. Perhaps some of you were too. I have lived in Durham since my second or third year. I attended the Durham city schools. I volunteered for United States Army Air Force service in June, 1942.

"I met my first Communist, a woman, in southern California in early 1945. Shortly after, I asked to join the communist party but was told that no servicemen were allowed in the party at that time. I was honorably discharged from the army in February of 1946.

"I entered the University of North Carolina in June, 1946. Two or three months later I joined the Communist Party. While at the University I twice interrupted my training to attend Communist training schools, one at a beautiful little summer camp on the Hudson River in up-state New York and the other in a downtown building in New York City.

"I attended my last Communist Party meeting in the spring of 1948 but was still active in various "liberal," that is "front," organigations in which my fellow "comrades" operated. I went to the FBI at about this time, telling them that I personally was "through" but not informing them otherwise of Party matters.

—Waiter Knew Wolfe—

Perry, and Perry never forgot Wolfe, and after Wolfe had made a name for himself he came back to Chapel Hill and looked up Perry. "He was thin while he was here at school, but when I saw him in the late thirties he was close to 300 pounds." It was friendships such as these that made Perry return to Chapel Hill in '45 after about a five-year absence, and since then he has not left.

Of the other people here at the University about the same time as Thomas Wolfe, Perry recalls having had such friends as Judge Pless, Lemore Coleman, Dr. Beatty, and Thurmond Catham, who gave Perry his coat for his wedding. All these men knew Thomas Wolfe, and, "all of them hung around together," says Ed.

The campus has changed since the days of Thomas Wolfe, but Perry still remembers the days when Tom came in the University Inn to eat, and Perry would call out, "Here comes that man with the wild eyes."

Beshara Out; Three Dorms Vote Against 'Brigadoons'

BY NEIL BASS

The three man room situation, according to a report made at the Interdormitory Council meeting Wednesday evening, has resulted in the moving out of numerous third men to town residences because of conditions which "inhibited proper study."

The report in its original form was that "there would be no three man rooms in the upper quad next semester." But J. E. Wadsworth, housing officer, yesterday said the reason behind the vacancies was basically that "certain of the overcramped dorm men were declining scholastically due to inconducive study situations and were forced to assume rooms in town." Wadsworth went on to say that "the matter was becoming extremely serious."

BESHARA RESIGNS

Manning Muntzing, council president presented at the session a resignation from John Beshara, former social chairman, who has departed from the university reportedly "to assume a job in New York."

A proposed ammendment to the IDC by laws which was to give Beshara voting powers (he was an appointee and was therefore denied the priviledge to cast a ballot in council affairs) was defeated by the rules committee.

During the course of debate on the ammendment, numerous orators assailed the appointment of committee chairmanships to persons who were not duty elected by the individual dormitories.

DAMAGED ANTENNAS UNSETTLED

The damaged antenna problem, which was appealed to President Gray, was referred by the Consolidated University head to Chancelor House. In a report to the council, however, it was stated that J. S. Bennett, director of operations, had definitely rejected any assistance, monetary or otherwise, for the Hurricane Hazel-bent antennas. The report stated that some of the antennas had been repaired at the dorm's requests by University employees at prices "slightly above those of private concerns."

THREE DORMS REJECT "BRIGADOONS"

Mangum, Connor and Whitehead Dormitories, it was announced, have rejected the "Brigadoons" proposal. The tabulation now stand at 12 for and three opposed with several dorms yet undecided. The proposed one-dance-per semester project in its original form was that all dorms must approve before the measure would come into effect. Muntzing has said, however, that the portions of the "Brigadoons" by laws which the three dissenting dorms opposed will be revised.

TRUSTEES FAVOR "BLAZERS"

Bob Barlowe, blazer committee chairman, reported that "sale of the UNC seal-stamped coats on campus is now in sight." According to Barlowe, the visiting committee of the Board of Trustees, when confronted with the idea, said, "the appearance of blazers on campus has been too long removed."

COMMUNITY DRAMA GROUP

The Community Drama Group will meet Sunday at 8 p. m. in the assembly-exhibition room of the Library. John Van Druten's play, "I Remember Mama," will be read under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Dutsch. Copies of the script may be obtained at Stella Lyon's newsstand in the post office.

Petitions Still Out

The two petitions calling for continued segregation were still be ing circulated yesterday.

"A flood of telephone calls, letters and telegrams" supporting his anti-integration petition to the Governor and state Legislature was reported yesterday by Dr. W. C. George, who originated his petition on Nov. 18.

"The reaction in these communications received by me indicates approximately a 30-to-one sentiment in favor of my position," said Dr. George.

Two representatives of the group of UNC students who are circulating an anti-integration petition to Governor Hodges in campus dormitories said this week that they already had between 700 and 800 signatures and expected to get many more before winding up their activities when the Christmas recess starts.

Considerably over a majority of the students contacted have signed the petition, they said. The two said they represented a group of about 20 students who decided to start up the new petition independent of that of the Dr. George group just before the Thanksgiving holidays.

"In the light of the Supreme Court opinion on public school segregation, we the undersigned students at the University of North Carolina respectfully wish to register with you our protest to this unconscionable violation of the fundamental American principle of states' rights as guaranteed in the Tenth Amendment to our Constitution and supported by such great statesmen and patriots as Jefferson, Calhoun and Lee. This intolerable and unworkable decision, we believe, is all the more dangerous since it is the first example in our judicial history of completely one-sided sociological and psychological theories being substituted for constitutional law hitherto consistently upheld by the very same Supreme Court.

"Finally, we trust that you will fulfill the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people of this state by using every means at your command to preserve, by legal methods, segregation in the grammar and high schools as well as the undergraduate departments of the state institutions of higher learning in North Carolina."

Bar-Illan To Return To UNC

Graham Memorial Student Activities Board will again present David Bar-Illan, concert pianist, Dec. 10, 11. Bar-Illan, who appeared here on the "Petite Musicale" program at Graham Memorial 31, is touring the states with an Israeli student group of four, sponsored by the National Student Association.

The purpose of this tour is to increase student knowledge of Israeli student life and to improve international understanding between Israel and the United States. Arranged entirely by these students, the tour features lectures, music, folk songs and dancing.

Students on the tour with Bar-Illan are Miss Rachel Hadas, a student of music, folk-dancing and folk-singing; Yaakov Saphis, a former news editor and announcer for the Hebrew Desk of the Voice of America (Saphir is curently working for his Ph.D. degree in the Graduate School of Political Sciences at Columbia University) and Yehuda Amir, who is now studying social psychology at New York University and working towards his Ph.D. degree.

VOL. LVII NO. 64 | Complete UP Wire Service | CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1954 | Offices In Graham Memorial | FOUR PAGES TODAY

Scheduled For Jan. 4:

THE TRANSMITTING STATION for WUNC-TV, resting high on Terrell's Mountain in Chatham County, lacks only the finishnig touches before it is ready for the station's opening on Jan. 4. The tower to the left actually rises 798.5 feet into the air, some 1,548 feet above sea level. Although programs for the Consolidated University's educational station will originate at the Woman's College, State College and UNC campuses, they will all be transmitted to an area within 100 mile radius from the Terrell's Mountain transmitter.

University's TV Tower Tops Washington Shaft

BY BIFF ROBERTS

TERRELL'S MOUNTAIN—Before the days of television it was hard to imagine that North Carolina might someday erect a structure which would completely dwarf the Washington Monument.

But Chatham County can now claim the state's tallest man-made structure—the antenna tower for the television station WUNC-TV, Channel 4, which is slated to open Jan. 4. The tower of the three state schools of North Carolina stretches 798.5 feet into the air.

The tower here rests on Terrell's Mountain, 750 feet high, in Chatham County, and this elevation means that the antenna atop the tower is 1,548 feet above sea level. From the antenna all of the television programs from WUNC-TV's three-studio and mobile unit network will be transmitted.

The programs will actually originate from the University studio here; from the State College studio in Raleigh; from the Woman's College in Greensboro, or from WUNC's telecruiser, the mobile unit which will enable WUNC-TV to pick up "live" programs anywhere within 35 miles of Chapel Hill, Raleigh, Greensboro or Terrell's Mountain.

Additional towers, 100 to 200 feet high have been erected at the three studios for transmission of the programs produced. Alamance County is the site of a microwave relay station which connects the Woman's College studio with the Terrell's Mountain transmitter.

Erection of the Chatham County tower was a major construction task. Over 225 tons of concrete were poured into the foundation.

It was necessary to suspend approximately two and a half miles of guy wires (cables three-fourths inch thick and weighing over 18,000 pounds) to hold the tower securely in place.

Add the fact that the total weight of the 800 foot tower is over 73,000 pounds and it is easy to see that it was no tinker-toy job.

The towers here and in Raleigh and Greensboro, along with the microwave relay station, presented almost as many problems as the building of the transmitter tower. More than 124 tons of concrete went into the foundations for these smaller towers, which were well-tested by Hurricane Hazel.

The studios at the three members of the Consolidated University are just about the same size, each having approximately 10,000 square feet of working space.

The fact that construction of all elements was a race against time also complicated matters, but now the towers have been erected and WUNC-TV, Channel 4, is almost ready to begin daily telecasts.

Tar Heels' Draft Status:

Law May Change

"The recently proposed decrease in the armed forces manpower will effect the draft status of the college man in that he will be called, inall probability, one year later than under the present Selective Service regulations," announced Col. F. C. Sheppard, UNC veterans advisor in a report yesterday.

The plan to be enacted by June 30, 1956, has been called by Col. John S. Moore, director of personnel in the Department of the Defense, as the "biggest change" that the Eisenhower administration has brought about in the Defense Department.

The present requirements for deferment as stated in the Selective Service regulations are to the effect that students are eligible to avoid the draft if: they rank scholastically in the upper 50 of their class as freshmen, upper 66 of their class as sophomores and upper 75 as juniors to be eligible for deferment as seniors. Graduate students must maintain an academic average which places them in the upper 25 of their respective classes.

Favored Blue Phantoms Meet Clemson Tonight

BY BERNIE WEISS

Carolina's Tar Heels, already with one victory under their collective belts, go after their first Atlantic Coast Conference win tonight, playing hosts to Clemson's Tigers.

The Tar Heel freshmen will open their 1954-55 schedule in a 6:15 o'clock preliminary against the Atlantic Fleet five.

The Sporting News rated the varsity a 15-point favorite over Clemson recently, but Carolina mentor Frank McGuire isn't putting much stock in the prediction. "I'm very superstitious," he said, "and won't make any predictions in advance. I have a lot of respect for each one of our opponents and I can't take Clemson lightly.

Clemson has a 0-1 record at the present, losing its only game to Presbyterian. Last night the Tigers were scheduled against Duke on Blue Devil territory, but no result of the game was available this morning.

McGuire rates his whole team as being very much improved over last year's quint, and has also seen much improvement since the first drills of the year. He commended each one of the starting five for his work against McCrary Wednesday night (Carolina 79-McCrary 75) and singled out Len Rosenbluth, Paul Likins, Al Lifson and Jerry Vayda for special praise.

"Rosenbluth looked very good. We're an improved team because of him, and he saved the game for us against McCrary," McGuire said. The six-five sophomore scored 22 points to lead the Tar Heels in that department, but 18 of the markers came in the second half and kept the Carolina squad beyond reach of the Eagles.

'Likins is very much improved, too," McGuire continued, "especially under the backboards. Lifson is rounding into shape and is good while still not at his peak. He's a good outside shot. Vayda is probably the steadiest player on the team."

In regards to Tony Radovich and Frank Goodwin, who alternate as the fifth man on the floor, McGuire pointed out that a good game from either or both of them could easily mean the difference between a victory and a loss.

'I Knew It Would Be A Tough Job. . .'

George Prillaman Feeds The Campus

By MITCHELL BORDEN

From dawn until dusk, 12 hours a day, Lenoir Hall remains open, feeding approximately 6,000 students and faculty members daily. Hundreds of pounds of food is prepared and sold daily as the long lines wax and wane in one of the busiest buildings on the campus.

"Lenoir Hall was built in 1940," he said," at a cost of approximately $250,000. To rebuild the same thing now would probably approach $1,000,000. From 1942 to 1945 Lenoir Hall was used as a dining hall for pre-flight naval cadets and officers. It has four serving lines and a snack bar which will serve and set student 1,000 t a time. Only three line and the snack bar are used as there are not enough customers to warrant the last line. It would take another 2,000 students to necessitate its opening.

"Lenoir Hall is a non-profit operation and is one of the self-liquidating enterprises on the campus," said Prillaman. "It has to pay all of its expenses without any outside help, the same as any other commercial restaurant. To give an illustration of this point, I offer you last year's operation costs. In the fiscal school year ending June 30, 1954, we served 722,000 meals. We made exactly .0007 of one cent profit on each of these meals. In the best year the dining hall ever had, that of 1946-47, we served 1,546,000 meals, and yet we lost almost two cents per meal."

Prillaman is himself an alumnus of the University, having graduated in 1947 with a BS degree in accounting. After his graduation he went to Greensboro, where he worked for the firm of strand, Skees & Jones, certified public accountants. A year later he returned to the University as an accountant in the Department of Food Services and Public Lodging. In 1951, Leigh Skinner, manager of Lenoir hall at that time, suffered a polio attack and was crippled. Prillaman then became manager of Lenoir Hall and Spencer Hall cafeterias.

"When I accepted the job of manager," he said, "I knew it would be a tough job to satisfy students with such wide-range tastes. There are the students, for example, just from home, who expect the food to taste exactly like mother's.

"There are the hollow men, the athletes, who crave food by the gross. There are the girls who "pinch pennies" and, they hope, their figures, by dieting on salad greens and pie a lamode. There are some who skip hot meals, and try to compete with the dining hall by consuming crackers with cheese or peanut butter in their rooms. Some would have the dining hall kept open around the clock to satisfy capricious appetites.

"So the manager of a dining hall must do the impossible. He must think of health and good eating Xhabits even if he student doesn't. He must do what he can to evoke an atmosphere of relaxation and friendliness. He must contrive food that that is well-balanced, colorful, tasty and nutritous. Volume of food doesn't necessarily appease the appetite. What you eat counts more than how much.

"He must be strict in such matters as sanitary food handling, refrigeration, preservation and storage. He must see that no food is wasted even if he doesn't know how many guests to expect for dinner.

"This does not include, however, scraping the waste food from the dishes and reusing it, "he added, smiling.

"Inflated food costs," Prillaman continued, "are a headache. The cry is always for more food at better prices. Beyond this even, a student's dining hall will be as much a part of his education as everything else that goes on at college. Students rapidly learn the value of a dollar, and how much of it has to go for food, which is an education within itself. Our dining hall employs approximately 125 students, giving them valuable experience which will be used in later life.

LENIOR HALL MANAGER GEORGE PRILLAMAN
. . . A Greater Variety Of Food, An Overall Better Dining Hall

"The manager should emphasize the social as well as the educational advantages for students by giving them a place where they can choose what to eat and with whom to eat. If they are limited to a dormitory or fraternity dining room with family style or cafeteria service, a fixed menu and one group of fellow students, they won't get the practice in making intelligent choices which is the essence of education."

As to how Lenoir Hall is rated in regards to other dining halls on college campuses thoughout the south, Prillaman said:

"We can well be proud of the physical plant and the variety, prices, quantity and quality of the food served here at the University. I have visited many colleges and universities, such as Mississippi State, the University of Louisiana, Tulane, Duke, N. C. State, USC, VPI, VMI and the universities of Virginia, Maryland and Tennessee. Of all the places I visited both on my latest tour while attending the All South Restaurant Show in New Orleans and on other tours, only the dining hall at the University of Louisiana surpassed ours. The types of food served at the other colleges were not markedly different from ours, the only exception being that we served a greater variety from which the student may select his meals.

"Our aim," he said, "is to give the students as much for their dollar as we possibly can and still remain a self-liquidating enterprise."

What Shakespeare Thought Of Dulles

A lot of good typewriter ribbon has been expended since January, 1953, trying to characterize John Foster Dulles, President Eisenhower's Secretary of State. Dulles is the man whose rhetorical powers conceived phrases like "seizing the initiative," "massive retaliation," "agonizing re-appraisal;" he is the man whose diplomatic tact let him say, at the swearing in of the new Mexican ambassador, that he was glad to swear in at last an ambassador to a "good country."

On what meat doth this our Dulles feed? What is he really like? The best characterization by far that we've seen to date is one by Harry Golden, brilliant and witty editor of the Carolina Israelite. In a recent article, "Shakespeare, Marlow, and John Foster Dulles," Mr. Golden writes:

"What John Foster Dulles thinks of Shakespeare we do not know. But what William Shakespeare thought of John Foster Dulles is as plain as anything can be. He has drawn him full length in the character of Polonius.

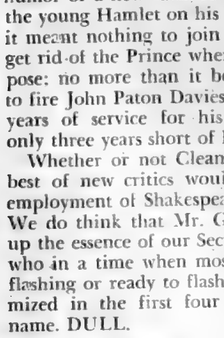
The prime minister flapping around in every room of the castle, listening to this, eavesdropping on that;; running with every bit of good news to the king in the hope that in the telling thereof he will also get the credit for its creation. A man full of pious phrases and wonderful cliches, "to thine own self be true," and everything is always "all right;" a man who would stop at nothing to keep his job.

A man always smiling and looking wise but completely lacking in sentiment and humor or a new idea. A man who bounced the young Hamlet on his knee, but to whom it meant nothing to join in a conspiracy to get rid of the Prince when it suited his purpose: no more than it bothered him at all to fire John Paton Davies after twenty-three years of service for his government, and only three years short of his pension."

Whether or not Cleanth Brooks and his best of new critics would approve of this employment of Shakespeare we don't know. We do think that Mr. Golden has scooped up the essence of our Secretary of State, one who in a time when most things are either flashing or ready to flash can best be epitomized in the first four letters of his last name. DULL.

Vanity Fair

In this day of hell-for-leather modernism on college campuses, we are pleased to report that the good, gray University of Virginia has changed not one whit from the genteel time of its founder, Thomas Jefferson.



We follow the refined fortunes of this thoroughbred school in the pages of its newspaper, The Cavalier Daily. (How perfect the name; how cavalier!) This is a newspaper that, for example, does not report a student's criticism of the university president as a "blast" but as "an expression of animadversion" or of "displacency." The editor's remarks are likely to take the form of a scolding of new men on the commons for not wearing their ties to class or an expression of opinion on the military maneuvers of Jackson and the Old Stonewall Brigade.

If further evidence is needed to convince you that we have here in the Atomic Age an institution right out of the colonial period, we offer up this headline, which stared up at us from last Tuesday's Cavalier Daily: "VISCOUNTESS TO GIVE BROWSING ROOM TALK."

How decorous! How debonair!

Carolina Front

Sen. Morse's Daughter Is Independent

Louis Kraar

SENATOR WAYNE Morse, the man between the parties, advised his daughter, a freshman nurse here, to stay out of politics when she started at Carolina this fall.

Attractive Amy Morse, though, found herself running for social chairman of her class. And what's more she won.

When I asked Miss Morse the other day if she had a political future in mind, she exclaimed, "No, no, horrors!"

Between laughs, she explained her proceedure for keeping out of "political arguments" on campus. "When someone starts talking politics, I just get busy doing something else," she said and laughed again. (Apparently, independents are a happy lot.)

I asked what her dad said about her running for an office against his advice.

"Oh, he said, 'Congratulations,'" Miss Morse reported with the terseness of a telegram and another pleasant laugh.

Apparently, the Senator's daughter is just as independent as her dad. But I guess we all expect that from a good social chairman these days.

Sitting around thinking about my brief chat with Miss Morse, I tried to picture a partisan social chairman of the freshman class. Perhaps planning freshman socials doesn't raise any grave political controversies. But I remembered the carnival one group had a while back at which one pinned paper tails on a donkey. I'm sure with Miss Morse's pleasant nature, future socials—if they involved the old tail-pinning game— would provide elephants as well as donkeys.

"COY, COY—coy, coy," he shouted between cupped hands. And the cows in the field near us came running for their handout of hay.

The cow-caller was E. G. Merritt, who runs a service station on the Pittsboro Road. I had asked for him at his station. and they told me to go around the corner to his barn. Mr. Merritt was pulling down bails of hay to fed his cattle when I arived.

The cows, who just a moment before the call had roamed and mooed about the field, answered the "coy, coy" like Duke football linesmen.

My visit was for asking about gas prices, but after the business was over we talked about cows, who for all I know were talking about us while they ate.

"I've learned one thing," he said. "Never buy a yearling during a Democratic Administration if you're going to sell it during a Republican Administration."

A FLORIDA State University student turned up at school the other day — after authorities found his car bullet-marked car and couldn't find its owner.

His story: He faked his disappearance because he feared he would fail studies at school,

It seems that a guy with that much ingenuity could bluff his way through a couple of classes. Matter of fact, he sounds wise enough to even want to study.

IF YOU like muffins and gumdrops, here's a diet for you.

Six coeds at UCLA are on a daily diet of one muffin, capsules of minerals, vitamins and amino acids, butterscotch pudding and a handful of gumdrops, with an occasional bottle of soda water.

The diet is part of a project to determine the requirements of the body for the approximately 20 amino acids which make up protein necessary for health.

I'm not up on my amino acids, but the professor conducting the experiment said the six girls who liked on a similar diet last semester neither gained nor lost weight and had no difficulty keeping up with their college schedule.

'It Needs Something At The Bottom'

You Said It:

The Effect Of The Super-Bombs

Editor:

I should like to point out several inaccuracies which appeared in the articles by Charles Childs on the possible dangers to human beings from thermonuclear reactions. In doing so, I might add, that it is not my purpose to minimize the devastating potentialities of such reactions. I am rather objecting to the exaggerations of numerous writers who, for the sake of glamour, tend to distort the facts.

The possible effects of atomic irradiation on human populations have been and are being studied by an American organization—the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission—in Japan. This organization was established in 1947 with headquarters and laboratories in Hiroshima so that it might have immediate access to the largest possible numbers of survivors of atomic irradiation. Results of the research carried out during the past seven years have been presented at meetings of various medical groups, and appear in a good many scientific and medical journals — both American and Japanese. They are, by no means, secret.

The research in genetics involved an exhaustive study ot over 60,000 infants born in Hiroshima and Nagasaki since the atomic bombs were dropped on those cities. Contrary to what Mr. Childs asserts, there is no evidence to date which indicates an increase in the incidence of stillbirths or congenital malformations among children born of parents exposed to the bomb. Much has been conjectured about severe changes in the genes of irradiated human beings. However, it is not correct to say as Mr. Childs did, that these changes are "likely" to have occurred.

Positive evidence of deleterious effects of atomic irradiation has been, in general, very difficult to find. There are, however, two diseases which have occurred among the survivors of Hirosmia and Nagasaki, and which have been attributed to atomic irradiation. These are (1) cataracts, and (2) leukemia. Recent studies have shown that the incidences of both these diseases were increased relative only to proximity to the center of the explosion, the greater his chance of contracting cataracts or leukemia. In none of the studies, however, could leukemia or cataracts occurring in individuals who were more than 2500 yards from the center of the explosion be attributed to atomic irradiation. It is therefore very difficult for me to believe that, "These (cataracts) also appeared among persons who were facing the explosion 30 miles away."

That the destructive potential of the newer thermo-nuclear weapons by far exceeds that of the smaller bombs which first appeared in 1945 is a well-know and frightening fact. The awesome force of these weapons and the physical dangers involved in their use should be impressed upor all of us in many more articles such as those written by Mr. Childs. However, there is really no need to exaggerate about them. These weapons are already beyond our comprehension.

Marvin A. Kastenbaum

Mr. Kastenbaum challenges three statements in my article.

To the challenge of the probability of likelihood of change, I would refer him to the first two volumns of "Radiation Biology" which contain many predictions of changes resulting from irradiation. Numerous articles have also been published giving the theoretical changes.

The second challenge is that "there is no evidence to date which indicates an increase in the incidence of stillbirths or congenital malformations among children born of parents exposed to the bomb."

A report of the malformations can be found on page 18 of the October 1952 issue of Nucleonics.

On miscarriages and stillbirths, the United Strategic Bombing Survey (1946) reported:

"Of women in various stages of pregnancy who were within 3,000 feet of ground zero, all known cases have had miscarriages. Even up to 6.500 feet they have had miscarriages or premature infants who died shortly after birth. . . . Two months after the explosion, the city's total incidence of miscarriages, abortions, and premature births was 27 per cent as compared with a normal rate of six per cent."

The November 1953 preliminary report on the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission, "The Effects of Exposure to the Atomic Bombs on Pregnancy Termination in Hiroshima and Nagasaki", has this conclusion about stillbirths:

This was for births between 1948 and 1952, three to seven years after the blast.

Of "gross malformations," it showed that the results for Nagasaki, which had the last and stronger bomb, were in agreement with genetic hypothesis. The significance of difference between unexposed and exposed parents was 0.340.

Mr. Kastenbaum's last remark concerned the appearance of cateracts on persons 30 miles from the blast. To this it must be said that some comments on a report delivered to the Seventh Congress of Ophthalmology indicated that these had been observed. The complete report was not available.

It appears that Mr. Kastenbaum is interested in effects of nuclear weapons, but I cannot understand how the warnings of such men as Nobel Prize Winner H. J. Muller and the results of scientific investigations constitutes "exaggeration."

I do not see any "glamour" in the death of 106,000 people, regardless of the cause of their death.

As a final remark on this subject, I hope that he, along with other people, will consider the Commission's statement concluding its report:

"It is important to emphasize that the conditions of these observations, as well as the fact that they are confined to the first post-bomb generation, permit the detection of only a small fraction of the total genetic effect of exposure to an atomic bomb."

Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, visiting here, put in a plug for the "elite" system of education. He said our schools should try to pick a few comers among the students and give them the works, leaving the dullards to plod along. It is a nice theory and an old one.

The catch seems to be how to determine which are the comers. So often it happens that sleepy boy in the back of the room, fumbling with his jackknife and gazing out of the window, turns out twenty years later to be Robert Frost.

On the whole, an intellectual elite has little more to be said for it than a social elite or a racial elite. An elite system today would be a proper mess anyway; everybody of any consequence would be under investigation, and all the brightest boys and girls would be getting cautionary letters from their congressmen, advising them not to open their traps, lest their remarks be used against them in later life.

Credo

'Tonight I Wed Your Brother, Dear John...'

Dick Creed

So you don't like hillbilly music?

I don't either. But I try not to look down my nose at the people who do.

There are all kinds of people who listen to the stuff and say they like it.

There's the boy I know here who has a record collection with Hank Snow, Ernest Tubb, Hank Williams, and Tex Ritter on the same shelf with his Como, Sinatra, Dorsey, Miller, Liberace, Bach, Brahms, and Beetoven.

Then there are those people up in the foothills of the Blue Ridge, where I come from, who like hillbilly music and nothing else, mainly because they haven't heard much else.

My hometown's two radio stations devote most of their broadcast day to hillbilly disc jockey shows.

Most of the music comes off King records, but some of it is produced on live shows by local talent.

Uncle Henry's program is a hillbilly disc jockey show, but he is famous for his unique, country Rube treatment of commercials between records.

Uncle Joe first started there as the ramrod of the Blue Mountain Boys. Now he has taken over an afternoon pop record show. He shows a preference for pop tunes which have come up from hillbilly ranks.

Once in a while somebody comes out with a hillbilly song which is followed up with sequels.

The latest one we know about is the "Dear John" series.

I heard the first of the three "Dear John" songs in Detroit two summers ago.

A large percentage of the employees in Detroit's automobile industry come from the hills of North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Kentucky. And most of the eating establishments cater to them by keeping their juke boxes supplied with hillbilly hits.

It was in such a place, the Addison Waffle Shop, that I first heard these woe-begetting words, accompanied by the plaintive wail and strum of fiddle and guitar:

"Dear John, oh how I hate to write! Dear John, I must let you know tonight That my love for you has died. . . And tonight I wed your brother, Dear John."

In the song, the epistle quoted above was received on the battlefields of Korea by a soldier named John.

Last summer I learned that John answered the letter. It was embodied in a song called "Dear Joan." I don't recall what the song said exactly, but the essence of it, I believe, was "good riddance."

Now usually the hillbilly artist will stop with one sequel.

But over the Thanksgiving holidays I learned that Joan has written yet another letter: "Forgive me, John, but I don't love your brother; I realize now that you're the only one. Write and tell me, dear, if you'll still have me After all these awful things I've done."

Now I'm wondering what old John will do. Or better still, what his brother will do.

The war's over, and I guess John will be coming home again.

Sounds

Tom Spain

There are many musicians who can turn the Benny Goodman version of the KING PORTER STOMP into a saintly amble, but Pete Rugolo's inventive magic takes the task rather easily and very nicely.

ADVENTURES IN RHYTHM, a twelve-inch Columbia LP, brings the new Rugolo band to our eager ears, proving that Rugolo's wish for his own orchestra wasn't idle fancy. An impressive career accompanies Pete Rugolo in his new moments of glory. Perhaps most widely known as Stan Kenton's arranger for the past five years; he has prepared selections for Mel Torme, Nat Cole, Peggy Lee, and Billy Eckstein, to mention a few. He has been a part of every movement in the modern-progressive field ever since there was a progressive field.

As with Eddie Sauter and Bill Finnegan, arranger Rugolo's own orchestra represents the ideal for which he has been striving. And like the former aggregation, the new band is a medium of expression for an imagination let loose.

ADVENTURES IN RHYTHM is comparable to a home music-appreciation record. The Rugolo band demonstrates twelve popular rhythm uses, and expresses them in a most understanding fashion.

In the case of a bolero beat, the tympani is employed, and the stop-start Shearing beat brings the vibraharp into the picture. Another comparison to the Sauter-Finnegan group might be drawn in that Rugolo shows little restraint of instrument choice. The tuba, alto flute, oboe, piccolo, french horn, and tambourine are all drawn upon as occasions rise. The lineup of stars in the organization accounts for the definite West Coast jazz sound.

Shortie Rogers, Pete Candido, Bud Shank (a UNC graduate), Maynard Ferguson, Shelly Manne, and the talented trombonist, Milt Bernhardt all listed together might lead one to think that this is Kenton without Kenton. Bring Kenton down a bit to the more popular level, add comprehension, control and current tunes, and we find Rugolo blending imaginative harmonies, forms and instrumentation with popular tunes rhythms and gimmicks.

HERE'S PETE, the opener on the album, is of the jump beat so popular with the modern bands of today. The entire band is heard as an ensemble, showing its wares, so to speak. Most impressive, perhaps, is the full brass sound, the section playing quietly in unison. Some might think the band bottom-heavy because of the strength of brass and rhythm sections, but the effect is different, possibly outstanding, if one's tastes lean towards the deep and the quiet. Next we find MY FUNNY VALENTINE, which is wrapped up in a mysterious beguine tempo, a standby for romantically sophisticated ballads.

A minor-keyed chorus by the trombone section and Milt Bernhardt on a plaintive lonesome solo add to the beguine and the effect is truly beautiful.

POINCIANA, and alluring mood song and a long favorite is here fitted into a bolero beat. In fact, were the melody removed and the accompaniment presented, Maurice Ravel would possibly wonder about Rugolo's source of inspiration.

Muffled tympani joined by horn and alto flute solos give a highly exotic flavor to the Latin love song, and the crescendo leading to the final strains of the selection is an honest bolero characteristic, all which creates a very exciting rendition of POINCIANA.

RUGOLO MEETS SHEARING is exactly what the title implies. Many have often wondered just what the George Shearing style would sound like coming from a larger group. If anything, Rugolo captures the real thing when it comes to Shearing's music.

The combination of vibes, piano, strong bass and drums, and the stop beat steadiness makes the number authentic. Another tune that could raise an eybrow is the JINGLE BELLS MAMBO, which, although it inspires no visions of snow and holly, is an excellent treatment of the mambo, a form which has almost been worn thin in the past year. It seems as though only the sacred confines of religious music have escaped the mambo craze. However, the Rugolo understanding of the form proves of a better quality than the majority oomph numbers circulating today.

The same may well be said for the Pete Rugolo band. With the declining importance of "front men" with popular orchestras, the arrangers are beginning to come out from behind the music stands and express the music they create in their own way. Eddie Sauter and Bill Finnegan helped make Goodman Dorsey and Miller great names in the popular field. Rugolo helped do the same for Kenton. It seems only proper that Rugolo should do it for himself. And ADVENTURES IN RHYTHM indicates that he has.

"Shaping Up"

It was testified in behalf of an officer on trial at Camp Gordon, Augusta, Ga., that he had to do something to "shape up" the recruits, even if it came to suspending a private from a tree by his feet.

His superiors declared that one company of which this officer, a second lieutenant from Korea, took charge was notoriously a poor one, but after being given the proper treatment, it "shaped up" excellently and even won honors.

It is no new thing that men can be "shaped up" into any desired pattern by threats, torture, and systematic brutality, but what place has an army of his sort, beaten into submission, in the United States of America?

It cannot be supposed that this case at Camp Gordon from which tough reports have been coming for some time, is an isolated one in view of the fact that repeated announcements in recent months have made it plain that recruits were no longer being "coddled", but were going to be given the works.

But what place have such methods in America?

Over The Hill

By

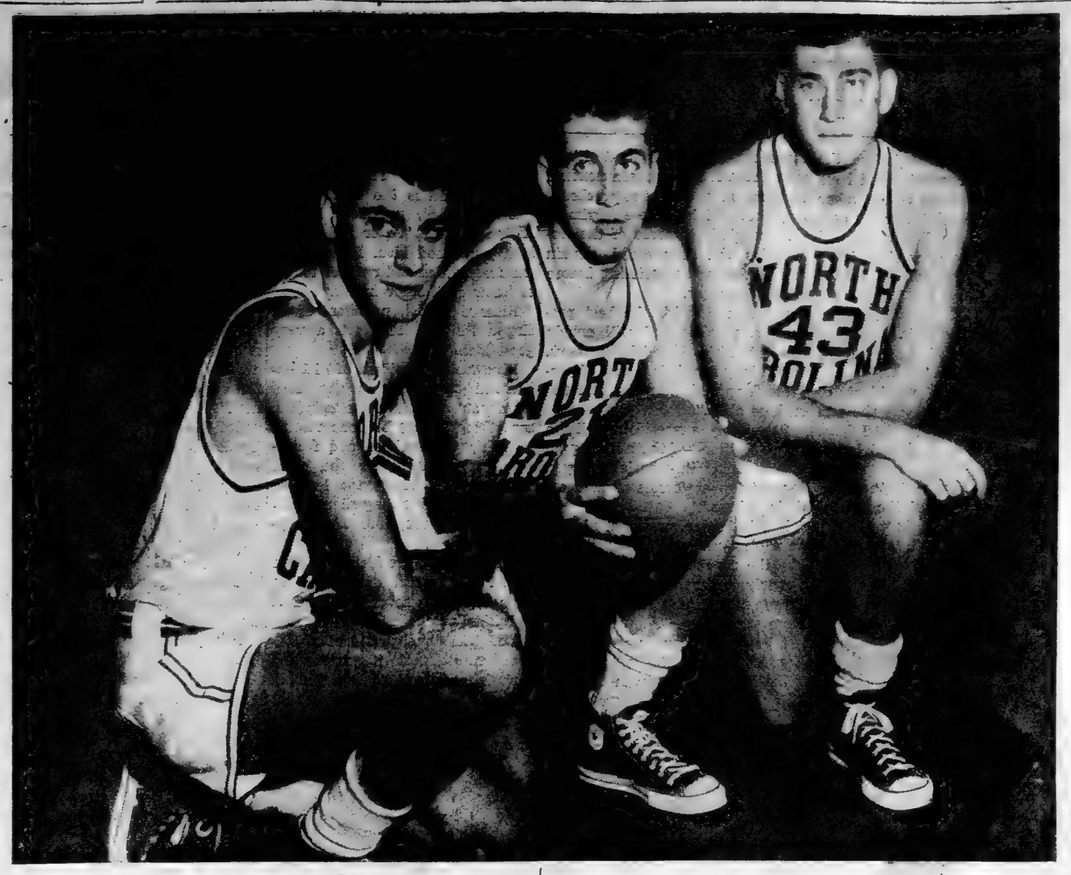
FRED BABSON

The Duke-Carolina fraternity battle today at Kenan Stadium will be rivaled for attention. Notre Dame and SMU ring down the final curtain on the 1954 football season in Dallas this afternoon. 75,000 people are expected to witness the Irish-Mustang game, in person. Several million more will view it on their television sets

On the basketball scene, UNC makes its home debut in Woollen Gym tonight against Clemson. Over in Raleigh, arch-rival N. C. State takes on the Temple Owls, who last year defeated national champion La-Salle.

The Tar Heel cagers were in Charlotte last Thursday night, where they staged a clinic for the benefit of high school coaches and players. Following the workshop, Coach Frank McGuire's varsity tangled with Coach Buck Freeman's much-heralded freshmen. The big boys asserted their dominance over the yearlings by 11 points. Lenny Rosenbluth topped the individual scoring with 23 tallies. As was expected, Joe Quigg and Pete Brennan, two New York City products, gave an excellent account of themselves in leading the frosh five.

Tonight's tilt will be the first of only seven slated for Woollen Gym this season. McGuire has lined up an impressive schedule: 18 games, plus the Dixie Classic (in which the locals played three tilts last year), and the ACC Tournament at the end of the season. This means the Tar Heels will play at least 22 games, and perhaps a few more, depending upon their success in the season-climaxing tourney.



Of the 18 regularly scheduled games, only seven will be played in Chapel Hill. Coach McGuire explains the prevalence of "away" games by citing the arrangement of tilts with such newcomers to the Tar Heel schedule as Louisiana State and Alabama, both of which will be played on the road this year. It will be the first meeting between these teams and Carolina, and the sites will be alternated each year. Thus, next year, both LSU and Alabama will play here. Also, next year McCrary and William and Mary will both play here. They are "away" games this year.

In addition to the above-mentioned affrays, the Tar Heels will encounter the following schools twice this season, once here and once away: Clemson, Duke, Wake Forest, N. C. State, Maryland, South Carolina, and Virginia.

McGuire came to Carolina in 1952 in a move by the Athletic Department designed to place the school on a basketball par with other Big Four schools, especially State College. This is McGuire's third season here, but he still doesn't expect to floor a world-beater this year. He points to his star-studded freshman team, and hints that next year may be the big one.

A native of Manhattan, McGuire attended Xavier High School in Brooklyn where he was outstanding in football, basketball, and baseball. He entered St. John's University, was captain in both baseball and basketball, making All-Metropolitan in basketball. Upon graduation, he returned to Xavier as head coach for eight years, entered the Navy, and then returned to Xavier upon completion of his tour of duty. In 1946, McGuire went to St. John's at head coach. His five-year record there was 106 wins against 36 losses. He coached baseball and basketball teams to NCAA finals. In his two years at Carolina, his teams have won 28 and lost 20.

McGuire's assistant, Buck Freeman, who coaches the freshman team, probably possesses one of the greatest basketball minds in the nation. When McGuire played on St. John's great "Wonder Five" in 1935-36, his coach was Freeman. Freeman also played for St. John's, graduating in 1922, whereupon he went on to the great Celtics.

Likins, Lifson Named Captains For Tonight

Tonight's starting lineup will consist of Lifson and Likins at guards, Rosenbluth at center, and Vayda and Radovich at forwards. There is a chance, however, that Goodwin will get the starting nod instead of Radovich.

Likins and Lifson have been selected as co-captains for the game. They were also co-captains against McCrary, and McGuire may name the two as co-captains for the season sometime next week.

Clemson, defeated twice by Carolina last season, has eight lettermen returning, including Bill Yarborough, a six-foot guard who averaged 15.7 points. Other standouts for the Tigers are forwards Tommy Smith, Barry Ryan, centers Bill Riser, Buddy Shook, and guard Bruce Holzhuh. Coach of the team is Banks McFadden.

The preliminary game should prove to be as entertaining as the varsity tilt. Frosh coach Buck Freeman will be sporting three scholarship winners from New York, Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns; a holdover from last season in the person of tall Joe Quigg; and a Carolina product, Bob Searcy. All have shown up very well in scrimmages against the varsity and look exceptionally promising.

Cunningham however, a 6' 3" guard, may not start because of an injured ankle received in Thursday night's scrimmage against the varsity. His substitute will be Charley Adams.

Rose Figures In Three New Marks As Frosh Swimmers Top High Point

BY BOB COLBERT

The Carolina Freshman swimmers opened their season with a 47-28 victory over High Point high school in the UNC indoor pool yesterday.

Walter Rose was the big man for the freshmen, setting two records and helping to set a third. He set a new mark in the 50 yard freestyle event with a time of 23.7. This betters the old mark set by Jack Edwards in 1951 of 23.9. Rose set this mark while swimming the first leg of the 200 freestyle relay. This relay team of Rose Bill Roth, Jake Smith, and Kelly Maness set a new record of 1:36.4 minutes for the event. The old record was 1:38.2 set in 1949, by Levy, Tinkham, Evans and Fountain.

In the 100 yard freestyle, Rose went the distance in 53.3 seconds, overshadowing the old mark of 53.4 set by Charlie Krepp of last year's team.

Tom Maury established a new record in the 100 yard orthodox breast stroke event. His time was 1:14.1. There was no record prior to this time.

The summary:

200 yd freestyle relay: UNC (Rose, Roth, Smith, Maness), HP. 1:08.6. (New freshman record)

100 yard backstroke: Shawley (UNC), Burton (HP), Younts (HP). 1:09.1

In a secret session, the team ran through their ground gaining plays and pass defense while line backer Herb Callihan practiced kicking the extra points. In their last contact scrimmage tackle Bernie Harris, Guard Lou Parham, and fullback Charlie Weiss turned in a sparkling performance and after the practice team captain Bo Thorpe stated that the team as a whole looked in good shape. Halfback Johnny Wooten expressed the spirit of the team when he said that he thought Carolina would beat Duke. Duke is a one touchdown favorite in the game today.

Kick-off time for the game today is 2:00 this afternoon, and tickets are on sale for 25 cents. All proceeds from the game will go to the Methodist Orphanage in Raleigh and Publicity Director, Curtis Lashley stated yesterday that he hoped that "as many as possible would come."

Siexas Makes Aussie Finals

MELBOURNE, DEC. 3 (AP)—Heavy rains washed out the doubles final of the Victoria tennis championships today, giving the Australians a pause to order another beer and speculate on the makeup of their Davis Cup team in the challenge round later this month.

The concensus was that both America, if victorious over Sweden in the interzone finals, and Australia would gamble on two-man teams in the big cup battle at Sydney Dec. 27-29.

Australia is a virtual cinch to play Lew Hoad and Ken Rosewall in both the singles and doubles while Vic Seixas and Tony Trabert will again carry the colors of Uncle Sam.

A torrential downpour blew into Kooyong tennis courts before noon, forcing a postponement of the title match in doubles until Monday. Seixas and Trabert were scheduled to meet Wimbledon champions Mervyn Rose and Rex Hartwig for the tandem crown.

The singles championship will be decided tomorrow when Seixas, U. S. champion who is in excellent form, tries to crack the jinx of Australia's pintsized court master Rosewall, who is also hitting peak form. Rosewall has beaten Seixas the last seven times they have met, including the decisive fifth match in the Davis Cup challenge round a year ago.

Although Hartwig and Rose beat the American pair for the Wimbledon crown last summer, Seixas and Trabert are favorites to win the doubles championship. Hartwig showed little interest in losing his semifinal singles match yesterday to Rosewall and there is no reason to believe his attitude may be better.

Meanwhile, Australian tennis critics, including such men as Adrian Quist, Colin Long, and Jack Crawford, openly predicted that regardless of the doubles outcome, Australia probably will field a two-man team in the challenge round with Hoad and Rosewall playing both singles and doubles.

Drills Underway For Indoor Track

Coach Dale Ranson has been sending his varsity and freshman through daily workouts in the Tin Can in preparation for the upcoming indoor season. Ranson expressed the need for more material yesterday, and he is asking for more students to come out for the team.

Ranson stated that he would like to have 100 freshmen out immediately to select his frosh team. In asking for more participants, he stressed the fact that experience was not essential. Only three of the eight men receiving the Evans Trophy awarded annually to the outstanding senior trackman had any previous experience before coming to Carolina.

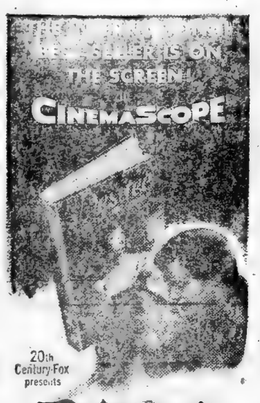
Linemen Up For All-America Team Selection

Ability to come up with that big, tide - turning play makes linemen like Navy end Ron Beagle and UCLA tackle Jack Ellena prime candidates for the All - America football team.



Beagle topped a splendid season with a standout performance in the Muddies' 27-20 upset of Army-once rushing cadet Pete Vann so hard he passed ineffectively on a fourth down play aiming for the tying touchdown inside the Navy 10.

Ellena, one of the anchors of the Bruins' murderous forward wall, ran 26 yards with a blocked punt against Kansas to open the floodgates in a 32-7 victory.

Guard Jim Salisbury, Ellena's running mate recovered a fumble that led to UCLA's first touchdown in the Bruins' important 12-7 early season win over defending national champion Maryland.

Notre Dame tackle Frank Varrichione may have changed the course of the Irish grid campaign with a vital fumble recover on his 11 to halt Texas' opening drive in the first game of the season for the South Benders. Notre Dame roared back for a 21-0 victory.

Ed Fouch tackle on Southern California's Rose Bowlers' picked a fumble out of the air and raced 68 yards for a touchdown to beat Northwestern 12-7.

Minority Of Fraternities Is Against Delayed Rushing Plan

BY RUTH DALTON

"I'm firmly convinced it will never work at UNC," according to Tom York, president of Chi Psi social fraternity. This statement represents a definite minority opinion of fraternity presidents contacted in the past three days in an attempt to determine their feelings on the proposed delayed rushing plan.

Only five presidents out of 16 reached disapproved of Student Body President Creasy's special committee on rushing's report.

Eleven of the fraternity officials approved of the plan for its improved academic program while those who opposed it did so mainly on financial grounds.

York of Chi Psi said, "I thought about it a long time before the committee was appointed and have talked with persons of other schools at national fraternity conventions and I am firmly convinced that it will never work at UNC. The smaller fraternities cannot bear the financial burden for the extended period without going broke. I also don't think that a strict silence period for eight weeks would work."

Richard Guthrie, president of Beta Theta Pi, said, "I like the idea and think it's very good. I have felt all along that it should be revised."

Jack Stevens, president of Chi Phi and a member of the special committee—"I think that it's a wise thing. It really doesn't extend the time more than two weeks. It may prove slightly more detrimental financially to some of the fraternities but they could sustain this as they were suffering before rushing anyway.

"I think that it's the best proposition possible and will enable the fraternities to get better boys. In the long run, it is a step of progress for the fraternities and the rushees alike."

Pete Sprague, president of Delta Kappa Epsilon—"I think it's a good idea to delay it, especially if you can get the professors to hold off their quizzes."

Martin Jordan, president of Kappa Alpha—"From all indications, I like the proposed suggestions. I'm strongly in favor of its giving everyone more time to think the problem over."

Jay Zimmerman, member of Delta Psi (St. Anthony)—"I am very much in favor of the idea."

Bill Calvert, president of Pi Kappa Alpha—"After mid-terms is a very good idea. It will help the fraternities and rushees to get to know each other better."

Max Crohn, president of Pi Lambda Phi—"I think it's a good idea from an academic standpoint. Something should be done though to bring the rushees and fraternities together before the eight weeks period. That's too long of a wait and such a long silence period would be too much of a temptation."

Ed Hardison, president of Sigma Alpha Epsilon—"I don't want to comment as I haven't studied it completely."

Don Gladstone, president of Sigma Chi—"I think it's impossible for this campus. We'd be definitely against it. The smaller fraternities would be at more of disadvantage than we with the added expense. The IFC had a committee which covered all the details and our system seems to be the best possible."

Carl Webb, president of Sigma Nu—"I think that it is the best solution to the problem at it has arisen."

Jack Stewart, president of Sigma Phi Epsilon—"We've discussed it at length over here and we are definitely against it and are all for keeping the rushing as it is now."

Art Mackler, president of Tau Epsilon Phi—"I think that there was a good idea behind it, but the present system is better. The only good point is the way rush week was set up. It would hurt the fraternities financially and I don't think that delaying rushing anymore would improve grades. Rushees can learn as much in three weeks as they can in eight."

The presidents of Alpha Tau Omega, Delta Upsilon, Lambda Chi Alpha, Phi Gamma Delta, Kappa Psi, Phi Kappa Sigma, Zeta Beta Tau and Zeta Psi were not available for comment.

With His Third Herd:

Herman Will Play Tomorrow

BY FERRY REECE

Woody Herman, "the youngest oldtimer in the business," and his Third Herd orchestra (winners of the Metronome poll) return to Carolina for the third time tomorrow to play a two-hour jazz concert under the auspices of Graham Memorial.

Herman, who played his first date here for Winter Germans in 1950, then returned for a St. Patrick Day GM concert last spring, will play from 4 until 6 p.m. in Memorial Hall tomorrow.

Herman's concert last year, which featured himself on clarinet and sax, Cy Touff on bass trumpet, his "college age" orchestra and vocalist Dolly Houston, played to about 1,200 eager UNC jazz fans.

Late yesterday afternoon GM Director Jimmy Wallace said that there were still plenty of tickets available for the concert at $1 a shot.

Woody has been playing the clarinet professionally for about 30 years, and he and his bands have gone through all of the phases of jazz music. First it was dixieland, then "big-band" jazz or "swing", since the forming of the new Third Herd the trend has been toward the modern or progressive jazz field. Many of the members of the Herman group now are from the Stan Kenton-West Coast jazz "school."

Sastrowardojo Surjono, From Java:

UN Delegate Here Monday

A member of the United Nations Assembly will speak on the Indonesian side of the Red China controversy tomorrow night.

Sastrowardojo Surjono will speak on "Asian Neu'rality-An Indonesian View point" at a YMCA-sponsored Supper Forum to be held from 5:30 to 7 p. m. in the second floor dining room of Lenoir Hall.

Dr. Frank Graham, past president of the University of North Carolina, once served as the United States representative on the United Nations Committee of Good Offices to Indonesia, which gave aid in negotiations between the Netherlands and Indonesia. Under the auspices of the committee, which was composed of Dr. Graham and representatives from Australia and Belgium, negotiations were conducted which resulted in the recognition of the independence of Indonesia.

(Dean Henry P. Brandis Jr. of the UNC Law School served as Dr. Graham's personal assistant during part of the time that the committee was aiding in the negotiations.)

Surjono, a member of the Indonesian delegation to the United Nations as Indonesia's representative to the Committee on Social, Humanitarian, and Cultural Affairs, is a native of Java, Indonesia. He studied law at the university in Djakarta and worked as assistant public prosecutor there. After a year of service at the legal office of the Ministry of Defense, he entered the Foreign Service in April 1947.

In April of 1950 Surjono was appointed attache to the newly set up Legation to the Holy See. In April of 1952 he was in charge of organizing a new Legation to the Italian government and was appointed Third Secretary. In November of 1953 he was appointed Second Secretary.

Accorling to advance publicity from the Institute of International Education, Surjono wants to focus his attention on political affairs in the United States in order to understand the organization and the operation of the federal, state and local governments. He would also like to inquire into labor organizations and activities in the United States, particularly in relation to American political action. As time is available, he is also interested in social welfare activities, especially those whose organization and methods might be applicable in Indonesia, the Institute said.

Surjono will arrive here tomor-

Service Station Men Say:

Dealers Cause Higher Gas Prices

BY LOUIS KRAAR

Chapel Hill gasoline costs more than in other towns because dealers have to pay more for it, according to most local service station owners.

None of the dealers seemed sure of the reasons why Chapel Hill dealers were charged more, though. And several told conflicting stories about the price situation.

This reporter polled seven stations within the Chapel Hill town limits, where regular gas averages 32.37 cents per gallon and premium 35.2.

It was pointed out to each dealer that gas is cheaper in Durham and Raleigh, according to a survey by Legislator Norwood Bryan.

WHAT THEY SAID:

Here is what the local gas sellers said:

"We have no control over prices. They are determined by the invoice we got from the distributor," O. C. Pendergraft said.

Pendergraft, who runs a Texaco station here, added that price determination lies "with the wholesaler.

"I don't know why it should be any cheaper at other places," Pendergraft observed.

E. G. Merritt, an Esso dealer, said that "cut-throat competition" in Raleigh and Durham keeps prices down in those towns. He, too, declared that wholesalers determined gas prices locally.

"Frankly, I'm at a loss as to the reason why prices are high here," Watts Poe at Poe Motor Co. said. He said that his distributor Kenan Hull in Durham, determined the gas price—"since we have to have some margin to make a profit."

PRICES 'NORMAL'

Obie Davis said, "Gas prices are supposed to be the same all over North Carolina. Chapel Hill's prices are normal."

Davis contended that gas was cheaper in Raleigh and Durham" because of heavy competition and price wars." He said "we don't have price wars here."

Asked if Chapel Hill dealers agreed on gas prices, Davis said they did.

But W. N. Tyler, just down the street from Davis, when asked the same question, said: "No, dealers don't agree on the prices of gas."

Herbert Pendergraft, the last dealer visited, took off his cap, scratched his head and said:

'LET ME KNOW'

"I've been in the gas business for 30 years in Chapel Hill. And I've been trying to figure out Chapel Hill prices ever since I started. If you can find out why they're high, I wish you'd let me know."

Meantime, Max Crohn, head of the student Legislature Gasoline Committee, has said that the high cost of gas was "primarily because tankers had to transport the gas further and a reasonable profit had to be made by the establishments to survive."

Ready, Aim...

The Student Legislature has fired the first gun in a big battle.

It seems almost certain that the State Advisory Budget Commission will recommend a raise in University tuition to the General Assembly next month. The Legislature is sending a letter to members of the Assembly telling them that already student fees are "as high as a great many of our students can pay," that any hike in tuition would be "like telling them to get out of school."

This fight will not be easily won. North Carolina is short on money this year;; the University is asking the state for necessary improvements and new buildings; the feeling among many Assembly members is that if the University wants improvements, it must pay its own way. That means the students must pay.

Legislature member Dave Reid, who called for a pressure group to descend on Raleigh and make the students' feelings known, has the right idea. But student leaders should marshal their forces carefully, arm themselves with facts and figures and with the eloquent arguments of North Carolinians like Judge John J. Parker, Dr. F. K. Graham and President Gray, and coordinate the administrations, students, parents and trustees of Carolina, State and Woman's College before they storm the bastion of the General Assembly.

Christmas vacation will find the student body scattered all about the state and in a good position to see their hometown Assembly members. It will take an effort of no less magnitude than that if we are not to see tuition raised by fall.

No Frat Is An Island

"I have felt all along that rushing should be revised."

"I think it is the best solution to the problem."

"I am very much in favor of the change."

These are fraternity men talking, fraternity presidents in fact, commenting on delayed rushing and a group of other reforms recommended by a special study committee.

The rushing system at Carolina, coming as it does before freshman have time to get their bags unpacked in the fall is an old evil. Traditionally, the fraternities have resisted any change in it. But yesterday, only five fraternity presidents of 16 contacted by The Daily Tar Heel were still holding out for the present system. Most fraternities seem willing to go along with the committee's suggestions for the good of new students and the campus at large.

Our fraternities, this seems to show, are on the road to discovering for themselves the truth of a statement made last year by Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver: "They will succeed best when they serve most, and not serve just their own members but the whole campus including independents as well as members of fraternities.

The Winners

The Daily Tar Heel salutes Dr. Hugh T. Lefler and the late Dr. Albert R. Newsome upon their receiving the Mayflower cup for the outstanding non-fiction book of the year by North Carolinians.

Dr. Lefler and the late Dr. Newsome have spent as much time as any two men we know of winnowing the chaff from the facts and trends of history.

Their book, "North Carolina: The History of a Southern State" has drawn praise for literary excellence as well as accuracy. North Carolina is fortunate to have historians like Drs. Lefler and Newsome to search its historical soul and record their findings reliably.

Carolina Front

A Course In Appreciation At Duke U.

Louis Kraar

THE MORNING mist settled on a lone television antenna sticking up among the Duke University spires as I hit the west Durham campus along with a 9 o'clock class bell.

Students from both Carolinas and Virginia mingled with the gray-flanneled, class-going Duke populace. A sign lettered in Old English type informed all that they were welcome. So I strolled into the student union building without letting the Norman Castle atmosphere ruffle my Chapel Hill stride.

The occasion for all the friendliness was the National Student Association regional gathering, a yearly affair which brings the students from three states to sit, talk, and think together.

UNC students dotted the hallway, the Carolina student government people coated and tied, and looking much like what they are —campus politicians.

Pat McBane, Student Party member, looked out one of the windows at Duke students going to class. "They don't look much like the Ivy League to me. They're as sleepy looking as Carolina students."

Jim Turner laughed, then went into a revolving-door act with his head in an effore not to miss seeing any of the visiting Sweet Briar College girls.

Finally I found a door that said, "College Editor's Workshop," and went in to find a long table and lots of students. A few minutes of talking shop had me feeling right at home, even at Duke.

THE COLLEGE editors, in a discussion led by Charlie Kuralt, talked about their problems-finances, small staffs, and censorship.

Apparently, most college papers—except this one—have some form of censorship.

I wondered how educators at colleges which censor student papers could expect the students to believe their education. How can they let students learn in history and political science about freedom of the press, then tell them they can't enjoy that freedom?

I recalled the story of a Guatemalan newspaperman, Ramon Blanco, and found myself wishing the rest had read about him.

Blanco was reduced to a semi-fugitive when the communists took over Guatemala. The communists made it clear to him that he could either stop his criticism or be killed. Gunmen were sent after him. He kept writing and publishing. Blanco stayed at a different place every night. The killers never found him.

None of the college editors, even the most thoroughly censored, had it as bad as Blanco in Guatemala. But none of them had it so good as the paper you're reading. So I as I sat at Duke, as would be expected, I appreciated Carolina more than ever.

MEETINGS LIKE the one in Durham this weekend are little more than formal bull sessions, but they are valuable.

And where else would you bring together Duke's George Coltrane—an energetic student, if I ever saw one—with Professor Guy Johnson, Claude Shotts, Tom Creasy, and Martin Jordan to talk over the problem of racial integration?

Talks like these are always idealistic. Some have criticized them for being such and not "being practical."

But it would seem the job of student leaders to translate idealistic talks into campus action on practical terms.

YOU Said It:

'With Sanity, Intelligence And Kindness'

Of course, Dr. George and his followers — or Joe McCarthy, for that matter — all have a right to their own opinions and the expression of them within certain limitations; this freedom is one of the principles which make our nation strong.

However, it is to be hoped that there will be also some expression from those of us Southerners who wish to comply with the Supreme Court decision with sanity, intelligence, and — most of all — with kindness.

True, thes are not the Circulators of Petitions or the Makers of Speeches. These are the men and women who are studying the vast problems of desegregation with as a much wisdom and energy and hope as they can muster who wish to see the problems solved so that no child — white or Negro — shall be poor in understanding, or acceptance for himself, or an education.

In short, so that all of us may learn more and grow taller — as tall as we can —without being hurt or held back by an old intolerance.

It is to be hoped that this kind of quiet effort will prevail.

Doris Betts

Petition Circulator Explains Reasons

Editor:

I would like it to be generally understood that in helping to organize and circulate the petition protesting the Supreme Court's opinion on segregation, I and the other participating students do not attempt to speak for our University.

We are only speaking for ourselves as individual students at the University of North Carolina, and I am sure that all the hundreds of students who have signed feel likewise. Some of the students who have signed feel likewise. Some of the students who have helped with the petition are Sandy Ginette, William Wilson, Ben Bobrow, Billy Ray Herring, Jack Wilson, Victor Paderick, Ronald Bailey, John Goforth, Bill Acker, plus several others.

We all want everyone to know that this petition is not in any way aimed against the colored race. On the contrary, we all want to see the colored people benefit in every way possible and be given every opportunity for advancement. We feel that if mixing the races in the schools is forced on the South, it would hurt rather than help the Negroes.

Before the Court's decision, race relations in the south were very good and improving steadily. Now, however, as evidenced by the examples of attempted integration in some of the border areas, harmony between the races rapidly began to deteriorate, and in many places reached a new low.

Not all the Negro leaders by any means favored the Court's opinion. Among them are a host of distinguished writers and educators. In this category are such people as the editor of the Newark, N. J. "Telegraph," a Negro newspaper, and Sidney J. Phillips, the president of the Booker T. Washington Birthplace Memorial in Virginia.

I feel that it would be pertinent at this point to quote from a very timely article. It was written by the editor of the Newark Telegraph in the March, 1953, issue of "We The People," a North Carolina magazine. He points out that efforts made by certain pressure groups to end school segregation may cause Southern Negroes to lose much more than they will gain, and might very well cause repercussions that might set the Negro back 50 years. He and many others like him fear that with the ending of segregation 75 per cent of the Negro teachers in the South will lose their jobs as well as approximately 20,000 Negro principals. In addition, the editor foresees a collapse of Negro business institutions as a direct consequence of integration. The worst result that is expected is a rapid worsening of race relations.

I would like to quote a very important statement in this article. The editor says: "During the past two years I have spent more time in the South than I have in my office, and I have interviewed thousands of Negroes in all walks of life and I have found very few who favor mixed schools. They want their own schools, but equal facilities. This being the situation, one questions the fairness of forcing these colored citizens to accept what they don't want."

In conclusion, I would like to bring out one other very important aspect of this problem. A great many of us fear that this opinion of the Court will place in acute danger one of our most cherished traditions. It is that the control of education is exclusively a state and local matter. A brief glance at the final portion of the Bill of Rights in our Constitution helps to bring this out.

This decision, we feel, might set a precedent for future federal intervention in State matters that have nothing to do with segregation, and it may not be long before we are told what type of text books to use and what subjects should be taught, not to mention an infinite number of other matters.

We sincerely hope this letter may somehow cause a modification of your present opinions. Although we disagree with you, we nevertheless admire and respect you for your sincerity and forthrightness.

To Compromise Or Not?

Phillips Russell
In The Chapel Hill News Leader

Dr. Margaret Mead, anthropologist and writer, said something at Woman's College, Greensboro, the other day that may throw some light on the more mysterious aspect of our foreign relations.

She said Americans somehow associate a tendency to compromise a question as an admission of weakness. This attitude, she said arose out of our past when we really were weak, whereas the British, speaking from strength, resorted to compromise as a regular way of getting things done. These respective habits through the years have become fixed.

There may be something in this view of an uncomfortable situation which, in the present state of the world's nerves, constantly threatens us with an unwanted and crucifying war.

Consider our present attitude toward Russia. Two ideas are prevalent. One is that fo co-existence. The other is that of more or less immediate war.

We might be able to find some basis for a tenable position except for our inveterate habit of an absolutist standpoint and refusing any other. This position prevents us from realizing that even if we ground Russia into dust, we would still have to live wit hher in the same world.

No Finality, But Every Man's An Artist

William Saroyan
In Arts Digest

Why any man becomes a painter no one may ever know with accuracy, and that may very well include the painter himself. The early opposition is so great that by comparison any other kind of work is apt to seem preferable, more reasonable, or even more meaningful. The contest of the unknown artist in the arena of art during the early years is a rough contest. It seems preposterous of him to presume that of all the people in the world he is the one who may, by the grace of God, create something that is real, that no one else in all the world can create. And yet it is this very faith, belief, opinion, hallucination—whatever anybody chooses to call it—that a new artist must feel. He must feel that what he can do, no one else can do, and then he must go about demonstrating the truth of what he believes, thereby transforming what would otherwise be a crackpot into a creator. It is the probability that he may after all turn out to be nothing more than a crackpot that makes the going for the new artist so rough. The days of the unknown artist are long, tedious, and anxious.

I have myself from time to time for the sake of my own soul sought to restore to my work this nagging doubt which is in the new artist. The reason for this has been that no man has the right to regard himself as an altogether professional or established artist. This is something others must take the liberty of doing for him. It is not, however, any of his business. His business is to look at the world, to reexamine experience, to go over once again, even if for the ten thousandth time, the matter of what he thinks he is doing and what he believes he has observed about what other people think they are doing. No good artist can afford to presume or pretend that he has come upon final skill, final form, final grace, or final truth. If anything, he must remind himself repeatedly that in the matter of this strange creature, which is man, which has this mortal soul, there can be no finality.

There has always existed a great deal of interest in what it is that has been responsible for the arrival in the arena of art of a new artist. This cannot be explained, for the mystery of personality is the same for the good painter as for the poor painter. It is the same for the the excellent bricklayer as for the slipshod bricklayer. It is the same for the man who enduries time with grace as for the man who endures time without grace. Personality itself is the mystery. And while it may be in order to seek to unravel this mystery, or amusing to do so, it would seem to be an activity that is basically irrelevant.

I have never found it possible to be astonished that anybody has created a work of art. I have always believed that this is perfectly natural, that it is in fact inevitable. I have heard that somewhere in Southern Asia there is a whole nation in which it is taken for granted that every person is an artist. I believe this is true. Every person is an artist.

Why the West has taken to an attitude of astonishment about the occurrence of great art is something the specialist may very well be able to account for. I can quickly and inadequately account for it by expressing the belief that the peoples of the West have for so long been concerned with the picayune and the petty that these things have become natural to them, but at the same time there remains in them a memory of a largeness of soul which was once their own; therefore when they behold this largeness in a work of art they are astonished and pleased.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some tthings, minimizing others . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was prowling the sacred purlieus of Bynum Hall when I saw him. What! Taking Journalism, again?

"I have a swell idea," The Horse rebutted, collapsing to the ground resoundingly. "I think we should change the name of Journalism."

The Horse was bucking a forceful person, indeed, in Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, Dean of The School of Journalism, and would meet with trouble.

"Meet with trouble?" The Horse horse-laughed. "Brother Roger, you ole codger, trouble is so much a part of my scenery I sometimes think I was born to it! I want the name of The School of Journalism changed to The School of Churlism. From what I see of the newspapers of late, this would be most fitting. Right down the employers' alleys!"

Churlism? The Horse meant, the quality of baseness, meanness, vulgarity, commonness?

"You are masticating on both dentures, me lad." The Horse approved my swift comprehension. "Granting a degree of compromise twixt Idealism and Practicality, if one is to survive economically in these days of Dollar Gods and Penny Prophets, I feel it is time some daily newspaper in fair Easterly North Carolina, suh, tightened its moral muscles, flexed its intellectual biceps, and made noises like a decent force once again. There is too much of swimming with the garbage along the shores of crass commercialism, and not enough of bathing in the clean, deep waters of honest and decent journalism."

Well, now, this sounded like a particularly odious bit of pulpiteering! I had things to do.

"Sit down, sit down, Roger!" The Horse beamed, springing up with amazing alacrity for such an old hack, and knocking me flat. "Stay a bit! But not against your will, pray."

Since The Horse was now sitting on me, I took his raw hypocrisy with a grain of salt—I always carry a shaker of it with me, against the need—and resigned myself to the ordeal.

"First, let us consider what our leading dailies in this part of the state regard as fair bait to catch the favor of the reader, be he or she young, middle-aged, or waiting for the wagon," The Horse sprinted on verbally. "Sex; Murder; Violence; Rapine; Plunder; Fraud; Graft; Theft; General Veniality. Why, they even reach far afield to regale the reader with the gory details of some especially revolting crime, and one paper, which must go nameless if not shameless, delights especially in what it blandly peats as A Crime Against Nature, and finds space to repeat the identifying phrase."

Please! Must The Horse use that expression in a clean university campus daily? Must he?

"Heck, Buster," The Horse shrugged intelegantly, dislocating two more of my ribs "this is a school, isn't it? And you teach, at a school, what you'll need to know in later life, don't you? Besides, if it is okay to print so that the wide-eyed innocents in decent homes can read and wonder about and question—be it at the dinner table, or behind a barn door—why can't university students read it? And, if it is not right, let's find that out here and now, so that when we go out into the world we may do something about it."

"You again have something, Roger," The Horse murmured, his eyes crossed in thought. "When I start to holler, things must be bad, indeed! Not that I have ever approved of filth purveyed into clean places at a nickel the bale. However formerly one could bar this paper and that, and take the other, with perhaps a sigh of regret that some good writing which was slyly incorporated among the columns of nauseana in the banned sheet must be sacrificed. Today—in this section of the state, at any rate, among the dailies—it is a sorry question you ask yourself; which, you quiz, of these two, three or five newspapers, is the least chulrish, the least lying, the least sensational-for-circulation's sake?"

But, there was an answer?

"There is" The Horse agreed. "But it is a varying answer: this week, or this day, this certain paper or papers is or are bottom in news-muggery, the printed assaults on our sense of fitness, decency and honesty. But next week, or next issue, up pops circulation-aimed filth or lies or distortions in this one; and you wish you had the other one, again."

Why, then, take any of them?

"Heck, you want news, don't you? Local happenngs local events, local announcements?" The Horse pursued his inquiry complete with answers. "So what are you to do?"

I suppose you were to take the least offensive paper.

"On which day, or on which subjects, the least offensive?" The Horse crossed me up by killing my escape-gimmick in infancy. "Or let's say you hit on a good enough compromise with decency and so-called journalism."

Okay, I'd say it. We hit a clean compromise, whatever that is.

"Then you go inside the paper and find yourself a, burp, column done by some wind-bag, or maybe by some windy bag—and what is it?" The Horse queried, cudgeling me with a sharp hoof to hold my attention, and all but rendering me unconscious. "It is a bald lie, or some old half-truth, plugged up to work out a pet hate with, or to foist a distorted ism off on you. So you turn a page, and bang! you find yourself two or even three columns on the zany doings, or snide keyhole peepings, into Hollywood and—or Broadway lives. So who cares what hair-do Gulpa Seidel is wearing now, or what jerk Ham Inaiger slugged in what smart bistro—smart, meaning patronized by no-goods, exhibitionists, dipsoes, homos, and dames with larger mammary measures than I. Q's? And then some folk go around saying how TV is no good, hasn't a chance, and so on. Well, barring one morning show which specializes in thinly veiled bawdiness to space its yawning moments—and who gets up that early except our children, to hear it?—you don't get the slime treatment the dailies give us. I'm for clean, decent, honest journalism, not churlism!"

I agreed. I had to. I had to report this.

Tar Heels Drub Toothless Tigers In Home Opener, 99-66

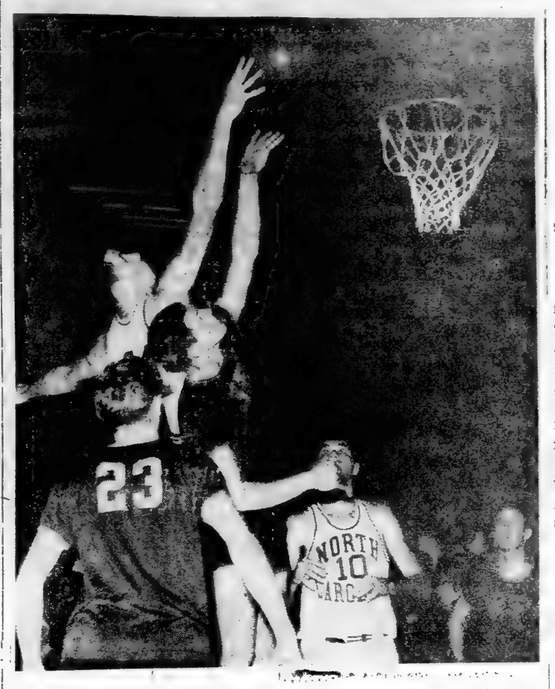
End Will Frye Selected As "Most Valuable" Gridder

Will Frye, 190 pound, six foot end, was selected the "Most Valuable Player" on the 1954 Carolina football team by the sports staff of the Daily Tar Heel.

His consistently brilliant defensive play made UNC's left end almost impregnable all season.

The aggressive junior from Hickory was named on the Associated Press All-Atlantic Coast Conference second team. The Atlantic Coast sportswriters chose Frye on its first team, as did the Charlotte Observer.

Few games passed without Frye being mentioned by the coaches and sportswriters as the outstanding UNC lineman of the day. Against South Carolina, he harassed the much-heralded Mackie Prickett throughout the game, effectively stopping the Gamecock passing game, which was a major contribution to Carolina's upset victory.



WILL FRYE. . .
"Most Valuable"

At Notre Dame, Frye received rave notices for his stout defensive performance. Twice in succession, in the first quarter, the rugged flanker threw the Irish's All-America quarterback Ralph Guglielmi for losses on attempted pass plays.

He broke into the starting lineup mid-way in his freshman year, and no one has ben able to oust him from that position since then.

It was generally accepted all along that Frye's weakness lay in the pass-receiving department, but an examination of the statistics at the close of the season showed him leading all other Tar Heel receivers with 12 catches, good for 100 yards.

Frye is a two-sport star. His freshman year found him filling the No. 1 catching role for the Carolina baseball team. Last year he moved to the starting first base slot.

Rosenbluth Sinks 30, Vayda & Lifson 18 Each To Lead UNC

Yarborough Tallies 25 For Clemson; Locals Win Handily After Overcoming Early Deficit

By BERNIE WEISS

Carolina's Tar Heels had trouble at first grasping Clemson's Tigers, but finally grabbed their collective tails and mopped up the Woollen Gym floor with them last night before 3,000 fans, 99-66.

Sophomore forward Len Rosenbluth led Carolina to its first Atlantic Coast Conference win, bucketing 12 field goals and six foul tosses for a total of 30 points. Jerry Vayda and co-captain Al Lifson tallied 18 points each.

Bill Yarborough, a junior guard from Walhalla, S. C., led Clemson's futile fight with 25 markers.

UNC coach Frank McGuire was well-satisfied with the Tar Heels' game, but said that things could stand much improvement. "There were a lot of bad passes and much mishandling," he said, "and the team still is not in top physical shape. We've a long row to hoe."

Carolina seemed to have difficulty with the toothless Tigers in the opening minutes of the contest. The Tar Heels were slow in gathering steam, while Clemson quickly jumped off to a 12-4 lead. "That didn't surprise me," McGuire said after the game. He had predicted Clemson would be on the rebound after playing Duke Friday night.

It wasn't until nearly six minutes of the game had elapsed before Carolina found the range. Tony Radovich sunk two charity shots, Rosenbluth tapped in a rebound, Vayda scored with a field goal and then a jump shot to tie up the game at 14-14. With nine minutes gone, Clemson took a one-point lead on Yarborough's long set, but Rosenbluth hit again on a nice under-the-basket hook to put Carolina out front, 18-17. The winners were never headed after that.

In fact, it wasn't long ere Carolina had jumped up a 10-point margin which maintained until halftime. The score at intermission was 40-30.

Risenbluth and Lifson began to hit the mesh more frequently in the second half and Carolina steadily drew away from Clemson, obviously tired and consistently outjumped under the backboards. Paul Likins and Radovich all but monopolized the rebounds.

The box scores:

Frosh Cagers Down Service Team, 95-73

Two New York lads, Joe Quigg and Pete Brennan, sparked Buck Freeman's University of North Carolina freshman team to an easy 95-73 victory over an outmanned Atlantic Fleet five in the varsity preliminary last night in Woollen Gym.

Six foot-seven inch Quigg, center, dumped in 31 points to crary away scoring honors, but 6'5" Brennan, forward was close behind with 26. Guard Jack Kearns tallied 18, as only three Tar Babies broke into the double column scoring figures.

The outcome was never in doubt as the local yearlings combined a definite height advantage and the sharp shooting eyes of Quigg, Brennan, and Kearns to maintain their supremacy all the way.

Conrad Klooster and Robert Tart hit for 14 points to lead the servicemen.

Gamecocks Rally, Trounce Stubborn Citadel, 19-6

CHARLESTON, S. C., Dec. 4 (AP)—South Carolina's Gamecocks, favored to win in a breeze, ran into stubborn opposition from The Citadel today but overcame an early Bulldog lead for a season closing 19-6 football victory.

The fired-up Citadel team stunned its traditional state rival with a 36-yard scoring drive six minutes after the opening whistle.

Freshman quarterback Dick Miles from Columbus, Ga., raced nine yards around end for the touchdown that had been set up by The Citadel's recovery of a fumble by South Carolina quarterback Mackie Prickett.

Swimmers Leave

The Varsity Swimming Team leaves Chapel Hill this morning for Bainbridge, Maryland, where they will meet the Bainbridge Naval Training Station team on Monday.

Starring in pre-season meets have been Charlie Krepp and Phil Drake, both of last year's undefeated freshman team. Krepp swims backstroke and free style, while Drake is a breast stroker. Larry Shannon, Warren Heemann and Dick Baker of last year's Varsity also figure to do well against Bainbridge.

Coach Casey also announced the addition of Michigan to this year's schedule. They will be in Chapel Hill on February 3rd.

Guglielmi And Heap Lead Irish To 26-14 Win Over Mustangs At Dallas

DALLAS, Dec. 4 (AP)—Notre Dame's powerful line smothered Southern Methodist's ground game today as slick Ralph Guglielmi and Joe Heap led the fighting Irish to a 26-14 victory before a roaring crowd of 75,504 at the Cotton Bowl.

Guglielmi's alert quarterbacking and the power bursts of Heap and Don Schaefer behi nbiurdsa ET Don Schaefer behind a bruising line helped Terry Brennan, 26-year-old freshman coach, end his season with 9-1 record.

Heap scored from the four in the first period after Guglielmi's passes set it up and sped 89 yards on a brilliant toe-dancing run down the sidelines in the third period of the nationally televised contest.

Guglielmi, closing his Notre Dame career with six other Notre Dame straters including Heap and Schaefer, sneaked over from the three in the second period and sophomore end Bob Scannell dashed 19 yrads for a touchdown after blocking John Roach's punt just before the half ended.

SM gave the Irish a rugged battle in the first period, leading 7-6 on Roach's quarterback sneak from the 10 and Ed Bernet's conversion. Schaefer had missed the placement after Notre Dame's early score. Schaefer later added two extra points.

John Marshall's fine 76-yard touchdown run in the last period was the best ground move by SMU that had averaged over 200 yards a game all season. Bernet converted for the second time.

Talk Of Tatum Coming To UNC

COLLEGE PARK, MD., Dec. 4 (AP)—As usual, Jim Tatum is busy this time of the year fending off queries about reports he is leaving Maryland to coach another college football team.

This time there is an entirely different tenor in his response. While so far he has denied moving to a specific new job, in his own words he's "not closing the door" on the probability in the near future.

There is one strong hunch that he may reach a decision next week while at a meeting of the Atlantic Coast Conference in Greensboro, N. C. If this is true, it would mean North Carolina.

Off and on since Tatum came to Maryland in 1947 he has been mentioned for jobs at Florida, North Carolina State, Texas A&M, Texas and the professional Washington Redskins. But every year the North Carolina report pops up.

It is his alma mater and he was head coach there in 1942.

Three years ago, there was widespread belief he would return. In s surprise to many, George Barclay, a former assistant of Tatum, was picked.

Barclay's contract has one more year to run. This complicates the guessing on whether Tatum, if he's a serious candidate to replace him, is thinking of next season or two years from now.

In recent conversations about next year as far as Maryland is concerned, Coach Tatum has left listeners with two different impressions.

At one time he talks about the great team and successful season he should have. This led to the belief he wants one more big fling here.

But another time, he'll say "Anybody could coach the team next year and not have any trouble" because prospects are so good.

One of Tatum's main worries about the Maryland football situation is its inability to draw big crowds. Despite two undefeated seasons and four bowl teams in eight years, the home attendance has been far from responsive.

Only Navy filled the 34,000 seat stadium for two games. Alabama and Mississippi have been the only other teams to draw more then 30,000 in 1953.

As athletic director in addition to coach, Tatum is acutely aware of the gate needed to operate a broad program. He has constantly wondered at the failure to "pack 'em in" for teams that have been beaten only once at home in his eight-year regime.

He expressed his feeling on the subject by saying that "If we don't fill the stadium next season with UCLA, the No. 1 team in the country, then I'll give up."

In the past, so little stock has been put in reports that Tatum is leaving that no speculation ever arose on his successor. This time there is and the first glance was toward one of his assistants.

Warren Giese, who played for Tatum and has been an assistant since 1946, is mentioned most. Giese colloborated with Tatum in writing a book on coaching the split T offense last summer and was in charge of the squad last spring when Tatum was hospitalized.

Rosewall Maintains Hoodoo Over Seixas

MELBOURNE, Dec. 4 (AP)—Australia's little Ken Rosewall maintained his longtime hoodoo over Vic Seixas today. He defeated the United States champion with a brilliant display of marksmanship in the Victorian tennis final, 6-1, 4-6, 6-1, 7-5.

The defeat of the net-rushing Philadelphian threw gloom over the American Davis Cup forces. They realize that Seixas must find a way of beating the pint-sized Australian if the United States is to recapture the cup.

Rosewall's victory was his eighth over Seixas in last couple of years. The Australian played with cool confidence, as if he felt he could turn the feat anytime he wishes.

Bill Talbert, United States non-playing captain, was disappointed. But he was not covinced that the problem was one which could not be licked before the challenge round at Sydney on Dec. 27 and 29th.

Saturday's Answer

'Sound & Fury' Getting Hot

No, it's not the Pentagon, it's five lovely chorus girls from the upcoming "Sound and Fury" production which will open in Memorial Hall Dec. 16.

Anyway the young ladies are appearing in a section of the show taken from the Broadway production of "Can Can." The other part of the show is from "Pajama Game." Both sections promise to be big surprises with script and lyrics by Joe Raff and Miss Be Bernardin, who is also the show's director. Lew Sherman is the producer, Max Warner is in charge of music and orchestration, Jim Buyer is in charge of scenery with Harvard Conklin in charge of art work, makeup and costumes are by Miss June Craft, and choreography is by Miss Blynn Derning and Billy Barnes.

According to Miss Bernardin, the show will have a cast of 45, including such campus stars as Ulysses Lancaster, Elen Ozon, Tom Davis, Ken Lowry, John Whitty, Carl Williams, Pat Sietz, Geri, Turner and Al Issac.

Rehearsals for the show will continue today. For the "Can Can" girls, time is 1 p.m., for the rest of the "Can Can" chorus, time is 4 p.m., while practice for the entire "Pajama Dame" cast is 7:30 tonight.

WC will probabley get a preview of the show on Dec. 14 before it opens here, directors said.

Some of the famous old Herman recordings are "Blue Flame" (the group's theme song), "Woodchoppers's Ball," and 'Early Autumn" (featuring the now famous Stan Getz on a tenor sax ride). The latest Herman sides include "Muskat Ramble," "Woodchopper's Mambo," and "Mexican Hat Trick."

Some of the latest Herd recordings have been made in a church. The sides that Herman recorded for his own label, Mars, and for Columbia Records in New York, were cut in the East 30th Columbia studios. The building was formerly the Adams Presbyterian Church and was sold when the congregation build a new one some years back. Sound engineers testing for the best accoustical conditions for new high fidelity records found that the stone church, with its mas sive construction, was a perfect sound chamber. Among the Herman disc to have been recorded there are " Perdidio", "Four Others" and "Third Herd."

He was floor manager of the Armed Services Committee on legislation to institute a uniform code of military justice (an 18-year-old soldier was once sentenced to life imprisonment; under the new code, his case was reviewed and he was returned to duty in the Army).

POPULAR WITH PRESS

Senator Kefauver is popular with the press. While a White House member, he was chosen one of the 10 best representatives in a Collier's Poll.

In 1949 he was selected as one of the 10 best by Time Magazine. Time said "Among the 96 members of the Senate those 10 men stand out of their ability, devotion and integrity."

In 1951 in a poll of the 128 newspaper correspondents covering the Senate, Pagent Magazine found that Estes Kefauver was in the judgment of those men and women, one of the two best senators in the U. S., the other being Sen. Paul Douglas of Illinois.

Indonesia Is Trying For Independence, Says UN Delegate

A 'Dynamic Neutrality' Is The Goal

By ARCHER NEAL

"Indonesia is more concerned with maintaining its independence than it is with the Communist menace at present," Mr. Surjone Sastrowardojo, a member the Indonesian delegation to the United Nations, told members of the YMCA-YWCA Supper forum last night. Sastrowardojo spoke on the topic "Asian Neutrality—An Indonesian Viewpoint." His speech was in the nature of an informal address, as most of his views were brought out in a question and answer period.

Indonesia believes in a dynamic neutrality, Mr. Sastrowardojo said. This is in the nature of an independant foreign policy. It is not neutral passivity, but an active interest in world affairs in maintaining world peace.

"Indonesians are not entirely disinterested in the Communist threat," he pointed out. "It is just that they are more interested in maintaining their independence in the face of the threat of colonialism. They suffered under Dutch rule for 350 years during which the literacy rate of the Indonesian people was never higher than four and one-half percent. They know what foreign rule is like, and don't want to see it repeated. This is of more concern to them than the threat of Communism." he said. Sastowardojo pointed out that this point of view is often overlooked by Americans. "Indonesians are against Communism," however, he said. Asian countries which have gained independence have had to fight the Communist threat. Indonesia is no different in this respect, he added.

Kefauver Hits At 'Influence' Slowing Atlantic Cooperation

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) spoke out here last night against "our great obsession" with the European Defense Community and reiterated his stand that "old-fashioned military alliances are not the answer to our foreign policy needs in the Atlantic."

Sen. Kefauver was introduced by Prof. Walter Spearman of the Journalism faculty. The Democrat's appearance here was sponsored by the Carolina Forum, nonpartisan student organization. The Forum will bring Chester Bowles, former Governor of Connecticut and former U. S. Ambassador to India, to the campus Thursday.

Sen. Kefauver said he has "long thought that the democracies of the Atlantic should get together and

Kefauver Assails Dixon-Yates

BY NEIL BASS

"Lively and informative" are the words which best describe the discussion period that followed the address of Sen. Estes Kefauver (D. Tenn.), second in a series of nationally known figures to speak on campus under the auspices of the Carolina Political Union.

The discussion, consisting of a number of pertinent questions which were submitted to the famed "crime fighter" for answer, covered a variety of political and world problems and the topics were of a swift-moving nature.

Perhaps the most rousing question of the night was one submitted by a gentleman who readily professed to be "a Republican, a Northener and a Duke man." The effect the audience was spontaneous.

"Do you not think that the Eisenhower administration has strived for an improved foreign policy?" was the question with which the Duke man confronted the senator. The able orator and long time Democrat replied, "strived is right."

A gentleman from India asked Kefauver, "In her efforts to oppease England and France, has not the United States ignored the middle East?" Kefauver explained that "the U. S. had to some extent lost the good faith of the peoples of India but that she recognized the importance of good relations with that country and would constantly strive to that end."

Concerning a qestion which asked the Senator's opinion on segregation, the gentleman announced with the decision of the Supreme Court that he "would not differ or argue that he "would not differ or argue with the decision of the Supreme Court."

Vaudeville, Musical Comedy & Soft Shoe—All Are Coming Here

By MARJORIE WYLDE

It's a cross between old-time vaudeville and a modern musical comedy, with everything from a Negro spiritual to Brahm's "Lullaby" and from a soft shoe routine to modern Dance.

"Three for Tonight," the new Paul Gregory-Charles Laughton production, a musical revue, which the Carolina Playmakers are bringing here Thursday and Friday, is a combination of three great stars—Marge and Gower Champion and Harry Belafonte, happily backed by the Voices of Walter Schumann.

Marge and Grower Champion are regarded by many people as America's top dancing couple. Their combination of dance plus drama has sky-rocketed them to the top ever since their first movie appearance in MGM's production of Show Boat."

Marge Champion (right) was born Marjorie Celeste Belcher in Hollywood in 1925. Her father was Ernest Belcher, ballet coach of many stars. From the age of eight she was always at her father's dancing studio and soon she was making public appearances as well as teaching classes of her own. From here it was a short step to small parts in movies and then to serving as the original model for Walt Disney's "Snow White."

An appearance in a short-lived Broadway show, "The Little Dog Laughed," resulted in a broken toe whoe kept her from dancing for two years. It was during this time that she started perfecting her dramatic technique. Acting lessons led to the ingenue lead in "Portrait of a Lody," starring Ruth Gordon, and then to a lead in "Dark of the Moon."

During this time a letter came from her father telling her that one of his old pupils, Gower Champion, was back from the service and looking for a partner.

Art Exhibition By R. L. Blake In Planetarium

An exhibition of 30 original water colors by Robert L. Blake, a medical art illustrator at Duke University, has been opened in the South Art Glalery of the Morehead building here.

Blake has won seven awards for the past three years in the Durham Art Guild's Spring Exhibit. He is now on the Duke University faculty as an associate in medical art and illustration. In that capacity, he has assisted in arranging medical exhibits in large cities and at conventions of the American Medical Association.

The Blake exhibit is the second addition to the art and scientific galleries in the Morehead building in the past two weeks. The other one, in the North Gallery, is a group of rare prints and books from the Graphic Arts Collection of the UNC Library.

Blake did the drawings for "The Hills of Judea," which are projected on more than 200 feet of the Planetarium chamber during its annual presentation of "Star of Bethlehem."

The artist is a native of Pleasantville, N. J., and attended The Graphic Sketch Club and an art school in Philadelphia in 1937-38, after which he was chief photographer and fashion artist for Kraft and Phillips of Philadelphia.

High Pressure All Over

That thing that his us the other day was a "fairly strong high pressure system," according to a U. S. Government weather forecaster at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, but it looked like snow to most early-rising students.

The pressure system, according to the forecaster, should move off the N. C. coast by tomorrow.

A "chance of more warm air" was given for the Chapel Hill area tomorrow and Thursday.

Forecast for today is "just fair and sunny and continued cold," with morning temperatures in the upper 30's.

Meanwhile, Hill residents started their yearly exodus to the hardware stores on Franklin St. to buy chains for their rear tires.

Old Memorial Hall:

Woody Fired Up

By BERNIE WEISS

"Ole Man" Woody Herman brought his Third Herd stomping into Chapel Hill late yesterday afternoon and effectively warmed up the atmosphere in the vicinity of Memorial Hall for two hours, much to the enjoyment of nearly 700 students.

Outside it was cold, but inside Herman was raising the roof to make room for the expanding ozone. The Herd ran through 25 numbers and all but the first few captured all imaginable fancies.

The group was slow in starting and the band appeared to be just so many musicians until immediately prior to intermission when "Mambo the Most" brought out the talented soloists.

From that point on it was a race to see who could out-blow who. The audience loved it.

"Mother Goose Jumps," "Apple Honey," "Men From Mars," "Four Brothers and "Golden Wedding," the latter featuring 19-year-old Drummer Chuck Flores, were the best.

Windup number "Dixie" brought the crowd to its feet yelling for an encore, and Herman obliged with "Perdido."

Only fault, if one could call it a fault, lay in the girl vocalist, Lea Matthews. Too often she took off on the Sarah Vaughn style in each of her four renditions.

Soloists, however, were the high point. Bass Trumpeter Cy Touff, Trumpeter Dick Collins, Drummer Flores, Saxist Bill Perkins and Herman on the clarinet and alto sax (plus vocals) drew applause for their efforts.

Herman also drew laughter with his short safari on one leg across the stage during "Mambo the Most."

A big band swinger from the "old school," Herman in recent years has become more and more progressive.

At N. C. State College:

Coliseum Has Birthday

By NCS NEWS BUREAU

RALEIGH, Last week marked the fifth anniversary of the opening of North Carolina State College's William Neal Reynolds Coliseum—largest building of its kind between Atlantic City, N. J. and New Orleans, La.

Since its first use on Dec. 2, 1949, for a basketball game between N. C. State and Washington and Lee University, the Coliseum has attracted 1,900,000 persons from throughout the United States and from many foreign lands.

In November of this year, one show—"Ice Capades of 1955"—drew an attendance of 60,000 from 760 cities and towns, including 635 communities in North Carolina, 90 in Virginia and 35 in South Carolina.

Among the varied events which have ben presented at the Coliseum include appearance of Billy Graham, the Harlem Globetrotters, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, Ice Capades, the Boston Pops, the U. S. Army Band, Architect Frank Lloyd Wright, Horace Heidt, Vaughan Monroe, the Don Cossacks Chorus, the Longine Symphonettes, Sonja Henie's ice show and the "Hippodrome of 1954."

In addition, there has been a national convention of the Home Demonstration Council of America, the annual 4-H Week program, Farm and Home Week observances, a Boy Scout Circus and a Television Fair.

The Coliseum brings thousands of people to the State College campus annually, and most of them come and go to the main area without realizing what a mammoth, almost phenominal, building and operation the South's largest indoor stadium is.

The Reynolds Coliseum was built by the people of North Carolina largely through appropriations voted by the General Assembly at a cost of $2,235,000. It was named in honor of the late W. N. Reynolds, Winston-Salem philanthropist, industrialist, life long friend of State College, whose nephew, R. J. Reynolds, Jr., attended N. C. State and whose niece, the late Mrs. Charles Babcock, donated part of the funds for construction of the building and its ice rink.

It is owned and operated by the college, with the Coliseum Director, W. Z. Betts, and his staff working under the regular college administration. It was first used for the game between N. C. State and Washington and Lee before 12,000 fans, and formally dedicated in April, 1950, during the first ice revue on its rink, "Ice Cycles of 1950."

It includes over 100 rooms. For the Coliseum management, there are 4 management and engineering offices; 17 concession stands, stock room, office: 24 mainten-

Educator Is Visiting University

Dr. Erich Hylla, Director of the Institute for International Research in Education, Frangfurt, Germany, is visiting the University for several days.

Dr. Hylla appeared yesterday as guest speaker at the regular quarterly seminar of the School of Education. Following the seminar there was a social hour in Peabody curriculum laboratory arranged by Dr. Don Tarbet and members of the Future Teachers of America, UNC chapter.

Dr. Arnold Perry, Dean of the UNC School of Education, announced that Dr. Hylla will observe in the School of Education and study work in the psychometric laboratory during his visit here.

Dr. Hylla received his Ph.D. at Columbia University and was invited back to receive an honorary Doctorate during the Columbia University Bicentennial Convocation. He is a leader in educational research and studies of intelligence and achievement testing in Germany.

The Institute of which he is director is sponsored jointly by the American and German Governments, and is affiliated with the University of Frankfurt.

There will be a meeting of the entire membership of the YMCA today at 7 p. m. in Gerrard Hall.

Miss Anne Queen, college representative of the American Friends Service Committee, will speak on the subject, Christian Social Responsibility." An informal reception in the YMCA cabinet room will be held following the meeting.

Students interested in summer service projects, such as workcamps, students in industry and work in mental hospitals, have ben asked to see Miss Queen this afternoon in the Y Library.

New Professional Fraternity Council Now Being Organized

A Professional Fraternity Council, to be modeled somewhat on the order of present Interfraternity Council, is now being organized, according to Chairman Charles Hyatt.

At present, said Hyatt yesterday, fraternities which have expressed an interest in FPC are Delta Sigma Phi and Kappa Alpha (the two business fraternities) and Phi Delta Chi and Rho Chi, Phi (the two pharmacy fraternities).

Aim of the group, said Hyatt, is to be central spokesman between the administration and the professional fraternities.

Chairman Hyatt said a meeting of the council has already been held.

Two Air Scientists Come To Campus Janitor's Aid

Two members of the Department of Air Science contributed a pint of blood each to the sister of a campus janitor, John McRae, last week.

The two, T/Sgt. B. F. Riddle and M/Sgt. Marion Hudson, immediately came to McRae's rescue after the janitor had reportedly asked several friends for blood donations and been turned down.

Now, At Person Hall:

Photos, Kids' Art On Display

Two exhibitions are now showing in Person Hall Art Gallery.

"Creative Art by Children from Many Nations" will be on exhibit until Dec. 15, while the photographs by Harry Callahan will be shown until Dec. 22.

The children's art is from the United Nations International School in New York, where there are 25 nationalities represented among the students and staff of the school.

According to a Person Hall spokesman yesterday, the children and staff share creative art experiences, and "the teacher does not always need a language to communicate with the children."

Miss Maria Gonsa, a teacher at the International School, said, "In general there are certain tendencies that appear in the work of our children. Very young American children express themselves in unrestrained, spontaneous fashion, while Oriental children show an acute dexterity, visual memory and a feeling for stilted form. Middle European children have a tendency to express the richness of peasant design and color enjoyment in their paintings. The sum appears as a prominent symbol in the paintings of children from American countries."

PRESENT EXPERIENCES

Subject matter in the paintings of young children reflects their own present experiences in living and their own personalities, according to the spokesman. As they mature, the school curriculum uses the individual culture of each child and his appreciation of it. The art expression becomes then more reflective of his cultural identity.

The second exhibit, the photographs, represents the work of Harry Callahan, one of the important younger photographers of today, said the Person Hall representative.

The spokesman said "Callahan takes the anastigmat lens into his confidence as he probes and searches into the realm of pattern, of pattern, texture and design. He is continually exploring both himself and the realm of places, people and things and contrasts and relationships."

According to the spokesman, Callahan "is no respector of standard technical formula or codes. Deliberate and gross over-exposure and over-development are just as normal to him for a given result as meter reading and timed development are to the average photographer.

"His delicate sense of pattern is an integral part of his photography and not a thing by itself. What may look like an abstraction actually stands as an intensified reality," he said.

Labor Groups

A bill to disband labor arganizations will be debated by the Dialectic Senate tonight at 8 o'clock.

The debate will be held in the Di Hall on the third floor of New and is open to the public.

An executive session will follow the regular session.

Hospital's Physical Therapy Department Has Helped 2,500

Since the North Carolina Memorial Hospital opened in Sept., 1952, its Physical Therapy Department has given more than 2,500 treatments in gait, training the teaching or training of patients to walk, some of them with braces, crutches, canes or artificial legs.

Recently additional space and equipment for this type of rehabilitation has been made possible by the construction of an outside physical theapy gymnasium and walking court.

Given to the Physical Therapy Department by the Kiwanis Club of Chapel Hill and Miss Gizell Norfleet of Winston-Salem, the outdoor court is located in a sheltered area behind the hospital.

McKensie, Fitzsimmons Take Leads In 'Arsenic'

Rehearsals are now in progress for Joseph Kesselring's "Arsenic and Old Lace," which will run at the Playmakers' Theatre from Dec. 14—18.

Misses Eva McKensie and Marion Fitzsimmons head the cast as the two old ladies. Their brothers are played by Bill Trotman and Baxter Sasser.

The Teaching Of Teachers

The National Educational Association reports that upwards of 700,000 children are being educationally short-changed this year because of a lack of qualified school teachers and buildings.

A national citizens commission expects a public school increase of 12 million in the next 10 years.

And what are our colleges and universities doing to meet the crisis in public education? What methods have we adopted to encourage men and women of intelligence and aptitude to become teachers?

You'd expect to find state universities, the capstones of public education, developing lawyers, doctors, businessmen, pharmacists—to the practical exclusion of teachers.

Educated professionals in these fields are necessary to a healthy state, of course. And besides, lawyers become members of the state legislatures which control the appropriations of universities. Doctors become respected, wealthy citizens of their communities and can contribute money and prestige to schools. The same for businessmen, to whom alma mater must look for contributions in years to come. And why not train pharmacists? Everybody knows where people hang out in towns all over the country, where they form their opinions of everything, including education — in the drugstores!

Meanwhile, the schools continue to fill up at an alarming rate and we resort to the old emergency methods of getting the kids taught. We lower qualification standards for teachers: we send children to school in half-day "shifts."

It was a teacher, as you might expect, who brought to our attention with a wry smile, the great oversight the universities are making in their attempt to educate everybody but teachers. One influential trade has been completely overlooked. There is one place where more people hang out and form opinions than in the drugstores and that is in the barbershop!

Mighty Like A Snow-Storm

We own one of those know-it-all calendars that predict the weather for a whole year. We're down to the last page now and right there under Dec. 6 it says, "Last warm day before winter."

The lesson, of course, is that you can't trust calendars any more than the weatherman. Winter was out there on the ground yesterday. It was hanging in six-inch icicles underneath the cars on Franklin Street, whistling through the bare trees, covering the campus with a motley white.

Out on the Raleigh Road hill, it stacked the cars coming in from Glen Lennox in a bumper-to-bumper, wheel-spinning line. It transformed the holly tree in front of Graham Memorial into a Christmas card photograph.

The calendar and the solstice are against us, but the truth is in the view from our window: Winter, with wind and slush and a turbulent sky out of which the sun sets early, is here.

A Search For Fitzgerald On Wide Screen

Louis Kraar

ATTRACTED BY the almost hidden line on a movie poster that said, "From a story by F. Scott Fitzgerald," I paid my 50 cents for a ticket, purchased a six-cent candy bar, and sat down to watch "The Last Time I saw Paris."

The movie is allegedly based on Fitzgerald's short story "Babylon Revisited." But after an investment of two hours (and 56 cents) of gazing at the Carolina Theater's wide screen, I still think I must have wandered into the wrong place.

In short, the Elizabeth Taylored, technicolored film just isn't like the story. And since this is standard practice in Hollywood, I guess I shouldn't have expected more. However, this will at least serve warning to any sophomores enrolled in English 32 who entertained the idea of seeing the film instead of reading the Babylon story.

"The Last Time I Saw Paris" (which is filmed in Paris) is set in the period after the Second World War—not after the first one. The bubbling spirit of the twenties and thirties, so skillfully drawn by Fitzgerald, fizzles into a tale of an would-be American author (Van Johnson) and his party-girl wife (Elizabeth Taylor).

After several attempts at writing novels, actor Johnson finds himself rich from a oil strike. He quits his job on a Paris news service to write, but ends up partying his way out of the heart of his wife.

Meantime the wife (rather beautiful, but not too smart) begins cavorting with Parisian gigolos. Finally, actress Taylor is locked out of the house by her drunken husband, and it kills her.

The would-be author, used-to-be husband, returns to America and his child is turned over to his sister-in-law. In America, would-be author beomes a successful one and returns to Paris to reclaim his little girl.

And of this is complicated (but not too much) by the sister-in-law (Donna Reed), who was in love with the would-be author and who wants to keep the child.

As expected, it ends rather happily for the author and unhappily for those who go into the theater expecting to see something like Fitzgerald wrote.

If you're not a keen Fitzgerald fan and want a couple hours of rather clever dialogue, glamour views of Elizabeth Taylor, and Paris scenery, by all means do see "The Last Time I Saw Paris."

Actually, for a movie, it's not bad. I do suggest that you buy your candy bars at the drug store down the street though, because they're only a nickel there instead of six cents.

A CLOSE friend swears this really happened to him last weekend:

The friend, upon receiving an invitation to an informal dance at Woman's College, wrote that he'd be most happy to attend the dance. In a rash of what he thought was cleverness, he wrote the WC girl that he'd be there "in my informal."

Came the day of the big dance and my friend found a note from the WC girl in his mailbox. "From your letter I take it you don't like to wear coats and ties. However, they are required at our dance," wrote the WC girl.

The friend, realizing that the WC girl had taken his letter literally, wired her at once: "How about Bermuda shorts then—with coat and tie, of course?"

That night when he arrived at our sister institution for the dance(with suit and nectie and without Bermude shorts), half the girls in his date's dorm were surprised.

The other half evidently realized all along that it was a joke. And fortunately for my friend, so did his date.

'Come On — Let's Take The Shortcut'

Flashbacks On Joe

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON—The public's memory is short. But a statesman's memory must be long. And during the McCarthy debate the President, Mr. Nixon, and others must have experienced some interesting flashbacks as to what happened with some of the same principals in the McCarthy debate only a short time ago.

Last October, Senator William Knowland of California, Eisenhower's so-called Republican leader, attending the funeral of Senator Pat McCarran in Nevada, conferred with Jenner of Indiana, Welker of Idaho, others of McCrathy's stanchest friends. Together they planned the fight to block his censure. After the funeral they came away dead certain Bill Knowland would vote with them. They were not dissappointed.

Flashback No. 1 — Meanwhile Senator Knowland said nothing. He said nothing until last week when he rose to announce he would vote for McCarthy. Knowland is heavy-built, slow-moving. His speech can be ponderous, deliberate. "After great searching of my conscience, and mindful of the responsibilities I feel heavily from sitting in this chair, "I shall not vote for the censure resolution. . . . The decision was not an easy one. . . . I arrived at it only last night."

McCarthy supporters smiled. The speech was no news to them.

Flashback No. 2—It was September 1952. Tom Dewey, the man who got Eisenhower nominated and was then his closest adviser, came to see him. He knew Ike was leaving for Milwaukee, where he must either be nice to Joe McCarthy or be tough with him. Dewey spent two hours with Eisenhower urging him to be tough.

"You will have to face this issue sooner or later," he said in brief, "and you might just as well face it now. I ducked on the issue of Curley Brooks (Chicago Tribune candidate for senator) when I campaigned in Illinois and it cost me votes. You can't compromise with the McCarthy wing of the party."

Eisenhower followed his advice, inserted two paragraphs in his Milwaukee speech defending his old friend, General George Marshall, indirectly criticizing McCarthy. One day later, GOP stalwarts Arthur Summerfield, Ferguson of Michigan, Hickenlooper of Iowa, with Tom Coleman of Wisconsin, flew to Ike's train, urged him to revise his speech. McCarthy himself did the final persuadnig when smuggled up the service elevator of the Pere Marquette Hotel in Peoria. Ike yielded. He smiled on McCarthy in Wisconsin. McCarthy was re-elected.

Flashback No. 3 — Eisenhower was on the stage at a political rally in Indianapolis. Senator Jenner of Indiana sat beside him. Ike was obviously unhappy. Jenner had called George Marshall, the man who promoted Ike from Lieutenant Colonel to Lieutenant General in one year, a "front man for traitors" and "a living lie." But the candidate for President had been told he had to endorse all GOP candidates. He couldn't discriminate. It was part of politics.

So he posed before the cameras while Jenner, gloating in the limelight, held up his hand like a cheap boxer bowing to the crowd.

Last week, the same Senator Jenner strode up and down the aisle of the Senate chamber. This time he held both hands clenched over his head. This time he laughed hysterically. "Poor old Zwicker," he chortled, "He does not count. He is out the window. Zwicker is out and now you want to fight communism."

He threw his arm as if pitching a ball, then strode up and down the aisle, both fists clenched over his head, as scornful of anti-McCarthy Republicans as he had been of General Marshall four years before.

Flashback No. 4 — It was March 1953. The new President had been in office just two months. Suddenly, Joe McCarthy announced that he had made an agreement with certain Greek shipowners regarding trade behind the iron curtain. Making agreements with foreigners is sot the prerogative of Congress. That was threshed out in the days of George Washington, and there's a law on the statute books making it a prison offense for a congressman to meddle with foreign policy.

Knowing this, Harold Stassen, whose job it was to administer foreign shipping, issued a statement putting McCarthy in his place. McCarthy, he said, had "undermined" U. S. policy.

Next day, Vice President Nixon, then chief defender of Joe McCarthy, ran down to the State Department, then to the White House. Later Eisenhower announced that McCarthy had not "undermined" Administration policy. Later Stassen issued a humble statement, eating crow.

Last week, the same Vice President Nixon presided over the Senate.

From the rostrum he looked down at his Republican colleagues, torn apart by a debate which should have been settled two years before — settled by a firm leadership from him and the President.

Other Flashbacks — There were many other memories that flashed through the minds of senators watching that debate — memories which also may have flashed through the mind of the President himself. . . . Alben Barklev of Kentucky in 1944 resigning as majority leader before, not after, he made a speech differing with FDR. Knowland differing with Ike time after time, has not resigned . . . . The Army-McCarthy hearings, which split a Republican administration and a republican senate and which were hastened to a close because of bad reaction to washing dirty linen in public . . . . The Democratic prediction that they would help Ike on major policy more than the Republicans. . . . Democratic leader Lyndon Johnson keeping every one of his votes in line, solidly without defection, in contrast to Republican disruption across the Senate aisle.

And more than anything else, there were flashbacks to the same foreign policy trouble that haunted Herbert Hoover, the split between the isolationists and interventionists—the memories of Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson in London announcing that we would consult with Europe in case war threatened, while Hoover in Washington was telling a press conference we would not consult.

That's the crisis regarding which the Republican Party sorely needs time to lick its wounds. That's the split which has aroused more interparty bitterness than since the days of Hoover. Can those wounds be healed? Eisenhower needs them healed to carry out a consistent foreign policy. But usually a political split of this kind widens rather than narrows.

And One More On Honor

Editor:

The Honor System at the University of North Carolina is in a state of decadence. The very system of which the students of this great University regulate the conduct of the student body is rotting away at our feet. To some, this may seem a highly exaggerated concept, void of any substantial proof.

To those who thing so, let them stop for a moment and ask anyone who has been in the University long enough to know what the situation really is. They would, if they were not ashamed to, tell you that cheating is exercised, in one form or another, in just about every examination that is given in the classroom. Cheating is a debasement of our institution, and if allowed to continue will wreck that which in the early years of our University's formation was fought so hard for.

That is, the students obtained from the trustees the right to conduct themselves honorably in exams without faculty supervision. The Honor System is a privilege that every student should enjoy and be proud to live under.

One of the main difficulties in having the Honor System work effectively is that of having to report someone caught in the act of cheating. It is very difficult for one student to report another, especially if they are the best of friends.

I personally believe that this is the pivot point of the whole system. However, when one fails to report another for cheating, he is actually undermining the foundatin upon which the Honor System rests. The effectiveness of a system such as this, depends upon the cooperation of the entire student body, and unless every single one cooperates, it is hard to believe that it works at all!

Why is it that students shy away from reporting a guilty party? There are several reasons that I can think of. first, students are afraid of being looked down upon, and being branded "stool pigeon" by their fellow students. I feel that this reason is the strongest one among the few that I shall mention.

Secondly, a lot of students do not want to accept the responsibility of reporting the ones they suspect because they might feel that when their judgment was in error while trying to decide if the student was actualy cheating or not.

Thirdly, some students on this campus are impersonal as to whether a student is cheating or not. They feel as if it is none of their concern, and don't bother to turn in the offender. An Honor System will never work with this attitude. Furthermore, if everyone had this attitude, there would be no need for an Honor System at all!

A fourth reason might be that the accuser does not want to go before the Honor Council to testify, and in so doing, point his finger at a fellow student.

Here, then, are some reasons why our Honor System has decayed to such a degree.

How can we students rectify this deplorable state of affairs? How can we make the Honor System work effectively? It is a very difficult question to give an answer to. I would suggest doing it the painful way—that is, report every last one caught in the act of cheating and do it without failure or hesitation.

47,000 EMPLOYEES

For the 1953-55 biennium a total of $246,314,369 was appropriated from the General Fund for the State's public schools. This represents by far the major fund expenditure—61.3% of the total. The State meets the cost of the nine-months public school term, paying the salaries of approximately 47,000 full-time and part-time employees in the public school system, including all public school teachers, superintendents and administrative personnel, and the parttime school bus drivers.—Popular Government.

COULD BE WRONG

A woman called up for jury duty refused to serve because she didn't believe in capital punishment.

Trying to persuade her, the judge explained: "This is merely a case where a wife is suing her husband because she gave him a thousand dollars to pay down on a fur coat and he lost the money in a poker game."

"I'll serve," she said. "I could be wrong about capital punishmet."—Farm & Rancher.

Ialda Nosnevets & The Eggheads

Ed Yoder

(Synopsis: The egghead Revolution, it will be remembered, broke out at university seats all up and down the East Coast. Nosnevets, the leader of the revolution, issued the manifesto, the first words of which read, "Eggheads of the world unite! You have nothing to lose but your yolks." In the last installment of the story, Nosnevets had arrived in Cambridge, Mass., only to find that the revolutionaries had marched off down the Boston Post Road toward Wall Street, where the first battle was to take place aganst the forces of the New York Stock Exchange and the American Legion.)

Banners waving, bands playing, the revolutionaries marched down the old road toward New York City and Wall Street. Many of the revolutionaries carried insignia—large replicas of inkwells, pens, hooks, horn rimmed glasses—at the top of long poles. Most of them were dressed in oxford gray suits.

They were all singing, above the blare of the bands and bugles, a song called the Interacademe." It was generally assumed that this was the song of the revolution.

Even from the Cambridge Station, Ialda Nosnevets could hear the noise of the march; he thought they must not be too far gone. But he had just returned from exile in Illinois, where he had been since the peaceful coup of 1952 failed.

He was tired and hungry and the old porter who didn't know where he'd been said:

"Come on down town, Ialda, and get a balogna sandwich."

"But I've got to get to Wall Street!"

"Oh, there'll be plenty of time for that. Eat and then I'll put you on a fast train for Grand Central Station."

Meanwhile, at Wall Street, the forces of the American Legion had barricaded the deep canyons. A spy at Cambridge had telegraphed news of the approaching battle. Many of the Stock Exchange soldiers were frightened. They remembered that back in 1929 someone had set off a bomb at the corner opposite the Stock Exchange and the Bank. Luckily, most of the Generals had been having a meeting upstairs and had escaped injury. But they found it hard to forget the last instance of disorder in Fort Wall Street and wanted to take every precaution.

The revolutionaries had moved fast. The distant sound of the "Interacademe" could be heard from upstairs over the Stock Exchange. Flicker Clambers, who had been made General for the battle, looked out the window through his telescope.

"What an idiot I was to ever be an egghead," he moaned. "Look what they're about to do."

'Do you think we can stave them off?" a lieutenant asked from behind him.

"I hope so," General Clambers said. "I can't see, though, why the people just stand along the road and let them haul those tremendous First and Fifth Cannons along."

"It is bad."

"Yes it is. We just don't want any First and Fith Cannon Americans."

"I guess the people tolerate First and Fifth Cannons because it's a sort of tradition," the lieutenant ventured.

"The hell with tradition," General Clambers growled, "tradition doesn't bring security."

The loud-speaker just behind General Clambers began to buzz. The lieutenant picked up the ear phone.

"Staff headquarters for the Ten Million mobilizing against the eggheads," he said. "Yes. Yes. Captain Foster. They're in the Bronx? They are?"

"What it it," asked General Clambers. "Who is that?"

"It's Captain Foster. He said he was so busy giving instructions that he didn't realize how close the Eggheads are. He says they're down in the Bronx and they're coming this way on the subways."

"Almost here?" General Clambers' jaw-muscle twitched. "Foster talks too much, anyway. Lieutenant Reklew, you'd better take this mickey-mouse watch with wrist alarm down to General Foster. Otherwise, he'll talk all day and never do anything about the revolutionaries."

"Yes sir."

Once again, General Clamers leaned out the high window and searched the streets below. He could see that the Legion and Stock Ex forces were thoroughly entrenched below. Elsewhere, the avenues of the Great City had cleared

From some unimaginable place beneath the cold asphalt of the streets he could hear a dim rumble made by moving subways. Above it all drifted the dim strains of the Interacademe. General Clambers picked up the Intercommunications microphone.

"Captain Foster!" He barked. "Don't fire till you see the pink of their eyes."

Freedom Never Was Safe & Still Isn't

Gerald Johnson
On WAAM, Baltimore

The question posed for college debaters this year was, "Should the United States recognize Red China?" It is a legitimate question involving an important public policy; but the service academies, Annapolis and West Point, promptly refused to debate it on the ground that it is improper for officers of the United States to question any governmental policy; at least one civilian college withdrew, frankly because it thought it dangerous for any college to take the affirmative; and a Congressman of the United States advised a student in Duke university that if he argued the affirmative the fact was likely to be used against him in after life.

In other words, free Americans were warned that it is dangerous for them to question anything of it is, it is dangerous. Oppenheimer, Davies, Edward U. Condon at Lattimore are all living examples of how dangerous it is for a plain citizen to challenge what a wise man of an earlier day described as "the insolence of elected persons." They are capable of pursing their victim for years and decades, and inflicting upon him enormous losses it not complete ruin.

LENNY ROSENBLUTH, Carolina's 6'5" forward, has started the season by living up to expectations. His record-breaking scoring last year as a frosh rated him mention in Dell Basketball Magazine as "one of the top freshmen in the country." In Carolina's two games thus far this season, against McCrary and Clemson, lanky Len has led individual scoring with 22 and 30 points, respectively. Above, the rangy sophomore from New York City displays one of his major attributes, a giant-sized paw, as he holds a basketball in one of them.

Carolina's Tar Heels will get back into Atlantic Coast Conference competition here Thursday night when they take on the South Carolina Gamecocks at Woolen Gym.

The game will be preceded by a 6:15 preliminary between the Tar Babies and the Atlantic Christian jayvees. The freshmen play tonight, too, meeting the High Point College junior varsity at High Point.

Last night the varsity and the frosh scrimmaged at a "clinic" in Lexington. Coach Frank McGuire was pleased at the large turnout.

McGuire, however, is not so pleased with the team. He spotted much poor ballhanding and passing in Saturday evening's 99-66 breeze over Clemson, and also said he thought the team could stand some physical improvement. "I'll have the boys running a lot to get in shape," he said."

South Carolina shold prove a better match for Carolina than did Clemson. The Birds have eight lettermen reurning. This game will be their first of the year against conference competition.

Cunningham, injured in a recent scrimmage against the varsity, may not be able to get into action until Friday night when the team plays against the Duke frosh in Durham. Frosh coach Buck Freeman hopes that Cunningham will be ready by Thursday night, but is doubtful.

Harvey Robinson Ousted As Tennessee Grid Coach

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 6 (AP) —Harvey Robinson was fired today as head football coach at the University of Tennessee. His successor was not named immediately.

Chairman N. W. Dougherty of the athletic council announced that the council had voted unaimously not to renew Robinson's contract for the next season.

At the same time, Dougherty said that a committee was named to seek "a suitable head coach from any available possibilities." He said the committee will submit its recommendations to the athletic council at a later date.

Dougherty said the council's action was concurred in by the athletic and executive committees of the Tennessee board of trustees.

Since the council meeting was called last week, there have been increasing reports that Robinson and his assistants would not be rehired when their one-year contracts expire Dec. 31.

–State's Coliseum Celebrates Birthday–

ance rooms for equipment, ventilation fans, switches, electric storage; 10 rest rooms; a first aid room; a sound room, and an elevator room. For the college military department, there are 18 ROTC classrooms, offices, and a library. For the college athletic department, there are nine offices, seven dressing rooms, two equipment rooms, two training rooms, three shower rooms, two locker rooms and a coaches' lounge.

Its multi-colored lights give it a unique reputation of being the best-lighted basketball arena in the country. Among its lighting arena facilities are 342 lights with varying watt capacities and with varying colors and light intensities.

The Coliseum was not designed as a profit-making enterprise, since it is a publicly-operated institution. However, it must earn its own way, since no state funds are appropriated for the operation and maintenance of this massive plant.

The Federal Amusement Tax, the State Sales Tax and other expenses involved in this kind of operation often leave the Coliseum's share of the gate receipts much less than many people would realize. And in the gaps between events, the plant has to continue operation, upkeep and maintenance.

When possible, the College Business Manager and Coliseum Director try to obtain reduced prices for students to commercial productions through the management of the various shows, — including one-night shows, which do not normally give reduced rates.

The Coliseum serves State College students in various ways. They are admitted to all N. C. State athletic events on their student identification passes, except the Dixie Classic, the Atlantic Coast Conference and the NCAA basketball tournaments.

They are admitted to all regularly-scheduled intercollegiate basketball games on their student passes. The Coliseum does not receive a cent from student athletic fees. A nominal rental fee is charged student organizations sponsoring dances there.

In addition to classroom and technical facilities for ROTC students, the Coliseum provides complete facilities for all intercollegiate teams of State College, including dressing, training, equipment and shower rooms.

Seating capacities for various events are 12,500 for basketball, 10,000 for ice shows, 11,000 for stage events, 14,000 for speaking events, and up to 15,000 for conventions. It is 463 feet long and 235 feet wide, with an arena floor of 108 feet by 312 feet.

It has 8,000 seats in the balcony, 1,500 seats in each end of the arena, 500 seats on each side of the arena floor. Opera-type chairs are used in the balcony and portable chairs with foam leather seats on the arena floor. The balcony has 22 sections, the arena floor 16 sections for sport events, 18 sections for stage events.

In addition, the Reynolds Coliseum has its share of "extras" that make it one of the finest coliseums in the nation. They are a large Hammond Organ for giving musical color to all events; 12 acres of parking space in vicinity of the building; a basement under entire arena area for storing props, machinery and equipment; scientifically designed sound system operated from a control console; stage facilities for speaking, dramatics, other special events; a ventilating system that changes the air in the whole structure every 15 minutes, consisting of 8 overhead exhaust fans of 40,000 cubic feet capacity each, and other fans; complete dual communication system throughout the building; hydraulic freight elevator from arena floor to basement, a light director's booth for direction of productions requiring extensive control of all communications, sound and lighting; eight booths for radio-television broadcasting; equipped with spot lights and rectifiers, and central electric console to control all lights.

–Kefauver Assails 'Influence'– explore possible means of unity other than in a purely military way." Atlantic democracies have in the past joined forces in time of war, he said, and added that "it has been my theory that we ought to have more binding arrangements for joining together in times of peace for pursuing a common foreign policy, and a common economic policy — in the hopes of preventing war."

"During the past two years, at least, we have had no progress in that direction," said Sen. Kefauver.

He cited "a combination of influences and forces" as one block in the way of peacetime atlantic cooperation. Among the forces, he said, were "powerful go-it-alone and isolationist elements here at home."

But, added the senator, "the people of the United States are far ahead of many of their so-called leaders in their conception of this nation's proper place in the world today.

"The people are ready for closer cooperation," he said, "and in the final analysis, in a democracy such as ours, the voice of the people will be heard.

"The isolationist, the go-it-alone exponents, have a curious counterpart in those who still preach the doctrine of preventive war," said Sen. Kefauver. "It was this influence, I feel, which contributed toward the Secretary of State's pronouncement of the doctrine of 'massive retaliation.'

"I feel sure he must have regretted that," the senator said, "for I don't believe he thinks that way, and it is understandable that this threat so frightened our allies in Europe.

"In the event of a global hydrogen war," he said, "they would stand exposed to massive annihilation."

The senator termed the opportunity for "renewed efforts" toward unity by the NATO powers, including the U. S., "greater today than it has been since 1952."

Sandy Dann, UNC's Spearfisherman,

Rides Stingarees Bareback

Sandy Dann, a Phi Delta Theta from Orlando, Fla., enjoys a sport where there is never a dull moment, or a safe one either.

He has held records in the use of the spear gun and in cave diving. Among the most exciting incidents are excavating Spanish galleon cannons, exploring underwater caves, riding a monster and being surrounded by a school of barracuda.

The person who uses the spear gun is meeting the fish on equal ground. Equipment for the dive includes feet flappers, bathing suit, face mask, weight belt, knife, test line, spear gun and aqualung.

PRESSURE—GREATEST ENEMY

Aqua lung is a tank that the swimmer wears on his back that connects by a hose to the mouth. This compensates for the pressure, which, Sandy explained, is the greatest enemy of all. The pressure of the water on the body doubles with every added 32 to 35 feet of depth. Aqua lung tends to equalize pressure of body and water.

Sandy first began this sport when he was 12. "It is the fastest growing sport in the United States," he said. It began in France 20 to 25 years ago.

Since he began, Sandy has done most of his free-swimming off the Florida Keys. He uses, like other participants in the sport, an aqualung for self-contained breathing.

Around the coral reefs off the Keys, he had stalked a variety of fish, mainly the Warsaw grouper, barracuda and leopard ray.

The weapon is a gas-propelled instrument that operates on the same principle as a harpoon. When the trigger is pulled, the spear shoots out, propelled by carbon dioxide. Attached to the spear is a line.

NEW WORLD

The world's record for free-diving is 127 feet, and Sandy consistently dives at 80 to 100 feet. He has excavated a number of wrecks off the Florida coasts and has done work throughout Florida in such places as Silver Springs. He tests these springs for the flow of the water and extent of mineral deposits.

In describing the colors of the land beyond the surface, he explained that there are no red shades after 40 feet and nothing but shades of blue after 100 feet. Once a swimming partner of his was struck with "rapture of the depth," a form of nitrogen poisoning. Blood rushed out of his nose and filled his mask, the color of the blood—green. He explained that if a person went up 10 feet without exhaling on the way, his lungs would rupture. This is a much more serious thing than "rapture of the depth;" if the lungs rupture, the swimmer would be all right as long as he stayed in the water. When he came to the surface, however, he would die instantly.

"It's a new, unexplored world," Sandy remarked. It is a battle with the fish on his terms, where the fish moves at 80 miles per hour, and the hunter moves at two miles per hour, constantly fighting the pressure.

RIDING A FISH

Sandy severed the tail of a stingaree that had a seven foot wingspread and rode him like a giant sea horse once. A 600 pound barracuda once threw him against a cave wall and dragged his diving partner for over a mile.

There is always the element of surprise. Once he saw a barracuda leading a school of about 20 fish; the leader had six hooks in his mouth. When the leader

SP Talks On Autos & Owners

By JACKIE GOODMAN

Cars at Carolina and the students' right to keep them here was the subject of Monday night's Student Party meeting.

Chairman Don Geiger said the question of whether or not the party should drop the plank which calls for party opposition to any move to abolish students right to have cars here from the platform had come up in party caucus.

Since only 17 members of the party attended the meeting, no action was taken on the matter.

Geiger quoted the group which was opposed to keeping the plank in the SP platform as saying in caucus, "If we went on record as opposing such a move we would be barking up a hollow tree, since, if they were going to do it, they would do it anyway, whether we liked it or not."

In expressing his own opinion, the SP chief said, "Platform is an expression of the way we feel. I don't think we should change our platform just because we feel it can't be done.

An announcement was made at the end of the meeting that Dean Fred Weaver will speak at next Monday's meeting. Geiger said that Dean Weaver's topic will be "What's Wrong With Student Government," and he invited all interested students to hear him.

Thieves Take Papers, Stand

"News hungry" thieves who are apparently not content at merely taking five cents worth of newspaper booty daily Monday added an "honor system" stand, contents and all, to their growing loot.

The latest outburst of thievery had its scene Monday afternoon at the Monogram club.

The harrassed circulators yesterday said emphatically that "if by persistent vigil the thieves who consider five cents worth of reading just cause to be brought before the Honor Council with dismissal from the University at possible end are apprehended, they will be dealt with severely."

Need 'Adequate Engagements'

By PEGGY BALLARD

"There was never a need so great as there is today for an adequate engagement," a noted authority on the field of marriage told a group of students Monday night.

Dr. Reuben Hill, the co-author of the book, When You Marry, and several magazine articles, spoke on "The Meaning of Engagement" at the third in a series of four programs sponsored by the YMCA and the YWCA.

Dr. Hill brought to the attention of his audience the shift in function of the engagement period. In the earlier days of the institution of marriage, he said, the feeling behind the union of two people was merely for the perpetuation of the race. Then, too, more importance was placed on the union of the two families, rather than the two as individuals. Finally, he said, the financial gains played an important part in the selection of who would marry.

Today, one finds very little economic advantage in marriage since both men and women can live more cheaply single than married, Dr. Hill declared. Marriage today is thought of in terms of companionship and individual development through marriage.

Dr. Hill presented a few marital statistics of the United States. Out of the total population of the ages 14-90, he said, 68 per cent are married at some time, while only 21 per cent remain single. The divorce status is 2 per cent of the total population. This questionable figure is due to the fact that divorced people quickly re-marry and are not caught at census time, Dr. Hill explained.

"Building an engagement into a marriage is much harder than becoming engaged," stressed Dr. Hill. Not until both people anticipate marriage does engagement really begin. Announcement of the engagement may be formal, dramatic or informal.

Visitors to our country remark on the informality of engagement found here, he said, and added that there are today cases in such countries as Scotland, Sweden and Norway, where the girl must prove herself fertile before the final step of marriage is taken.

"How long and how intimate should the engagement be?" is the question frequently asked, continued Dr. Hill.

1. "Short but brittle" is one possible answer to the question. Dr. Hill said that in this answer, the boy may give his fraternity pin to the girl in exchange for necking privileges and the girl may accept the pin to add to her collection of jewelry.

DR. REUBEN HILL
. . . 68 percent are married

2. "Poor company and let's break it," is another answer to the question. One or both agree they are not good for each other.

3. "Elopement," is really an escape from engagement and a poor beginning of marriage.

4. "Long engagement," Dr. Hill explained, is a relationship which might receive the companionship of marriage without the economic problems. Sexual tension built up may, however, cause a complete severance of the relationship or non-conformance to the accepted sex code.

5. "Long enough to verify the relationship," concluded Dr. Hill, is perhaps the more desirable answer. This period may be as little as 6 months or as long as 2 years. He emphasized that during this time there is a constant re-evaluating of the relationship.

The lecture was followed by a Coronet film entitled "The Meaning of Engagement," and the program was concluded with a discussion period.

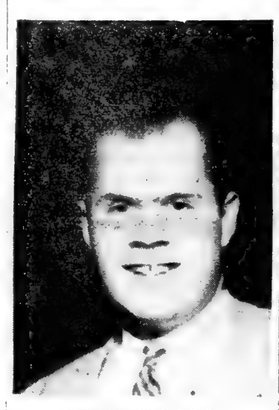
Barclay Rumor

The office of Jake Wade, UNC sports publicity director, said late yesterday that the office has no information on the proposed hiring of Maryland's Jim Tatum as head football coach to replace present Coach George Barclay.

Wade's office expressed puzzlement over the Associated Press story from Miami, Fla., which was transmitted at 12:30 Tuesday morning, quoting "an excellent source" that Tatum would replace Barclay.

"We know nothing about it," was the answer from Woollen Gym yesterday.

The story appeared in yesterday morning's Miami Daily News. It was written by Sports Editor Morris McLemore.



Editor McLemore quoted "an insider on the situation" as saying:

"This looks like it — Tatum is coming. But I think it'll be announced after an Athletic Board meeting in Chapel Hill on Dec. 14."

A spokesman from the Athletic Board said yesterday he knew nothing of the situation.

Columnist And Politician Will Appear Before 'Court' Friday

Bob Byrd, prosecutor in the annual Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity mock trial which will be held Friday night in the Law School, said yesterday that he "would be out to get a conviction against Daily Tar Heel columnist Louis Kraar on the charge of assault with a deadly weapon."

LEGISLATOR REID
. . . injured? How?

Kraar is "charged" with attacking SP legislator Dave Reid in a Y-Court affray on Nov. 3 of this year.

The "fight" alledgedly started over a UNC coed from Asheville, Connie McMahon. According to reports, Miss McMahon had been dating Reid all year but just before the fight had been seen out with Kraar and walked into Y-Court with him just before the fight started.

Kraar has been "out on bail" since the day after the fight and Reid was "recently released" from a local clinic where he had been undergoing treatment for "injuries" alledgedly suffered in the brawl.

Miss McMahon has been seen with neither of the participants since the fight; although it is "rumored" that she has been dating Kraar. If Kraar married Miss McMahon she could not testify against him at the trial. She witnessed the fight.

UNC's Sororities Celebrated Over Weekend With Pledge Dances

Winter Wonderland At Alpha Gam

By ELEANOR SAUNDERS

A "Winter Wonderland" atmosphere was in evidence last Saturday night when Gamma Epsilon chapter of Alpha Gamma Delta presented its annual pledge dance at the Naval Armory.

Couples danced to the music of Jim Crisp and his orchestra. Decorations consisted of a white crepe paper ceiling hung with snowflakes, evergreens covered with snow and snowballs and a white and silver sleigh filled with gaily colored Christmas gifts. A huge Christmas package stood at one side of the dance floor. On it were formed the Greek Alpha Gamma Delta letters.

Ray Jefferies, Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs office served as master of ceremonies and announced each pledge as she took her place in the traditional snowflake figure. Each girl car-

The High Road

"Two roads diverged in a yellow wood . . . Sorry I could not have traveled both," begins a well-known poem by Robert Frost.

Last week, the Eisenhower Administration came to such a fork, realizing both paths could not be traveled, and picked the right one.

Secretary of State Dulles, in one of his more courageous moods, asserted himself, with President Eisenhower's backing, as the chief of U. S. foreign policy and ruled out a blockade of Red China. And the President re-stressed his position against rash war, announced a policy of "competitive coexistence", a soothing lotion for the frayed nerves of the Allies.

The emphasis in Washington seems to be shifting to the viewpoint that total war, even total victory, will not establish the kind of living conditions the free nations want. Leaders in the government have apparently turned from trying to straddle two or three roads in foreign policy at the same time.

The new policy will call for new vigor and new patience. It will call for great new economic programs for the world. It will call for concentration on the one path we are now committed to tread.

Many Democratic leaders and some within Mr. Eisenhower's own party have long urged the adoption of a one-road foreign policy; the President deserves credit for seeing the light.

There is reason to hope, in the Robert Frost phrase at the end of the same poem, that historians will be able to say, "That has made all the difference."

White Man's Justice In The Blue Ridges

Behind occasional U.S. grumblings about caste systems and moral darkness among many of the ancient and more aboriginal countries of the world may throb a guilty conscience arising from its treatment of the American Indians.

From Asheville comes the ironic tidings that Unto These Hills, a North Carolina outdoor drama describing the brutal treatment of the Cherokee nation at the sword of the white man, may play an indirect role in abridging the rights of the Indians again.

The tourist attraction of the outdoor drama has skyrocketed the value of many Indian lands held in reserve by the Department of the Interior. Now ultra laisses-faire ist McKay, Secretary of the Interior, has given notice that the Federal government may get out of Indian affairs, leaving land that should be protected and reserved for Indian use for acquisition by the biggest cut-throat, Indian or white man. We suspect the white men will eventually get it.

The time is foreseeable when the Indians will be completely deprived of the land that rightfully belongs to them. Our shell of self-righteousness sustains big cracks when we try to mix proper international relations with unfair treatment of minority groups at home.

Intelligence By Frequency Modulation

Several thousand people listened to Estes Kefauver speak on the Atlantic Community night before last who were not in Memorial Hall. They heard the speech and the question and answer period at home over WUNC, the campus FM station.

The Kefauver speech was just one in a continuing series of WUNC's services to the community. It broadcasts all notable speeches and concerts on the campus and offers a steady and consistently rich diet of scholarly discussions, interviews, musical programs and special events. It has kept high standards, to the delight of a faithful band of listeners.

WUNC is an FM station, which means it's not available on the radios of most students. But if your taste runs higher than the Arthur Godfrey-"Sh' Boom"-Saturday Night Hayride brand of radio listening, you're missing out on a source of constant enjoyment if you don't own an FM radio.

With Christmas at hand, a word to the wise should suffice.

What To Buy Your Friends And Enemies

Louis Kraar

PINK-NOSED coeds slipping along campus in the ice the other day reminded me that the gift-buying days are scarcer than good professors.

So with the Christmas carols of Kemp's Record Shop in one ear and the bank teller's announcement of my balance in the other, I set out to consider what to buy.

Sinking into one of the Graham Memorial lounge's deep chairs, I studied some of the slick magazines that are brimming with ads this time of year. And as a special service, this reporter is going to pass along to you some of the top suggestions for gifts.

For the outdoor type, you might give a pair of wool socks that are wired to give a mild electrical hot-foot. The socks sell for about $20. and the heater is run from batteries. The fortunate wearer merely strings the wires up his legs to the batteries carried in one's pockets.

The socks with the built-in heater sound like a fine gift for a friend. And if you have an enemy who tramps about in the rain, giving him a pair of these socks may remove him from your life forever.

Now if you're feeling rich, try a new gift from France called The Drinking Bear. The 15-inch tall animal is coated in pony-skin and carries a cocktail glass in one hand and bottle in the other.

All you do is plug the little fellow into an AC outlet, pour him a drink, and he's off. He then gulps it down, pours himself another—from his own bottle—drinks it, and then has another, and so on until you cut his current off.

The only thing about the inbibing bear (beside the $150 price) is that he keeps drinking the same drink, a habit I wish some of my friends would cultivate. Apparently, the only purpose of the critter is to amuse and look good. And for $150, I can think of other bar occupants who would meet the same requirements—plus some additional ones.

Perhaps those two gift suggestions will help you—that is, if you have $20 and enemies or $150 and no barmaid. If not, do what I did and send your friends greeting cards.

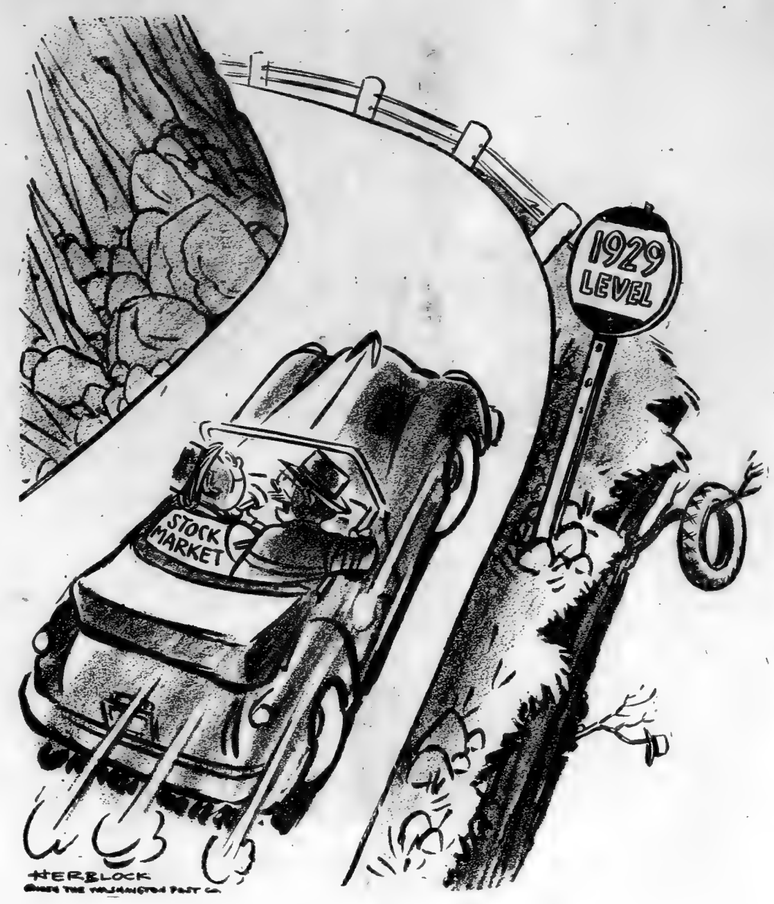
ONCE IN a physics class, the professor talked about something I believe he called 'sympathetic vibration."

This phenomenon was supposed to occur when two objects were at the same frequency. Thus, when you play a piano and the vase on a nearby table rattles, you have sympathetic vibration.

Entering Memorial Hall to hear the Woody Herman Herd the other day, I chanced to remember the sympathetic vibration principle and, sure enough, it works even at jazz concerts.

Up on the stage maestro Herman and company were vibrating with "Apple Honey." And down in the audience, particularly on the front row, the heads and feet of student listeners were moving right along with the band.



Remembering another part of that physics course (and I wasn't a very ardent student of the science), I headed for the balcony to get a better view—to check my results, as they say in Phillips Hall.

From the balcony the pattern of shaking heads and feet was even clearer, proving that even in Phillips Hall labs you can learn something.

MY THANKS TO the editor of Cobb Dorm's paper for the article parodying this reporter's column on popular songs and TV. Imitation is still the highest form of flattery, you know.

'You Sure This Road Is Safe Now?'

The 3 Big Cabinet Battles

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON—Ever since the election, when it became apparent that Oregon's bushy-browed Sen. Wayne Morse would cast the deciding vote in the Senate, both Republican and Democratic leaders have been super-sweet to the independent Senator they used to cold-shoulder.

For example, Vice President Richard Nixon sidled up to Morse the other day and grabbed his hand.

"Wayne, I want to congratulate you on the high calibre campaign you conducted," boomed the Vice President, referring to the past election campaign.

"Dick," retorted Morse evenly, "I wish I could say the same for you."

Dulles' Footwork

It was while Humphrey was in Rio De Janeiro fighting Battle No. 3 that he just about lost Battle No.1. This is with John Foster Dulles, Secretary of Defense Wilson and Foreign Operations Administrator Harold Stassen over a Marshall Plan to Asia.

"Dulles," who was supposed to go to the Rio Conference, decided not to go, appointed Humphrey as chief U. S. delegate—though not for the purpose of working behind Humphrey's back. While Humphrey was gone, however, he did get busy with some fast footwork which lined up part of the cabinet for the Asiatic Marshall Plan.

Meeting three times with Eisenhower, Dulles got his okay. Charley Wilson also concurred—provided the Marshall Plan went hand in hand with a bigger Army-Navy-Air Force. Eisenhower agreed.

Dulles then called a secret meeting of newsmen at a downtown hotel and leaked the idea that current American economic policies with Asia were not good; that to remedy this Eisenhower had agreed to back his aid plan even if it meant unbalancing the budget.

Stassen, who was already sold on the idea, quickly called newsmen to a similar confidential luncheon. Charley Wilson did likewise.

So when Humphrey got back from Rio it was too late. He could have had a personal showdown with Ike and threatened his resignation, but Humphrey doesn't believe in operating that way.

This means that the defense Department, instead of cutting back on spending, will ask Congres for $2,000,000,000 more. It also means that Dulles and Stassen will launch a giant development program in Asia which may last up to 20 years.

As a result, business in the USA should be good, though it will be inflationary, with an unbalanced budget—just as under the Democrats — which was why Humphrey was against it.

NOTE—In his difference with Secretary Benson, Humphrey argues that Benson should limit the amount of surplus food the USA dumps abroad to $400,000,000. Benson wants to send all he can. Humphery claims that surplus-food disposal might turn into price supports under another name, and that this stimulation of the market would encourage overproduction.

Handmaid of the Lord

If Senator Welker of Idaho is going to use the Bible in battling for Senator McCarthy, he will have to get up early in the morning to better devout Mormon Sen. Wallace Bennett of Utah.

JOHN FOSTER DULLES
. . . New Marshall Plan

Interrogating Senator Bennett regarding his amendment to censure Joe for calling the Watkins Committee unwitting handmaidens of Communism, Welker challenged:

"The other day the Senator referred to "handmaiden" as a vulgar expression."

"No," countered Bennett.

"Yes, the Senator did." insisted Welker, "though he may have stricken it out of the record. I shall check the record."

"I am sorry," corrected Bennett. "I said the definition was that "handmaid or "handmaiden" was a servant of low degree. It does not seem to me that imputes vulgarity."

The Senator from Idaho went off on another track. "Now I quote to the Senator the words of Holy Scripture, and I am sure that he knows more about that than I do because he is a devout Christian man, not only in his own faith but in all faiths: "Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

"That was the answer of the mother of Christ to the Angel Gabriel, who brought her the message that she was to become the mother of Christ," concluded Welker triumphantly.

"I am sure," snapped back the Senator from Utah, "that the person who said that felt that she was a person of low degree compared to him from whom the message came."

YOU Said It

The Carriers Speak Out...

Editor:

The theft of newspapers from certain honor system news stands is increasing. The newspaper distributors have issued warnings over and over by various methods in hopes of cutting out or at least reducing the surprising large number of these trangresions. These warnings have been to no avail.

Several students are suspected of stealing newspapers but conclusive evidence is missing because there has been only one witness in some of the cases. From now on there will be two witnesses and the person will be turned over to the Honor Council. If the Honor Council finds the person guilty he will stand the chance of having to leave school.

The situation has also been talked over with the local police and they have agreed to give us support, though the case may sound trivial to some people.

Some people apparently do not realize how serious this could be. Some of the students who have been caught have had scholarships that meant a lot to them. If they were dismissed from school they would not only lose this but it would be rather embrassing to explain the details to the parents or to future employers.

The next person caught will go to the Honor Council or to court and will stand the chance of being thrown out of school, marring his record. He will lose the respect of his friends and family. All this for a nickel. Is it worth it?

Reaction Piece

Carolina Forum And Assorted Dichotomies

David Mundy

Which, being translated into understandable English, means that you just can't win.

First, the Forum. For anyone, especially its chairman, to any longer maintain that it is a non-partisan organization is ludicrous. Existence of bias in its presentations, presentations financed by all the students, must be determined by the nature of the speakers presentd.

Thus far we have had one Democratic state governor, one actual socialist, and one left-wing Democratic senator who owes his success to espousing one political philosophy at home and another in the North. And tomorrow night the Forum presents a Democrat who is so far out in the left political field that even the Democrats hesitate to give him a nomination.

No Forum prejudice toward the "liberal" cause, or, more exactly, the statist cause? Considering the presentations thus far this year, it is difficult to see anything in them but a calculated program of presenting only left-wing speakers. True, the Forum may be making a bipartisan selection, but the two partisan groups thus far are the actual Socialists and the statist Democrats.

Judgment of Forum bias has to be made on the basis of the speakers presented, not upon the basis of the people who received form letters inviting them to speak. Elimination of Jonathan Daniels from the selection set-up would be one step toward a "just and fair" Carolina Forum.

And now, those dichotomies. (I had to use the dictionary too.)

When the Secretary of State fired an employee (Davies) for disagreeing with policies outside official channels and being so generally wrong in the past, Democrats screamed such catch phrases as "thought control," "suppression of differing opinions," "conformity of thought," and the ever popular "fascism!" When a senator who represents the people of California dared venture that we should engage in a critical re-appraisal of our foreign policy, the Democrats came up with more neat little phrases. This time it was about a "hopelessly divided foreign policy."

Whenever our foreign policy scores an undeniable success, Democrats point out that it isn't due to any changes wrought, or wreaked, by the Republicans. On such occasions they say that the Republicans have really changed nothing; the Republicans are merely continuing the foreign policies of the Truman-Acheson era. Yet, in countless speeches this fall, many, many Democrat tears were shed over the frightful things that were happening to the nation because of a "headless, aimless, totally unsuccessful foreign policy."

Under Truman, several electric power contracts were negotiated with private companies, contracts which make Dixon-Yates look like a gift to the government. The Truman contracts were even on a cost-plus basis, guaranteeing the companies a profit above whatever they might spend. The Dixon-Yates group is guaranteed nothing, except that they can make, at the most, but half the return on investment that a company would expect in private business.

A "super give-away," to use their own current terms, drew absolutely no criticism from Democrats when they were in office themselves. Now a power contract more advantageous to the government is a "mackeral in the moonlight; it both shines and stinks."

The Eye Of The Horse

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . . Hipporotus, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was stationed outside Graham Memorial, when I saw him.

"Outside The Daily Tar Heel offices," The Horse corrected me, "which, as you know, is inside Graham Memorial. One must be precise, Roger me Lad."

Well, what was he waiting for??

"Oh, about ten minutes," he chittered. (I hate him when he chitters!) "Do you mean, for what am I waiting, or whom, and for why?"

That would do. So?

"I gotta let Chollie Kuralt, Editor of the DTH, know what mixed response my remarks and Churlism met with," The Horse explained. "Chollie and I are simply ga-ga over good newspapering."

There were those who maintained that The Horse—never mind Kuralt!—was ga-ga at anything and no holds barred.

"You been talking with that Orangeman, O'Connell," The Horse shrugged. "A spalpeen who celebrates the Obelisk of Drogheda. It's July First and Fourth, for the loikes of him."

Oh. That dirge about Boyne Waters again, was it, now, I made bold to ask Himself Hawrse. (Brogues are catching things, like Shaw's women . . . Bernard that is. . . not O'Pshaw.)

"Leave us leave Irish fighting to the Irish," The Horse snapped. "O'Connell and I are engaged to new hospitalities next Fall when the Fighting Irish visit us in Kenan Stewdium. It is none of your business, at all, at all, Roger. Overcome by his grief at our loss to the, ugh, Dooks, O'Connell held more than a hankerchief to his mouth. . . and this angered me, it is understood."

How was that? He was merely toasting our warriors!

"Well, I had had the poteen held to my mouth when Bobby-boy got the idea," The Horse explained with a whisk of his hoof close, too close, to me. "We have our order placed for a twospout jug o' poteen, come Irish Day next year. But about the response to my call for Journalism instead of Churlism—some said I was against Freedom of the Press."

Well, I could see that. He was proposing censorship, wasn't he?

"I proposed the only type censorship that has a place in a free land," The Horse said, "and one that we must have if we are to stay free: self-censorship. The newspapers should police themselves. Me, I'd make up my necessary — if such there be — reportings of sordidiania and nauscana on a separate sheet or four-page section from the balance of the paper, so that those who didn't care for nickle-a-bale filth could simply discard same (after a quick look) and take home a clean, uncontaminated newspaper, or receive same breakfast-time without cringing from the children."

That was another thing. Didn't The Horse get any beefs about that?

"Oh, aye," The Horse acknowledged. "I am a Romantic, it is said. I do not wish the childher to face loife, 'tis charged, no less."

Cut the brogue. So?

"My idea is, every newspaper should have a man, or a colleen, with taste, discrimination, and this one should con the paper, masthead to Z-obit, with a mind to blue-pencil anything distasteful," The Horse argued. "I think Kuralt will agree, being smart."

Being anxious to get rid of The Horse, he meant! But, weren't editors for just that purpose — to exercise judgment, restraint, good taste?

"If they are, the publishers are missing the boat." The Horse saw it. "Mhurlism, it is, we are fed half the time."

So, once more?

"I offer myself as Taste Editor," The Horse said with his usual unbecoming immodesty. "The first in history! Well? What do you say, will I do?"

I didn't say a word. I didn't have to. Mr. Wump, the low-level-vision Frog, said it for me.

"Wump!"

Southerner's Shoes

The Greensboro Daily News

You can kid Southernors about almost anything, but not about shoes. We are sensitive about our feet.

The citizenry of Hickory is described as "miffed" at some remarks make by Mrs. Hilda Widner Yoder to a Broadway columnist. Mrs. Yoder is a native of Catawba County but is now a resident of New York City and the originator of the Yoder Reading Improvement Center in that city's fashionable East Side.

She is quoted as telling Columnist Earl Wilson that she is "a barefoot hillbilly from Hickory, N. C.," and remarking to him on the occasion of a visit home, "When I went to the Catawba celebration I didn't know whether to show up with my shoes on or off."

The people of Hickory and Catawba want the world to know that they are not hillbillies and that they "do wear shoes when they leave their home grounds."

Madame Frances Perkins irked us some years ago by casting doubt on our shoefulness and Mrs. Yoder did it. . . But why should it rile us?

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime.
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

Our idea—and we think we can prove it—is that the men who made the best footprints on those sands didn't wear shoes. A shoe is hardly the criterion of a civilized man. Take David, Solomon, Pericles, Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, Caesar, Asoka Guatama, Buddha, Mohammed, St. Francis of Assisi, Gandhi and so on: they didn't wear shoes—sandals maybe that they could scuff off at a moment's notice, but not shoes. On the other hand Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin were confirmed shoewearers, but you would hardly call them civilized. We wear shoes down South because pavements are hot in Summer and cold in Winter. But there's no sense in our equating shoes with culture or bare feet with barbarians.

Improved SC Five Here Thursday Eve

Rio Grande Is Still Winning

RIO GRANDE, Ohio, Dec. 7 (AP)—How's little Rio Grande College's basketball team doing without star Bevo Francis?

Some of the national glory that went with Bevo's record-breaking play for the little school is gone, and it is an all-new team now at Rio Grande. "But we're doing all right, and we may come up with an even season at least," says Rio's new coach, 30-year-old Herman Bush.

Thus far Rio Grande has won three out of four games, the last win being a 103-96 triumph over Bluefield, W. Va. State Monday night. Earlier, Rio Grande beat Lees College, Ky., 68-52, lost to Lockbourne Air Force Base 54-63, and defeated Denison of Ohio 90-71.

There are no big time colleges on Rio Grande's basketball schedule this season in contrast to last year when the little 120-odd student school played a few top notchers. But the 25-game schedule includes Georgetown, Ky., Transylvania, Kentucky State, Wilberforce, Bluffton, and Belmont in Tennessee, among others.

Bevo, who last year was NCAA scoring champion for small colleges, marking up 1,255 points in 27 games against four-year schools, now is with the Boston Whirlwinds, a professional basketball club, along with his former coach, Newt Oliver.

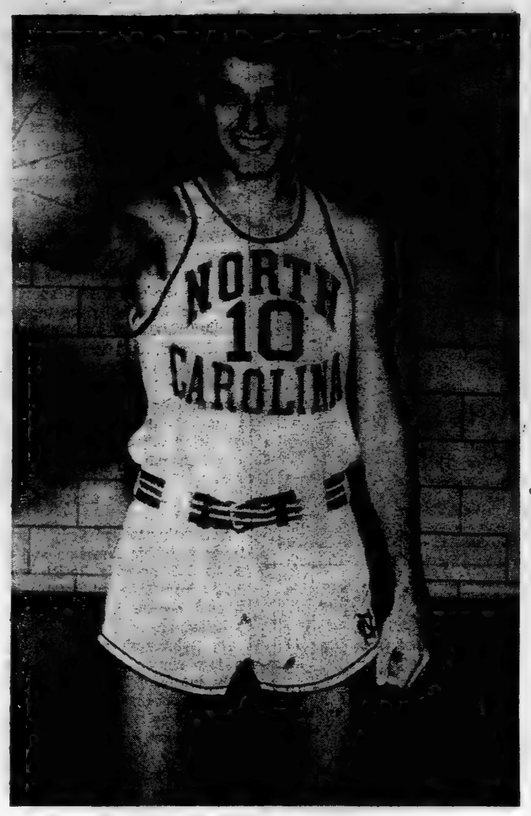
'Cocks Acquired Whole Team From Kentucky Cage Plant

Varsity Game To Be Preceded By Frosh Contest Against Atlantic Christian At 6:15 O'clock

By BERNIE WEISS

The South Carolina Gamecocks, who picked up an entire starting team from Pikeville Junior College (Ky.) last year, roll into Chapel Hill tomorrow night to furnish opposition for Coach Frank McGuire and his Tar Heel five at Woollen Gym.

South Carolina made news all over the country with the acquisition of five top-noteh cagers from the bluegrass country. Those players helped the Pikeville school win 32 of 35 games last season, and it is needless to say that they have considerably bolstered Gamecock stock in the Atlantic Coast Conference.



Three of the Kentuckians will probably be in the starting lineup for SC tomorrow night. They are Russ Porter, Benny Fannin and Woody Preston. The other Gamecock starters will be Lee Collins and Joe Smith.

South Carolina also has eight lettermen returning from last season, and among them are 1953-54's top four scorers. Smith had a 16.6 average, Collins a 12.7 mark.

The Tar Heels will have a slight advantage over their southern cousins in height. SC averages just over six-feet per man, while the Tar Heels average six-feet, four-inches.

North Carolina will probably put the following starters on the floor: Paul Likins at center, Jerry Vayda and Len Rosenbluth at forwards, Al Lifson and Tony Radovich at guards. Rosenbluth, who has already scored 52 points in two games, leads the Carolina scoring. Lifson and Vayda have tallied 37 points each.

The varsity game will be preceded by a freshman tilt at 6:15 o'clock. The Tar Babies, who last night downed High Point Junior College, will tangle with the Atlantic Christian jayvees. Frosh coach Buck Freeman will probably start Tommy Kearns, Joe Quigg, Pete Brennan, Bob Searcy and Charles Adams. Bob Cunningham, six-three forward, will be out of the contest with a sprained ankle. He is expected to be ready for Friday night's encounter with the Duke frosh in Durham.

Len Rosenbluth Chosen 'Athlete Of The Week'

Lenny Rosenbluth, Carolina's 6' 5" forward who plays in the pivot slot, has been chosen Tar Heel "Athlete of the Week" by the DTH sports staff.

The lanky sophomore got off to a fast start in UNC's first two games, scoring 22 points against the semi-pro McCrary Eagles and 30 against Clemson, both individual high marks for each game.

Before the season started, Tar Heel coach Frank McGuire made the statement that "Rosenbluth will improve the team at least 20 per cent over last year's team." Early indications seem to bear out the cage mentor's prophecy, if not making it appear an understatement.

Rosenbluth, who is 21 years old, played high school basketball in New York City, after which he attended Staunton Military Academy in Virginia. At Staunton, his performances bordered the incredible. He scored as many as 60 points in one game. Mainly on the strength of Rosenbluth, Staunton beat everything in sight, climaxing their season by winning the Glens Fall (N. Y.) tournament, in which Rosenbluth was selected "Most Valuable Player", in addition to being the tourney's individual high scorer.

Wooed to Carolina by McGuire the amazing Rosenbluth proceeded to establish a new scoring record as a freshman, averaging close to 30 points a game. In successive tilts last year, he tallied 51 and 44 points, the first mark breaking Carolina's all-time one-game scoring record of 45, established by All-America George Glamack in 1941.

Prickett Cops Offense Title

Prickett, injured part of the time, gained only 35 net yards rushing and passing in his last two games but ended with 829 yards in total offense, almost 200 more than his nearest challenger, Wake Forest's quarterback Nick Consoles.

Prickett also beat out Consoles for the ACC passing title, 68 completions to 54, although Consoles led in passing yards 743 to 682, and in touchdown passes thrown six to one. Consoles had 103 yards in rushing losses to reduce his total offense figure to 640 yards.

Maryland's halfback Ronnie Waller, who gained 116 yards in the Terrapin Thanksgiving Day TV slaughter of Missouri, won the ACC rushing title with 587 net yards on 67 carries for an average of 8.8 yards. Mike Caskey of South Carolina was second with 556 yards. He had had three "100-yard" days for the year, best in the league.

Ken Moore of Clemson, gaining 152 yards in five carries against The Citadel, produced the ACC's No. 1 individual rushing effort of the season. N. C. State's Eddie West completed 17 of 29 passes for 212 yards and two touchdowns against Maryland for the conference's best total offense and passing effort for '54.

Nanny, Barden Elected To Lead '55 Harriers

Glen Nanny and Bob Barden were chosen co-captains for the 1955 Tar Heel cross-country team at a banquet held in honor of the squad last Monday night.

Nanny, a native of Charlotte, N. C., and Barden, who hails from Newark N. J., were both constant point makers for the Tar Heel team throughout the season.

Speeches were made by Coach Dale Ranson and this year's co-captain Tony Houghton, praising the squad for their outstanding 1954 record. Both speakers commented on the team spirit, hard work, and the ability to deliver under pressure.

PHYS ED MEETING HERE

Members of the North Carolina Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation held their annual state conference here Friday with Bjorn Kjellstrom of the Swedish Sports Federation as principal speaker. Earlier, University Chancellor R. B. House delivered an address of welcome to the 174 delegates.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

A sportswriter hears so much talk and sees so much evidence of big-time sports in the nation's colleges that he often throws up his hands in despair and asks the question, "Are college athletics run on a professional or amateur basis?"

For an answer to that query one would have to go to qualified persons such as athletic directors, major-sports coaches, conference officials and even some of the players who are in on the dope.

Even an answer from one who is qualified is often and nearly always debated. Admittedly there are many sides to the argument and each has its worthy attributes.

All of which points to the situation at Carolina. The objective in this corner is not to pan our athletic director, Chuck Erickson; not to pan our football coach, George Barclay; and not to pan our basketball coach, Frank McGuire. We'll leave them out of the conversation entirely.

Ranson, a Tar Heel mentor for three decades, is certainly the type of coach who could easily draw admiration from the fan who possesses a dislike for wholesale distribution of athletic scholarships. His teams, perennial contenders and oftimes winners of conference champions, are not hand-picked.

There is always consideration, and plenty of it, for the boys who decide they want to do some representing for their school on the track field. In fact, Ranson encourages and does all but get on his knees and beg people to come out for his teams, and the situation is not thus because he is in dire need of the talent or man-power.

"These boys here don't realize what a great opportunity they have for intercollegiate participation in track. We can enter 35 to 40 boys in a single meet without padding," he says.

"Our trackmen don't have to have track experience from high or prep school. We're glad to take them in cold and teach them on the chance that they may develop, and we're not loaded with hand-picked talent so that we don't have room or time to spend with the inexperienced."

Proof of this came recently when Ranson posted handbills inviting all freshmen (inexperienced or otherwise) to try their hand at track drills, which got under way last Wednesday. A one-hour workout per day is enough to develop anyone with the desire.

Ranson isn't doing his talking with hot air. In the past, since 1949, only three of eight men who have been awarded the E. J. Evans Trophy, given annually to the outstanding senior trackman, have had any experience in this sport before coming to Carolina.

So if you are one of the many who are crying in your beer about not being to play against other schools because of the scholarship material, give Ranson and track a try.

And if you happen to have a few minutes to spare on a lazy afternoon, ask Ranson about his theory of statistics. You should find it intriguing.

Jacobs Trophy Awarded To Gamecocks' Wohrman

The Jacobs Blocking Trophy, a tradition in Southern football to honor the unsung hero of the gridiron, has been voted to Bill Wohrman, South Carolina fullback, for the second straight year in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Wohrman surpassed the blocking field with ease, judged by the voting of 43 member sportswriters and sportscasters of the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Assn., plus five of the conference coaches who participated. Wohrman is a 195-pound, 6-1 senior from Bloomingdale, N. J.

He got 1520 points on the ballot basis of five points for first place, three for second, one for third.

Runnerup was Bob Pellegrini, junior guard from Maryland, who had 56 points. Maryland fullback Dick Bielski was third with 48. Others high in the voting were Ralph Torrence, Duke guard, with 26; Bob Bartholomew, Wake Forest tackle with 21, and Bryant Aldridge, Duke fullback with 20. Twenty-three players were nominated.

Carolina Swimmers Sink Bainbridge

By BOB COLBERT

The Tar Heel Blue Dolphins sank the swimming team of the Bainbridge Monday afternoon by a score of 45-39.

Paced by sophomores Phil Drake, Charlie Krepp, and Dave McInnis, the Tar Heels took five of the ten first places.

The Tar Heels swept to an early lead, taking the medley relay with Co-captain Larry Shannon, Drake, and Krepp outstroking the Bainbridge team. The Tar Heels were never behind, although the meet was nip and tuck.

Bainbridge was led by former All-Americans Keith Peterson and Dick Martin. Peterson took firsts in the 50- and 100-yard freestyle events, while Martin won the 220- and 440-yard events. They teamed up with teammates Allen and Kern to take the final event, the 400 yard relay.

Drake took first in the breaststroke event and Krepp won the backstroke. Dave McInnis outdove the Navy boys to win the low-board diving.

The next meet for the Mermen will be at Duke on December 15.

The summary:

300 Medley Relay: UNC. (Krepp, Drake, Shannon) 2:54.5.

Yesterday's Answer

'Foremost Balladeer' Here Tomorrow

Harry Belafonte, with his combination of American jazz and Scotch and Irish folk music, has become "America's foremost balladeer."

He, and accompanist Millard Thomas, will appear in the musical production, "Three For Tonight," to be presented at Memorial Hall Thursday and Friday nights. Dance team Marge and Gower Champion and the Voices of Walter Schumman also star in the performance.

Belafonte tried for an acting career in New York on his return from service. When he found acting jobs too scarce to support himself and his family he turned to singing at a New York night club which specialized in jazz.

He scored immediate success although he had never sung professionally or studied voice. Since then Belafonte has become a top recording artist, has starred in the show, "John Murray Anderson's Almanac" and in the movies "Bright Road" and "Carmen Jones."

Belafonte realized early that folk songs were his favoritee and with Millard Thomas, guitarist, worked out a repertoire of ballads which helped secure his reputation as a balladeer.

In Belafonte's own words he is a jazz singer. "After all, jazz is folk music. I sometimes use the two interchangeably."

According to critics, Belafonte has chalked up a triumph in "Three For Tonight" which proves that his theory on American music is right.

Counsel for the defense Calvin Wallace could not be reached for comment yesterday and Kraar, when contacted, had "no comment."

The trial, which will get under way Friday night at 7 o'clock, will be presided over by Superior Court Judge J. A. Rousseau of North Wilkesboro and in every way will be run exactly like a criminal court trial. Jurors will be picked from the audience.

Current rumors from the office of the counsel for the defense indicate that several character witnesses on Kraar's behalf may be introduced at the trial.

Pre-Broadway Production, '3 For Tonight,' Is Here

GOWER . . . Marge's partner. . .

. . . MARGE . . . Gower's wife

An all-star cast, headed by Marge and Gower Champion, Harry Belafonte and the Voices of Walter Schumann, will present a new musical drama here tonight and tomorrow.

The show, scheduled for 8:30 both nights, will be a pre-Broadway affair. It will hit the Big Street Jan. 20.

"Three for Tonight,' produced by Paul Gregory and Charles Laughton, is staged by one of its stars, Gower Champion, who has previously done the choreography for many of his movies and for "Lend An Ear," the Broadway show which won the Antoinette Perry Award for him.

The Champions have fast become one of the most well-known dance teams of today. Since their first movie appearance in the film version of "Show Boat," they have risen quickly to the top of the entertainment field.

Hailed as a leader in the field of American jazz and blues songs, the third star in "Three or Tonight" achieved stardom last winter in "John Murray Anderson's Almanac" on Broadway. Harry Belafonte, one of America's leading folksingers, will appear on the program with the Champions.

Backing up the three stars will be the Voices of Walter Schumann.

Original lyrics and dialogue for the production were composed by Robert Wells, a well-known Holly-

UP To Decide On New Group

In a called session Tuesday evening, the University Party introduced a resolution, which if approved, will create a "steering committee" for the organization.

The powers of the committee first of its kind for the UP, according to Ken Yarborough, party chairman, "will be to make recommendations to the organizations body and to carry on membership drives."

Due to the slight number of members present for the final UP assembly before Christmas holidays, the resolution was referred to a committee of presidential appointees.

The party also tapped five new members into its fold.

Caravans Becoming Tradition

Football-caravan weekends at UNC will become a tradition, following the precedent set by this year's Maryland weekend. Definite action has been taken toward making this possible by Chancellor Robert House, Asst. Dir. of Admissions Charles Bernard and student body President Tom Creasy, according to an announcement from the three.

Caravan weekend next year will come on the weekend of the Geogia game, Oct. 8. Classes will again be dismissed on Saturday and arrangements will be made as they were this year for a special train and hotel accommodations.

Chancellor House said, "I am happy that this could be made an annual event, and as long as Carolina students continue to conduct themselves as they did this year, the weekend will be a definite feature of the school year."

President Creasy added, "After the success of caravan weekend this year, we began work trying to make it an annual feature and with the help of Chancellor House and Charlie Bernard, it has been agreed that this shall become a permanent part of each new school schedule.

"I feel that the main obstacle has been overcome by clearing the way for this holiday each year. The rest of the arrangements will be minor details.

"The weekend this year was a big success and the excellent conduct shown by Carolina students was a major factor in securing the weekend for next year and future years."

Wrapping Party

Astronomer Visits

By CHARLES CHILDS

A world famous astronomer made a short visit to the campus yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Clyde W. Tombough, discoverer of the planet Pluto, made a talk to an astronomy class and visited the Morehead Planetarium.

At the Morehead Planetarium Dr. Tombough said that he was quite impressed by the three dimensional effect of the Christmas pageant and that it was the first time that he had seen that type of effect in a planetarium.

The purpose of Dr. Tombough's visit to this area was to discuss a new project with the Army Office of Ordnance Research whose headquarters are at Duke University. The director of the O.O.R. Dr. Sherwood Githens who graduated here in 1936, accompanied Dr. Tombough on the tour.

Location of hither-to unknown satilites of the earth is the new project planned by Tombough. This project will involve the location of these "rocks" by scanning the sky with a special camera.

These satilites, Dr. Tombough explained, would have high velocities of about several thousand miles per hour. If these satilites are large enough there is a possibility that they could be used for space platforms. He estimated that this type would have to be about 100 feet wide. Any "housekeeping" on them would depen upon what they had to offer.

The nearest satilite to the earth would be about 500 miles. He said that those nearest the earth

Selden Reads 'Carol' Sunday

Samuel Selden, chairman of the department of dramatic art, will read the beloved classic, "A Christmas Carol," by Charles Dickens, at the Playmakers Theater next Sunday at 8. The reading of this Christmas story has become a tradition with the Carolna Playmakers ever since the custom was initiated by the late Fredrick H. Koch, founder of the Playmakers.

"Prof" Koch gave a total of 278 readngs of the story of Scrooge and Tiny Tim, appearing all over the country and including four performances at the famed Town Hall in New York City. After Koch's death, Selden continued the tradition.

Samuel Selden joined the Playmakers staff in 1927, after having been a member of the Yale Playcrafters and a professional actor in New York with the old Provincetown Playhouse at the time Eugene O'Neill was beginning his career there. Selden appeared in many of O'Neill's early plays and was the general stage manager for the touring company of "Desire Under The Elms."

The program will begin promptly at 8 p.m. All students, faculty members and townspeople are cordially invited to attend, Playmakers officials said yesterday.

Zack Waters, Pre-Med Student:

Hemingway's Sequel Is A Tar Heel

By BARBARA WILLARD

If Hemingway wants a sequel to his The Old Man and the Sea, he can find new blood for the old fish story right here on the Carolina campus.

A Chi Psi named Zack Waters, from Salisbury, Md., was only 15 years old and weighed 103 lbs. wringing wet when he caught the largest channel bass on record, to break the old world's record by eight lbs.

He and his father were five miles off Cape Charles, Va., in many fishing trips. It was Aug. 5, 1949, and one of the worst storms the Bay can remember was brewing.

All the other boats in the 20-boat fleet had headed for shore, leaving the "Minnie W." Minnie lagged behind the others because Zack had something on the one line he had left in the water.

Zack's father, thinking it was another shark (several had hit that day), told his son to put pressure on the line or to cut it.

"If I had known what it was," Zack said, "I'd have never put the pressure on it that I did. I'd have stayed through the storm and all. I landed him in eight minutes."

It was no shark, but a channel bass. When the fish hit the boat, the anchor hit the deck and the men headed for shore. Even then the storm hit before they reached land. The shallow-draft beat cut across the sand bar, missed a buoy in the harbor by 50 feet and beat all the other boat to shore.

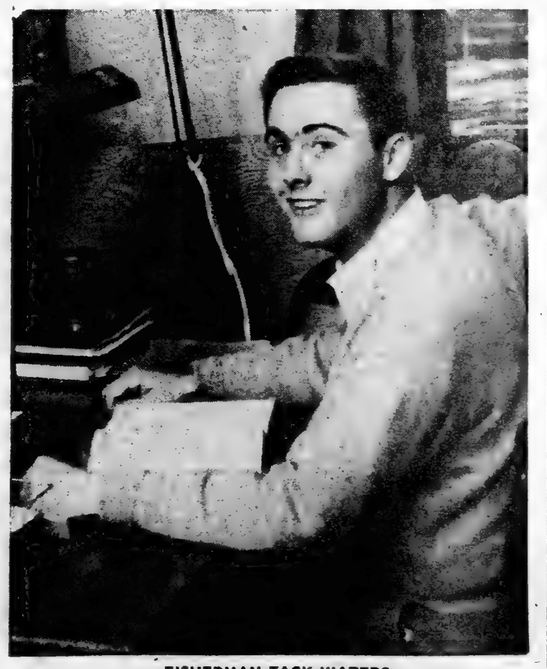
Once home, Zack gutted the fish and took it down to the ice plant. Out of curiosity, he stopped by his uncle's lumber plant to weigh the fish — 75 lbs. Some bystanders remarked that they thought the world's record for channel bass was 75 and one-half lbs.

"I rushed back home to get the entrails to weigh them," Zack continued, "But before I got there, the chickens had eaten some of them. They were in a pan outsde. I took what was left and weghed them. They weighed eight lbs."

When he wrote the International Game Fish Assn. for the official world's record, he found that it was 75 and one-half lbs.

He had been fishing in "Deep Hole," a well-known fishing hole in the Bay. In eight minutes, with a 45-lb.-test line, in the face of a threatening summer storm, he had pulled in the largest channel bass on record.

WORK REWARDED



There were two contests going on that year, sponsored by Field and Stream and Outdoorsman sports magazines.

Field and Stream presented him a medal and an award savings bond. He got a Nash automobile, set of tires and $100 worth of fishing tackle from Outdoorsman. The reel and line companies whose products he was using when he caught the fish gave him hundreds of dollars' worth of fishing equipment.

Newspapers and magazines all over the world carried the story and pictures. Fishermen everywhere sent their congratulations in letters and telegrams.

Zack is a junior in pre-med at the University, following in his father's footsteps all the way. His father, Dr. Zack Waters, a surgeon, came to UNC. He, like his son, wrestled here. He, like his son, is a hunter and fisherman.

"It was nothing new," Zack said, "We've been fishing since I could walk. But it was something new, a new fish story where the "big one didn't get away."

Health Officer Reports Few 'Garbage Houses'

The Chapel Hill Town Council's ordinance, passed last February, which required all town restaurants, fraternity houses and sororities to erect "garbage houses," has only partially been complied with, Brevitt Hook, district health officer, said yesterday.

Zeta Psi and Kappa Sigma were listed as the only fraternities that had erected the buildings. Construction of a garbage hut behind the Chi Psi house was report near completion. Most of the town restaurants have already met the necessary requirements, Hook sad.

The ordinance, first scheduled to go into effect last September, now gives organizations until January 1 to comply with the regulations.

The ordinance specifies a minimum size of 36 square feet, with concrete floors and masonry up to a height of four feet. The garbage houses also require hot water connections and must be rat proof.

When asked if the new regulation would be pushed as the fire escape ordinance was last year, Hook stated, "that would be up to the Health authorities and the police department."

The Student & The Teacher

We often hear the complaint that University faculty members just don't take the interest in their students that they once did.

"Faculty-student relationships used to be cordial around here," a graduate student told us the other day. "But things have changed. Everybody's too busy. The University's just too big."

There is an element of truth in that lament, of course. Nobody expects the same old first-name intimacy that was the rule in, say, 1920, now that the University is past the small college stage.

But for those who place the blame on the faculty, we have a story: A couple of weeks ago, a Business School professor planned an elaborate evening get-together and invited a dozen students, all of whom accepted. He cooked supper for 12. He set places for 12. Two showed up.

Couple a generally apathetic student attitude with that kind of irresponsibility and you begin to see why faculty-student relationships have deteriorated. Any number of professors are champing at the bit for an evening or two or food and conversation with their students. All they need is a suggestion of student interest.

It is this sort of informal meeting of the minds out of which the greatest good in the University experience can result. But students, need we point out, would usually rather spend their evenings elsewhere and otherwise.

They're Talking About Us

In case the letters from that friend at Harvard make you blush with envy, friend, in case you think the green educational pastures are elsewhere, note the judgment of some competent observers on us and our boss:

"The University's national reputation and prestige is steadily increasing, in the opinion of unbiased observers who live outside North Carolina. I would place the University among the top 10, probably among the top five universities in the land in academic rating."

That was Gerald Johnson, writer and television commentator talking.

And along comes Time Magazine, which calls President Gray "one of the five or 10 university presidents in the U. S. most respected by the academic community of the nation."

Note the recurrence of that word, "academic," too, friend. That means we didn't get this way by fielding a great football team or by having massive panty raids or by firing professors for being Communists, or any of the other second-rate ways universities reach prominence. We did it by teaching people. It's something we ought to remember.

Sounds & Fury Of A Musical In Rehearsal

Louis Kraar

NOTICING A headline in the campus newspapaer that said: "Sound & Fury' Getting Hot," I went down promptly at 7 o'clock Mon. night to catch a glimpse at the torrid musical rehearsal.

Half a dozen coeds in tights, sweaters, and pony-tail hairdos milled around the narrow APO room in Graham Memorial's basement, while an energetic young lady with an Italian haircut paced up and down.

"Oh, dirty word!" exclaimed the crew-cropped coed, whom I learned was Bo Bernardin, director of the show.

Strains of "Can-Can" filled the narrow room, and blank-faced pianist Max Warner began playing along with the record. "I've got a political science quiz tomorrow," groaned Jake Goforth, one of the boys in the chorus. And just about then Carol Ann Lee, Miss Bernardin's roommate sauntered in with an armload of sandwiches.

"Anybody want a bacon, lettuce, and tomato?" Miss Bernardin shouted above the music, conversation, and shuffling feet. Someone claimed the sandwich, and I found a seat on the sidelines next to a girl who told me she was Geri Turner.

A dark-haired girl in checked slacks and a blue sweater, choreography director Blynn Derning conferred with Miss Bernardin on some music. And soon Miss Derning had Marty Boyle, Jane Warwick, Sue Eliot, and Jean Overbeck began the third rehearsal of "Can-Can."

WHILE THE cast went through the dance, I talked with Miss Bernadin.

"I got to bed at four a.m. and get up at seven every mornng. Rehearsals run from two in the afternoons until coed hours. Last week I cut about half my classes," she said in answer to some question.

"Oh, classes are just a sideline these days," Lew Sherman, producer of the show, pointed out as he munched on his supper—a grilled cheese sandwich.

I wondered what work went on between rehearsals.

"Well, after I go back to the dorm," Miss Bernadin said, "There's work on the scripts, words to change in songs, planl ning of the next rehearsals, and all that,"

"You know, Hartwell Conklin is doing our scenery," Sherman said, pointing out other members of the cast who were going through their paces at various points in the room.

"Let's go on now y'all with the rest of it," Miss Bernadin said, and Pat Seitz, Carl Williams, Jake Goforth, Al Issac, Geri Turner, and choreographer Derning lined up in a chorus row.

And the chorus line proceeded to sing, dance, kick, and wear "gosh-awful, real Bohem" expressions.

"BO AND I talked about doing a show like this after last spring's campus chest show," producer Sherman said. "Graham Memorial's Activities Board is sponoring it, and we plan to open in Memorial Hall on the 16th. I think we'll put it on first at WC though."

"What's this space for," Miss Derning asked, pointing to asheet with song lyrics on it.

"Oh, that's where two more lines go in," Miss Bernadin said. "I'll try to have those written by tomorrow."

A Few Bricks In The English Glasshouse

Reginald Reynolds
In The American Scholar

What with Billy Graham having been right here in England and with H-bomb just around the corner, there's not a Henry Dubb in this country who can forget America for long.

Even the New Yorker is now assumed to be sufficiently familiar to the vicar's wife (not to mention the dental deficients in the waiting rooms of the welfare state) for Punch to have risked a heavy satire on its American contemporary.

Add to this, McCarthy as a front page sensation and the unfailing celluloid of Hollywood—and you have the whole garble in one acid drop.

If you are looking for tones and inflections, of course, there are enough to confuse the most avid intellectual. Somewhere in the thirties, Beaverbrook's Evening Standard discovered Damon Runyon, who is still widely read. Saroyan came to town about the same time. Thurber has had an increasing vogue, and E. B. White, a late starter, may yet catch up with him. Since the days when we read Upton Sinclair and Sinclair Lewis, the switch (in spite of Hemingway) has been toward American humor—which may be proof of our discernment.

Not only have some American humorists, since the time of Mark Twain, been the best social critics in America, but they have been the best humorists in the English language. The two facts are connected, and the reading public here may dimly realize it, even if the English humorists can't see why. We have produced snobbish humor, decadent humor, facetious humor, gross humor and—at our best—pure nonsense.

Outside the theatre, real creative writing is becoming rare. Those who strained after originality in the thirties have succumbed to literary hernia and now ear a base living as critics. Even reviewing can be lively—a fact of which I am reminded whenever an American literary journal comes into my hands—but the book reviews here give a strong impression of being divided into two main groups: (1) extravagant praise for any writer with whom the critic is allied—for example, though not exclusively, in the "trade union" of inverts; (2) peevish pattiness with regard to all others.

There are excellent and obvious reasons for not pursuing this theme in further detail. For present purposes it is only an attempt to explain certain reactions to America by means of a rough generalization about a section of our ownpopulation.

The characteristic peevishness of our literary criticism is naturally to be found in most reviews of Amercan books, though it is complicated by a mixture of fear, jealousy and complete lack of understanding. The solution is frequently sought in a pedagogic form of amiable patronage, which reminds me of those back-handed compliments to other women which are attributed to Tullulah Bankhead.

In search of an illustration I had merely to pick cp the May, 1954, nember of the London Magazine, edited by John Lehmann. Three American novels are reviewed in one article by Francis Wyndham. Most of the article reads like an end-of-term school report by a pedantic and disillusioned old schoolmarm on the work of children in their early teens. Even Alfred Hayes, who was patted quite heavily on the back, had to be reminded that two earlier novels of his had "shown promise." (It may be an idiosyncracy of my own, but I particularly dislike that cliche, smacking so smugly of the schoolroom.) Charles Wertenbaker's book, The Dream of Kings, is even more heavily patronized and eventually damned with something worse than faint praise as "an excellent example of intellectual journalism. As the old dog said, the worst of some bitches is that they're such women.

However, it's Saroyan who receives the full blast of the old lady's malice. Just listen to this from the school report. William, it seems, has perpetuated his "latest perversion of a technique he himself helped to originate, where a series of short sentences, portentously casual, pretends to disguise a sentimentality at the same time arch, arty, and almost infantile." Considering that Saroyan's work will be remembered and read when nobody will know or care who Francis Wyndham was (if, indeed, many either know or care today), this pompous verdict almost redeems itself by its unconscious humor. But it is not so funny for those in Britain who are concerned with the creation of an obpective appreciation of literature—American or otherwise. To use some of Mr. Wyndham's own words, I find in them "the latest perversion of a technique which he had not even the merit of originating, where long and meaningless sentences, pontifically pretentious, attempt to disguise an animosity at the same ignorant, offensive and completely ridiculous."

My brief is not to defend Americans from such critics—that would be as pretentious as the patronage or defamation banged out by our highbrow hacks. Criticism—as my own article doubtless illustrates—always tells the readed at least as much aboct the critic as it tells him about the object of analyis. Get his measure and you can even use the worst critic—in reverse gear. (I know a man who always buys any book which receives a specially vicious review in one literary weekly here. He says it is an infallible guide and takes the journal only for that purpose.) Amercan writters can look after themselves; but that doesn't absolve an English writer from feeling some responsibility about our corrupt standards.

It is not that I object to seeing our people hit out at the Americans and hit hard, but that is what they hardly ever do, even though Achilles is a monster with man heels and all of them vulnerable. Few of those journals which are believed in America to be "anti-American" and even sometimes described as "Communist" (a grim joke to those of us who know the timid old women who run them and write for them) will carry an outspoken attack on anything American. I may misjudge the whole situation and give too much credit to America; but I have a feeling that our intelligentsia would earn and deserve more respect across the Atlantic if it did hit hard instead of handing out either obsequious bouquets or querulous patronage.

The fact still remains that the great mass of people here know little of America. I wish my own knowledge were comparable to my curiosity. One woman, otherwise well read, admitted to mereecently that she had read hardly any American literature and did not want to do so. "They've taken our place in the world without being fit for it," she said bitterly, "and they're decadent without ever having been great." (Later she admitted that this was not quite fair, in view of her acknowledged ignorance.) I doubt if the new patronage of some American writers by our intelligentsia will greatly help. As the same woman rightly said, our intellectuals have the well-deserved contempt of the British public. Their strenuous politics have damned them no less effectively than their literary preciosity. Ever since the thirties, when brave young men raised hue and cry after the fictitious figure of "Colonel Blimp" (symbol of a long-deceased Victorian type) and shut their eyes to real and insidious dangers—including the Muscovite dope they themselves peddled—the intellectuals have lived in spiritual exile from the "masses" of whom they once loved to talk ad nacseam.

All this is parenthetic to the question of our attitude to America, but may help to explain it. Also it reminds me that perhaps the one place where our intellectuals make any contact with ordinary people is in the Labour party, where there has been a growing tendency to choose young theorists from the universities as Parliamentary candidates—a small contribution to the general confusion.

Superficially, the Labour party intelligentsia is anti-American, which does a great deal of harm. But in fact it is afraid of America and will rarely hit out on just the issues which call for hard-hitting—where it cocld count on a great deal of scpport in the United States. The result is that many fanse impressions are created reciprocally, while the real issues are rarely discussed with any frankness. If, for example, most people in Britain think that every institution in the United States is corrupt, it is because American films have repeated this so often, in italics.

For the rest, the ordinary, uninformed people here—from the solid citizens to the adolescent "Teddy-boys" and their female counterparts in long, tight pants—all Rnow that America is New York, Chicago and Hollywood. They know that all Americans are rich and generous (or "chuck their money about," if you happen to be jealous, as many are where American troops are found). They know that American police are brutal or sentimental or both, and that the same applies to the ubiquitous American gangsters. They know that America is a fairyland where Cinderella marries a millionaire and the hard-working boy gets her when the millionaire conveniently dies. I half believe it myself. One day, perhaps, I shall find out the truth.

Grim tidings for the young geologists" of the University in this letter received by the Chapel Hill Weekly's Louis Graves from Prof. Samuel T. Emory. Prof. Emory is on a leave of absence from Chapel Hill, teaching on a Fullbright scholarship in the University of Hensinki in Finland.

He wrote Mr. Graves:

"The Finnish Commercial University, one of the two in which I teach, invited me to a formal dinner at the opening. That meant tails, so I had to rent the whole works. It was worth it.

"They started off with a Manhattan, served several wines and liqueurs with the dinner, then moved to another row of tables and served coffee and cognac without stint while several speeches were made. Then they sang for a while, still to coffee and cognac. Then they rolled up the end of the room and displayed a smorgasbord with beer, everyone helping himself and returning to a table to sing some more. Then cognac and Vichy water. By that time it was 1 a. m. (The dinner had started at 7) and a few of us old men left.

"They sang "Tipperary" for me when I left and I had to take a bow. Most of them were still going strong.

'Another thing: When I walk down the corridors the students and the young professors click their heels and stand at attention. I bow and they bow and the world resumes its rotation. Tell the young geologist they are going to see some changes made when I get back.

These Finns are a great people and in many ways very like Americans. Their being so friendly helps a man like me who doesn't know the language. I point and act out what I need and somehow they get it for me. They laugh and I laugh and they seem not to get tired of it."

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch offers up an essay touching on the hard-back vs. paperback controversy of the literary world:

John Steinbeck has selected what seems to be a funny reason and a particularly funny reason for an author, to like paperback books. "Hardcover books break up friendships," he says. "You loan a hardcover book to a friend, and when he doesn't return it, you get mad at him. It makes you mean and petty. But 25-cent books are different. Nobody minds giving them away. They make people generous, kind and friendly."

Paperbacks are admirable when they are good literature placed within the reach of more people than would be able to buy books at higher prices. But in case of lending a valued paperback that could not easily be replaced, to Mr. Steinbeck or anyone else, we would like the borrower to know that we want it back, and are prepared to be as mean and petty as necessary.

We would rather hang onto our paperback of Somerset Maugham's The Summing Up than have Thomas B. Costain's The Black Rose bound in solid granite, and don't let Mr. Steinbeck forget it.

The editors of The Charlotte News have mixed a salve for Adlai Stevenson's two-year-old wounds: The old record companies which have recorded his speeches are Triumph and Victor.

The News also passes along Sen. Bob Kerr's prophecy on Ike's golf score. Plainly, it's 108. In in '52. Out in '56.

And The Washington Post & Times-Herald sums up on the Republican leader:

By his vote against the McCarthy censure Sen. Knowland has virtually ended his usefulness as Senate Republican leader. One must respect the sincerity of conviction that led him to his position. But in taking this stand—as in his frequent tangles with President Eisenhower on foreign policy—Mr. Knowland has elected to become, not the spokesman for the Republican Party in the Senate, but the accomplice of a negative-minded right-wing minority. Whether he intended to do so or not, he has split the party; and in the circumstances he ought to have the courtesy to resign.

What can the President do if Mr. Knowland will not resign? It would, of course be a grave mistake for the White House to jeopardize relations with the Senate by intervening directly. But certainly it can devise ways of working with moderate Republicans in the Senate who represent the general Eisenhower philosophy. Actually the President will be compelled to become in a sense his own majority leader, to assume a more positive position of leadership in building coalitions for his program—and this may be a good thing all around. The worst thing the administration could do, for its own success as well as for the national welfare ,would be to trim its sails to suit Mr. Knowland's wind.

'Of Course, You Might Want To Fix It Up A Little'

George, Huxley, & Race

Ed Yoder

Dr. W. C. George is a University professor who believes in continued segregation for what he calls "biological reasons." Feeling strongly as he does, he has set in motion a petition to the governor that is on its way at this time.

When he came "out of seclusion" to announce his stand (one which admittedly required considerable courage on his part) he stated that it is wrong to identify a program for integration of the races with Christianity.

"It is rather a biological and social problem," he continued. "There are vital reasons why destruction of the white and colored races should not be promoted. It is unbelieveable that we should passively accept such an outcome by edict."

From the strictly judicial standpoint that the Supreme Court was bound to in making its decision. Dr. George's contention, of course, misses then entire issue. that is, whether a segment of the citizenry of this country can have "equal" educational facilities if they are forceably separated.

An essay by Julian Huxley, the great English scientist and scientific philosopher who has taught for a number of years in this country, clashes loudly with Dr. George's idea that interbreeding among the races, presuming it every followed desegregation, would be degrading

"The alleged inferiority of half-castes between whites and black or browns," writes Mr. Huxley in "Eugenics and Society" "...is much more likely to be the product of the unfavorable social atmosphere in which they grow up than of any effect (which would be biologically very unusual) of their mixed heredity."

The whole point of Mr. Huxley's essay, it seems to me, it that environment of the so-called "races" must be equalized before any specific conclusion can be drawn. That, obvious in itself, should be sufficient to destroy Dr. George's contention that there is a true biological or "scientific" case for his side. In a nation where Negroes (being the "race" in question) lack equal health, educational, living, psychological, and general cultural environment with the people of the "white races," no one (and Dr. George is not excluded from this) could possibly have drawn any scientific conclusions about what he calls the "unproven record" of Negroes.

It is important to note that Mr. Huxley doesn't deny that there might be inherent differences between races in such characteristics as intelligence and capacity for culture-building. He maintains that we haven't as yet given ourselves the situation for answering the question yes or no.

"There is every reason to believe," Mr. Huxley says, "that ethnic groups) will . . . be proved to differ genetically in intellectual and emotional characters, both quantitatively and qualitatively. But—and this cannot be too strongly emphasized—we at present have on this point no evidence whatever which can claimed to be called scientific. Different ethnic groups have different languages and cultures; and the effects of the cultural environment are so powerful as to override and mask any genetic effects."

In the devastating light of what Mr. Huxley has to say, Dr. George's "science" becomes what Huxley calls a "dangerous pseudo-science." In the first place, judged in the light of Huxley's assertions in the essay, Dr. George has used a pre-supposition that he will not allow in practice.

That is, Dr. George will not condone the climax of segregation which, if done, would equalize the environment so that he, for example, might be able to determine, in a truly scientific way, whether in the first place the Negro race is inherently inferior and, in the second place, cross-breeding would have a deleterious effect. Mr. Huxley's reasoning forces Dr. George into a corner. It appears that Dr George, to be truly "biological" and "scientific" about miscegenation and equality, must first allow desegregation.

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

Nobody knows who will be head football coach here at UNC next year. As of today, the job still belongs to George Barclay, who has completed two years of a three-year contract.

Athletic Director C. P. (Chuck) Erickson, when asked for a statement on the coaching situation yesterday, replied: "All I can say is, Barclay is still the coach. Nothing has happened to change that. I won't be able to say anything definite until after the Athletic Council meeting the 14th."

The situation at present is this: On the one hand is the Athletic Deparmtent, which seems inclined to maintain the status quo, giving Barclay another year, which his contract calls for. On the other hand are many alumni, generous contributors to the Carolina Athletic Association. These alumni are incensed at Carolina's poor grid showing during the past season, and want a change.

It's the old story of big time college football. To play big time football, a college has to have wealthy alumni who will kick in with the cash. This cash goes for subsidizing players, buying the best equipment, etc., and paying the coach's salary. When the team doesn't win, the alumni flex their checkbooks and cry for a little head-rolling, usually that of the coach.

The most popular misbelief is that all the Carolina alumni who want a change want Maryland's Jim Tatum to replace Barclay. Some do want Tatum, but quite a few don't. Tatum is not the kind of man who caters to every little alumni whim. He avoided this to some extent at Maryland by refusing to accept the head coaching job unless he also got the Athletic Director position. By holding down both jobs, Tatum manages to escape some of the pressure that invariably comes from higher up.

In fact, in previous years when Tatum's name has come up concerning a switch to UNC, he has reportedly made the statement that he would not come here unless he got the athletic directorship along with the head coaching post. This could complicate matters.

The pressuring from the alumni will undoubtedly continue until the Athletic Council meeting next Tuesday. When the Council meets it will take one of two courses: Either Barclay will receive a vote of confidence and his contract will be honored, or a recommendation for a change will be adopted. The decision of the Council will be presented to Chancellor House, to whom the task of making the final decision will fall.

We hope that in the final analysis responsible officials will take into consideration the fact that Barclay was hired for three years, not two, and that he has one year to go. Through his recruiting, Carolina fielded one of the best freshmen teams in its history. Last season's varsity was loaded with several potentially great sophomores, Klochak and Sutton, to mention a couple. They, too, were brought here by Barclay.

If there remains any semblance of fairness of big time college football, Barclay's contract should not be abrogated. He was given three years to produce. He has one to go.

Tar Heels Tangle With Gamecocks Tonight

Unscouted SC May Start Three Ex-Pikeville College Stars

Carolina Freshmen Meet Atlantic Christian College In Preliminary Contest At 6:15

By BERNIE WEISS

An aura of mystery will surround the South Carolina Gamecocks tonight when they take the floor in the Woollen Gym to oppose Carolina's Tar Heels.

No one locally seems to know very much about the 'Cocks, who have played only one game to date. That fray was a 74-55 victory over weak Georgia. SC has acquired five good ballplayers from a small Kentucky college, who are supposed to have raised their potentialities, but outside of these few meager facts, our southern cousins remain a mystery.

Neither varsity coach Frank McGuire nor frosh mentor Buck Freeman has seen the team in action because the season just started. The only thing UNC's coaching staff has to go by are some films taken last year, but with five new ballplayers, three of whom will probably start, the Gamecocks should be a brand-new team.

Although McGuire is not tremendously worried over South Carolina, there is much cause for him to be concernd. The Gamecocks have eight lettermen returning, and among these eight are last season's four top scorers. The team was strong toward the end of last season and McGuire considers it a dark-horse in the ACC race.

The five players SC picked up recently are from Pikesville, Ky., Junior Collge, a team which won 32 of 35 games. Thus McGuire has "high regard" for South Carolina.

SC will probably put the following starting line-up on the court: forwards Joe Smith and Woody Preston; guards Russ Porter and Benny Fannin; ;center Lee Collins. Porter, Fannin and Preston are the pick-ups from Pikeville.

McGuire will start Paul Likins at center; Len Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda at forwards; Al Lifson and Tony Radovich at guards. Rosenbluth leads Carolina scorers with 52 points in two games.

Tatum 'Knows Nothing' Of Reports

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Dec. 8 (AP)—Jim Tatum, Maryland's football coach, said today he knows nothing of reports going the rounds that he's headed back to the University of North Carolina, his alma mater, as coach.

"I haven't talked to anybody at Chapel Hill since a week after our game in October and I don't know anything about a report I'm going to coach North Carolina," he said.

He said he read "in the papers that The Miami Daily News said I was going there North Carolina, but I don't understand how they know more than I do."

He recalled also that a broadcaster had predicted he was going to coach the professional Washington Redskins.

"The same fellow last year predicted that Frank Leahy was going to coach the Green Bay Packers.

"There ought to be a way to hold these fellows accountable for their stories."

Morris McLemore, sports editor of The Miami Daily News, wrote that "I think it the North Carolina job for Tatum will be announced after an athletic board meeting at Chapel Hill on Dec. 14."

Tatum said that on that day he will be in Cincinnati for a testimonial dinner to Coach Sid Gilman.

The North Carolina shift is one of three Tatum said he had denied this week.

"Yesterday I got a call from Tennessee asking if I was coming called and asked if I was going there, and an hour later I was to The Citadel."

Williams Made Frosh Captain

In a post-season election by the players Tuesday, Howard Williams was chosen captain of the 1954 freshman football team.

Williams, who played at fullback for two games then shifted to halfback, scored 19 points in four games on three touchdowns and one PAT. Another Williams touchdown was nullified because of a penalty.

Williams, an all-American while playing for his Hertford High School eleven, is 18 years old, weighs 195 pounds and stands six feet, three inches. He is described by his coach, Ralph Floyd, as being a "fine leader, a great competitor, and a promising football player."

Year's Most Spectacular

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP)—October 23, 1954 in football-mad Columbus, Ohio. There were 82,000 people in the stadium to see the showdown game between State and Wisconsin for the Big Ten championship and the Rose Bowl bid. At half-time Wisconsin led 7-3.

That was the setting for the play that the nation's sports writers picked as the most spectacular incident of the 1954 football season.

Other games may have been more thrilling over-all than Ohio State-Wisconsin-the breath taking Army-Navy struggle, for example. And there were plays as sudden and exciting, but none with quite the same combination of thrills and importance.

At Christmas Time Remember the Lady Who Scrubbed Behind Your Ears...

We needn't remind you that Mom rates the best on Christmas. But we do venture to suggest that if she needs an ear trumpet, she'll buy it herself. What she wants from you is something that will show that you know she's still full of life, with nary a cob-web in the bellfrey.

This Christmas, pay Mom the compliment of treating her as a contemporary. Let your gift tell her that she's on her mental toes and going strong. We think one of these books might do the trick.

The Rogers and Hart Song Book, So swiftly time moves! It was only yesterday that Pop had to wait his turn to dance to some of these favorites with the swellest dame in the world - and you can bet your life she'll thank you for this beautiful collection! $7.50

Roberta Crowell's Story - Here's the autobiography of a man who was turned into a woman. Written with grace and restraint, we think it will fascinate but not shock. Believe us, Mom will not put it down! $3.00

View from Pompey's Head, by Hamilton Basso. A very fine novel, with a Southern setting. We think it will be kept among Mom's favorites $3.95

Goodbye, My Lady, by James Street. A tender and beautiful animal story, a little reminiscent of "The Yearling", and a wonderful gift. $3.00

Burl Ives Tales of America - Here is a glorious folklore round-up, collected and set down by the famous singer of folk ballads. ... $3.95

A King's Heritage - by King Peter II, of Yugoslavia. Exiled royalty always carries a romantic appeal, and we think Mom will delight in this frank story of the handsome man who was thrown out of a job by the power-happy politicians. $5.00

Good Morning Miss Dove, by Frances Gray Patton. The beloved North Carolina author has hit the jack pot with this novel. It's a book club choice, a best seller, and everybody is talking about it. Mom will enjoy it too. $2.75

Free Love and Heavenly Sinners, by Robert Shaplen. We think Mom will feel right rakish when she reads this lively account of Henry Ward Beecher's fall from grace! It has all the charm of a good gossip session. $3.95

The Second Treasury of Early American Homes, by Richard Pratt. If Mom enjoyed the first volume of this luxirious treasury, she'll find the second even more delightful. If she merely longed for it, here's your chance to bowl her over! $12.50

Shadows in Silver, by Kocher and Dearstyne. People, plantations, towns and cities of Virginia, as recorded in old photographs. A jewel of a book! $7.50

DECEMBER AND MAY: ACT II

Synopsis of Act I: A middle-aged English Professor named Phipps has fallen desperately in love with a rosy-kneed coed named McFetridge. Phipps doesn't know how to go about courting Miss McFetridge, for, after all, he is a professor in the autumn of his life, and she is a coed with rosy knees. Professor Twonkey, who shares an office with Phipps, proposes the following plan: Phipps will ask Miss McFetridge to come to his office for a conference late in the afternoon. He will be urbane and charming and make frightfully witty remarks about English lit, and Miss McFetridge will laugh and laugh. After an hour of this high-type hilarity, Phipps will look at his watch, exclaim at the lateness of the hour, and insist on driving Miss McFetridge home. On the way home, he will pass a theatre that shows French movies. They'll see the movie, then have an exquisite French dinner, and Miss McFetridge will be so enchanted that she cannot but yield to his suit.

So at the beginning of Act II, we find Phipps in his office awaiting the arrival of the poor young innocent. His hair is brushed; his nails are clean; he has new leather patches on his elbows. There is a knock on the door. He opens it and admits a gorgeous creature with blue eyes and pink kneecaps.

PHIPPS: Ah, Miss McFetridge. Come in, my dear. Won't you sit down? Cigarette?

MISS MCF: Ooh, Philip Morris! I think they're marvy, don't you?

PHIPPS: I do indeed.

MISS MCF: Hey, prof, would you mind opening a fresh pack?

PHIPPS: But I just opened this one a little while ago. It's perfectly fresh.

MISS MCF: I know, prof, but I like to hear the snap when the pack opens.

PHIPPS: Very well, my dear.

(He opens a fresh snap-open pack of Philip Morris. Miss McFetridge claps her hands delightedly when she hears the snap.)

MISS MCF: Hey, that fractures me! Man, I flip when I hear that crazy snap! Do another one.

PHIPPS: All right.

(He snaps open another pack of Philip Morris)

MISS MCF: (Ecstatically) Isn't that the living, breathing end? Do two at once.

PHIPPS: Well, if you insist . . .

(He does two at once)

MISS MCF: More! More!

PHIPPS: I'm afraid that's all I have.

MISS MCF: Oh . . . Well, what's up, prof? What did you want to see me about?

PHIPPS: Oh, nothing in particular. Just wanted to have a little chat, find out how you're enjoying the Shakespeare lectures.

MISS MCF: I don't know, prof. By me Shakespeare is strictly a square.

PHIPPS: Indeed? Well, I must say I find your attitude refreshing. One is so inclined toward slavish admiration when it comes to the Bard. People forget that in many quarters Shakespeare is regarded quite critically. Take, for example, the opinion of Shaw.

MISS MCF: Artie?

PHIPPS: George Bernard...You know, of course, his famous words.

MISS MCF: I sure don't, dad.

PHIPPS: Shaw said he would like to dig up Shakespeare and throw stones at him.

MISS MCF: Did he dig him?

PHIPPS: No, I don't believe so.

MISS MCF: I don't dig him either.

PHIPPS: (Looking at watch) Good heavens, I had no idea it was so late. Come, my dear, I'll drive you home.

MISS MCF: No, thanks. I always walk home. It's good for the circulation in your legs. I got the best circulation in my legs of the whole sophomore class. Ever notice how rosy my knees are?

PHIPPS: As a matter of fact, yes . . . Look, you sure you don't want a ride home? There's an excellent French movie on the way.

MISS MCF: Not me, dad. I hate French pictures. The sub-titles always disappear before I can read 'em. But if you want to go to the movies, there's a new Tony Curtis picture downtown—a real gut-buster. Tony plays this beggar, see, but he's really a prince only he doesn't know it on account of his sneaky uncle who switched babies when Tony got born. Then Tony finds this magic lamp, see, and he gets into the palace where he meets this crazy girl, only she's engaged to the fake prince, but then they have this mad sword fight, and Tony licks about a million guys, and then he finds out he's the prince and it's real crazy. Wanna go? I've only seen it three or four times.

PHIPPS: As a matter of fact, I just remembered a previous engagement. Sorry.

MISS MCF: That's all right. Thanks for the Philip Morris. 'Bye.

'Teedee' Scrimmages In 'Arsenic'

One of the star performers of Carolina's Kenan Stadium will be directing his talents in another direction when he plays the "juvenile lead" in the Playmakers coming production of "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Len Bullock, first string quarterback for the Tar Heels, will act the part of the young newspaper critic who foils the maniacs and gets the girl in Joseph Kesselring's comedy of murder which will be presented in the Playmakers' Theatre Dec. 14 through 18.

Although he had always wanted to act, until a year ago Bullock had ventured on the stage only in a high school play. Last year, some of his friends persuaded him to try out for a part in the Playmakers' production of "Kiss Me Kate." Two small parts in that play were enough to start Bullock on his way. In the next bill of original plays he was given the leading role in a comedy, and immediately thereafter played the part of a priest in "The Outsider."

Only the football season has kept the varsity quarterback from trying out for roles in the two earlier fall productions of the Playmakers. During the last week of the season which was the first week of rehearsals for "Arsenic and Old Lace," Bullock tried out for and got the roll which he will play in the group's next production.

Even in the light of this, Dr. Githers explained that the government is willing to invest several thousand dollars in Dr. Tombough's project, because considerable scientific knowledge was used up during the second world war. In addition, since the Army is interested in guided missiles, there might be new techniqus developed which would assist in th tracking of high speed missiles.

Dr. Githens added that the Army is interested in developing basic research and developing new techniques, because there is a "need to buildup new people and ideas.'

"These figures show that there has been wonderful cooperation," said Fund worker Mrs. Marion Hill, "But that we still need a great deal of help to avoid disappointnig people.

"There are several large families with 10 to 12 children to be taken care of," said Mrs. Hill.

Kappa Sigma, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Alpha Tau Omega and Chi Psi are also planning to have Christmas parties for children.

U.S. Influence In Asia On Decline, Warns Bowles In Forum Speech

Former Ambassador Says India Key To Asia Defense

By RICHARD THIELE

"Our ability to influence events in Asia may be running out," warned former ambassador to India Chester Bowles last night.

Speaking to a near-capacity audience at Carroll Hall, Bowles said that all over Asia he was impressed by a lack of understanding of the U. S. "Everywhere I went I saw the same sterotype impression of America and its objectives.

"We're getting more and more out of tune with Asia," the former ambassador said. The people over there are very suspicious of us, he said. "These suspicions probably stem from the old fears of a return to colonialism. It's hard to understand what Asia thinks; many Asians, while frightened of the rise of Red Chnia, are intrigued to see a nation of Asians develop into a world power."

Speaking at a Carolina Forum presentation, Bowles was introduced by Prof. R. C. Bose, of the Math Statistics Department.

"Money doesn't buy friends," he said. "The important thing is not that they agree with us, but that they have faith in themselves and believe in freedom. Power rests with the people, and a nation's population is its strength."

India and Japan, he said, contain one-fifth of the world's population. "These two nations are the key to strength in Asia and more emphasis should be placed on winning their friendship."

During the question and an which followed the speech, Bowles was asked about the entrance of Red China to the UN. "The Chinese," he said, "have so far shown no desire for settlement or cooperation, so I don't see how we can do business with them" under the present conditions.

Discussing foreign policy, the former ambassador said we should proceed less out of fear and more out of faith. "Faith," he said, is the positive weapon that can lead us down the road to peace."

All those desiring rides are asked to sign up at the bulletin borad at the Methodist Church in Chapel Hill by Friday night. Groups going over will meet at the church at 7:15 p. m. today, 1:30 p. m. tomorrow and 5:30 a. m. on Sunday.

UP's Webb Speaker Pro Tem

By NEIL BASS

The opening session of the newly elected UNC student Legislatur was keynoted last evening by hotly contested elections. The most heated and narrowest margin of the lot was eked out by the University Party's Beverly Webb, elected by a one vote majority over the Student Party's choice Joel Fleishman, to serve as speaker pro tem.

In other administrative seat contests, Larry McElroy (SP) was elected by acclaimation to the parlimentarian's post, Lewis Brumfield (SP) incumbent was renamed sergeant at arms and Susan Fink (SP) was chosen to succeed Sonia Bergan as legislative clerk.

Named to head the govering body's three standing committees were Bob Young (SP), Ways and Means; Bob Harrington (SP), Rules; and Norwood Bryan (SP) Finance.

Martin Jordan, current speaker, administered the customarry oath to the solons and expressed the desire that "the new Legislators would carry out their duties feitly and efficiently."

A number of new bills were submitted to the group, the first of which was (SP) introduced and stated in effect that," a committee be established to look into the campus parking violation problem."

The (UP) introduced bills calling for "the establishment of a bi-partisan board to select honor council candidates" and "appropriation of eleven hundred dollars to the university band."

Monitoring System In Dormitory?

The president of Cobb Dormitory has gone on record as being "definitely against" a proposed monitor system in the huge building's halls.

President Louis Brumfield was questioned after The Corn Cobb, dormitory publication, printed a story about secret monitors.

Identities of the monitors would be kept secret, said the Cobb, and offenders would be reported "to the advisors or even South Building."

Said President Brumfield: "I don't think we need monitors at present. We have a councilor on every floor who is appointed by the IDC.

"I'm not in favor of monitors, and I would recommend them only as a last resort. A monitor system is against the Carolina tradition," Brumfield said.

Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, said he knew nothing about the appointment of "councilors" other than those already assigned to Cobb.

Did Kraar Stab Reid? Trial Set For Tonight

Louis Kraar, Daily Tar Heel columnist and political reporter, goes on trial tonight for an alleged injury to Dave Reid, SP legislator, in Phi Alpha Delta Legal Fraternity's annual Mock Trial.

The "injury" which Reid sustained in a Y-court affray on Nov. 3 caused Kraar to be charged with "assault with a deadly weapon with intent to do bodily harm."

Kraar, who has been "out on bail" since the day after the fight, had "no comment" late yesterday.

The "trial" will get under way at 7 o'clock tonight in the court room of Manning Hall. The trial which will be run in every way possible like a real criminal trial will be presided over by Superior Court Judge J. A. Rousseau of North Wilkesboro.

The affray between Kraar and Reid took place in a chilly early morning Y-Court on Nov. 3.

One of the chief witnesses of the fight was Miss Connie McMahon a vivacious petite coed from Asheville, over whom the whole affair alledgedly started.

Miss McMahon has not given any statement to newsmen since the incident happened. Kraar would not say yesterday if he had been dating Miss McMahon since the brawl. (If Kraar married her before time for the trial tonight she could not testify against him.)

An unidentified source close to the prosecutor for the case said yesterday that the "deadly weapon" listed in the warrant for Kraar is a mechanical pencil. Reid's neck was alledgedly gouged with said pencil.

Earlier this week a source close to the Counsel for the Defense Calvin Wallace rumored that several character witnesses in Kraar's behalf may be introduced at the trial.

The jury for the "trial" will be picked from the audience and selection of these jurors will begin promptly at 7 p. m.

Dr. Henderson Writes On Mark Twain, Shaw

Mark Twain and Bernard Shaw have two distinctive points in common which invite reflection: neither attended a college or university, therefore avoiding the representative influence of academic regularization; and, both entered literature through the gateway of journalism.

This view of Twain-Shaw similarities is expressed by Dr. Archibald Henderson, official biographer of Shaw and professor emeritus here, in the lead article of The Mark Twain Journal.

Writing in the Bernard Shaw Memorial Number, Henderson recounts his acquaintance with both literary figures, whom he introduced to each other in 1907.

"GLOBAL FAME"

"I had the unparalleled opportunity of introducing to each other these two literary figures of the most conspiciously global fame of our time — Mark Twain, then at the very zenith of his popularity . . .and Bernard Shaw, still to wait many years for the full fruition of his genius," Henderson wrote.

Dr. Henderson, who has written authorized biographies of both Twain and Shaw, is president of the Shaw Society of America, as well as a member of the Mark Twain Society.

The Shaw-Twain introduction occurred in England, where Twain had gone to receive an honorary doctor of laws degree from Oxford University. In his account of the event Dr. Henderson describes Twain as the then "greatest living humorist" and Shaw as "the greatest living wit."

Commenting upon the similarities of the two writers, Dr. Henderson wrote: "Each wrote with a directness, lucidity and viable vocabulary which were whetted to a fine edge by training as newspapermen."

According to Dr. Henderson, Twain "knew little or nothing of Shaw but graciously assured Shaw of great interest in his writings."

Shaw remarked to Dr. Henderson after the meetng that "I consider Mark Twain America's greatest writer by far. America's two greatest, most precious literary assets are Poe and Twain. Mark Twain is in very much the same position as myself. He has to put things, as do I, in such a way as to make people, who otherwise would hang him, believe he is joking.

Dr. Henderson met Twain on board ship bound to England, where the historian was going to meet Shaw after three years' study of Shaw's published writings and an active correspondence with him.

Thinks He's T. Roosevelt

WILLIAM TROTMAN, from Winston-Salem, playing the demented Brother who thinks he's Teddy Roosevelt, in the Carolina Playmakers' production of "Arsenic and Old Lace," prepares to bury corpse number 12, the last victim of his sisters' arsanic-flavored elderberry wine. The Joseph Kesselring comedy of poison in the parlor and bodies in the basement will open for five consecutive performances next Tuesday at 8:30, and will be taken on a statewide tour in February.

The Case Of The Government Workers

"Elementary, my dear Watson," Sherlock Holmes used to tell his sidekick just before he unraveled the solution to a mystery.

The word from Washington now is that the Democratic Congress plans a look-see into the Eisenhower security system. Word also has it that this investigation will not be so elementary.

For a number of reasons, many have objected to the security system. Civil rights advocates have objected because they feel too much heed has been paid to Defense Secretary Wilson's idea that "questions of doubtful loyalty should be resolved in favor of the nation, not the individual."

The Democrats have objected because irresponsible Republicans have used security firings as ammunition for their political cannons. (The "6,926 dismissals" is a case in point.) Otherwise, it is felt that clear distinction has not been made between government employees and advisers dismissed for real loyalty reasons and those fired for "moral irresponsibility."

Finally, the Truman loyalty board, a court of higher appeal, was scrapped by the Republicans; the final responsibility for all firings was left to the department heads.

This is the atmosphere in which, for two years, individual rights and security requirements have been balanced against each other. Just how far the scales have been tipped away from individual rights may be seen in the statement of the Gray Board in the Oppenheimer case—that if it had been allowed to "exercise mature practical judgment" by the security system, its decision on Dr. Oppenheimer might well have been different.

The new Congress has every right—every obligation, in fact—to don its double-visored Sherlock Holmes hat, light up its briar pipe, and take a thorough inventory of the state of the security system.

As things stand now, we hear new locks on civil liberties clicking shut every day.

Girl Watchers Come Lately

We have received in the mail an invitation to become a charter member of the "American Society of Girl Watchers," an embryo organization of "refined gentlemen dedicated to discreet but relentless Girl Watching."

We accept the Society's premises, that a girl does not have to know how to tap dance or sing or make her own clothes to be beautiful. She does not even have to know how to count up to ten to be beautiful. All she has to be to be beautiful is beautiful and there is nothing in the world more beautiful than a girl.

All this is true, but we have turned down the Society's invitation. It was tendered, we are sure, through an unfortunate lack of knowledge on the part of the Society about what kind of campus this is. It is a place where organized Girl Watching would be superfluous because the pastime is so firmly rooted already in an informal way.

Girl Watching at Carolina begins with Freshman Orientation and continues without let up through graduation. It is as much a part of our tradition as the Davie Poplar or the Chancellor's harmonica. It is a bigger thing than cross-word puzzle-working or Daily Tar Heel-cussing.

Girl Watching at Carolina, and we have so informed the Society, has been proceeding successfully for years and doesn't need conventions, parades and formality to give it impetus.

Carolina Front

Mundy Charge Against Forum All Wrong

Louis Kraar

IN RARE form—that is, wronger than usual—reactionary columnist David Mundy charged the speaker-procuring Carolina Forum with "left-wing" partisanship the other day.

And, as usual, a close check into Mundy's charges proved them wrong and much too hasty.

Mundy, who is not a bad guy when he's not columnizing, cited the speakers brought to campus so far this year to back up his charges.

But the hasty reactionary failed to look at the speakers scheduled for the rest of the school year. They're all Republicans.

It's true that so far we've had speakers representing the left side of political thinking. But the spring speakers will warm Mundy's conservative heart—and allow his charge-hurling typewriter to cool.

According to Forum head Joel Fleishman, this spring Republicans Home Capehart, Indiana senator, Leverett Saltonstall, Massachusetts senator, and perhaps Everett Dirkson, Illinois senator, will come to campus.

GIBSON JACKSON, who plays piano in Danziger's and announces for a Burlington radio station, received a "fan letter" the other day.

The letter said:

"This is a fan letter! I have heard you several times on the Burlington station, and it is a relief to hear the king's English correctly spoken and foreign names pronounced as they should be. If they pay you as much as you're worth, I am sure the $80 you owe me will be a mere trifle."

The letter was signed Walter Creech, Jackson's landlord.

"THE TOWER of campus thought and action" at Duke University—The Duke Chronicle—went into action against Carolina the other day without too much thought for facts.

The Duke student paper came out swinging against the "professional liberals" from UNC who use National Student Association and State Student Legislature meetings as machines for "personal propaganda."

What the paper objected to in this flurry of political palavering is the way Carolina picks delegates to the mock legislature in Raleigh. Duke feels the delegates should be "accredited" by the student government. Here at Carolina, selection is left to a committee.

What Duke apparently doesn't know is that this committee submits each prospective delegate to a rigid test on his knowledge of government, speaking, and parliamentary procedure.

As for the "professional liberal" charge—a good name-calling device—the students who represented UNC at the Raleigh mock legislature were both liberal and conservative, Republicans and Democratic.

Carolina's delegates included conservative Republicans like David Mundy, Manning Muntzig, and Lewis Brumfield as well as liberals like Jim Turner, Joel Fleishman and David Reid.

When votes were taken, Carolina—more than any other school there—found its delegation split on numerous issues. At one point, during a debate on the merits of the Eisenhower Administration, two Carolina students almost came to blows.

Duke's charge was probably inspired by the sound licking the Blue Devil politicos suffered at the hands of Carolina's delegates. Duke's candidates for several officers were beaten in Raleigh due to skillful politicking by Carolina students, and the Western Durham Ivy League emulators are still bitter.

Just like a bunch of "professional conservatives," isn't it?

'It Breaks My Heart To See Those Sad Little Tykes'

Kansas City Star Case

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — When the Kansas City Star and its publisher, Roy Roberts, were indicted criminally during the closing days of the Truman Administration, almost everyone in politics figured this was one indictment which wouldn't last long when the Eisenhower Administration took over.

For it was big, burly Roy Roberts who was among the first to urge Ike for President, and who advised with him during the pre-convention draft-Ike campaign. Furthermore, Roberts, though under indictment, has been a frequent caller at the White House, has been frequently invited to the intimate stag dinners the President gives to a chosen few.

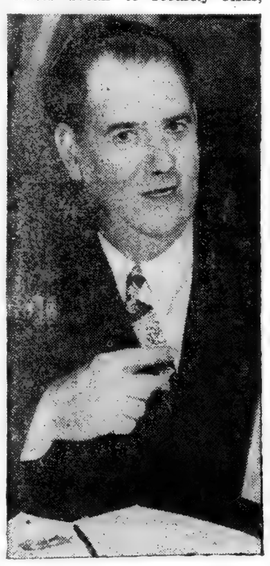
However, two years have now passed and not only has the indictment against the publisher of the Kansas City Star not been dropped, but the Justice Department plans to begin prosecution early next year.

Thereby hangs a significant story.

The man now in charge of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, Stanley Barnes, a California Republican of the Chief Justice Earl Warren school of political thinking, has turned out to be one of the most forthright members of the Eisenhower Administration. He has also turned out to be just as tough on big business and on monopoly as any member of the Roosevelt-Truman Administration, even perhaps including famed trust-buster Thurman Arnold.

It's significant that Judges Barnes, a former California state judge, is not playing any political favorites. A close study of the case has convinced him that it was by no means a political indictment brought as a result of rivalry between Harry Truman and Roy Roberts, but rather a bona fide case involving freedom of the press and the right of people in Kansas City to advertise where they please, not where Roy Roberts wanted them to advertise.

So he's proceeding with the prosecution.



Revising The Numbers Game

White House advisers aren't publishing it, but they have been busy on a new security program which will head off the Democratic probe of the so-called "numbers game."

This is the game in which Vice President Nixon, Attorney General Brownell, and other GOP campaign speakers have claimed Republicans cleaned out Democratic security risks which menaced the government.

The Democrats deny this. And to prove their case, Sen. Olin Johnston of South Carolina, chairman to be of the Civil Service Committee, plans a sweeping probe of Republican firings. He believes he can prove that one-half the security risks were hired by Republicans.

To head off this probe, Eisenhower has referred the whole problem to the National Security Council which has already prepared Top Secret Report No. 4537/1 which will not be made public for some time. However, it can be revealed that the report recommends giving a far better break to security risks, plus a standardized procedure for all government agencies, instead of the hit and miss divergent systems of firing personnel.

SEN. OLIN JOHNSTON
. . . to probe findings

White House advisers are even considering a plan to help the accused pay the cost of defending himself, or else making the cost of defense cheaper. In the past, men like Val Orwin, one of the State Department officials charged by McCarthy with being a communist, had to raise money from friends to carry on his fight. Though indicted, the Justice Department finally went into court after four long years and asked that the indictment be dismissed on the ground that it had no case.

Similarly, Abraham Chasanow, the Navy clerk suspended for one year as a security risk with no charge placed against him; finally was given an official apology by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and restored to his job. Chasanow had no funds, but his attorney, Joe Fanelli, defended him as a public service.

White House advisers also propose separating bona fide security risks from heavy drinkers, loose talkers, and misfits, hitherto all linked with loyalty cases as security risks.

'Democratic Security Risk'

Here is an illustration of a security risk fired by the Republicans and lumped in the imposing total of alleged "Democratic risks" cleaned out of government. He is John H. MacVey, hired by the Federal Communications Commission on Feb. 19, 1954, one year and one month after Ike entered office, and one month and eight days after MacVey was released from Gallinger Hospital where he was committed on Dec. 27, 1953, by the D. C. Commissioner of Mental Health for what was later called a "psychotic episode."

He had Republican friends in high places, however, among them his father, a Republican leader in St. Lawrence County, New York, who intervened with the state and county GOP committees. Accordingly, MacVey's appointment was recommended by the Republican National Committee in Washington and he was hired by Rosel Hyde, a Republican, and chairman of the Federal Communications Commission.

Despite his record, MacVey was placed in one of the most strategic spots in the entire FCC, in the review section, where he passed upon TV and radio licenses.

Eight months after MacVey was hired, he was "terminated," October 20, and was lumped among the so-called Democratic "security risks" which Republican campaigners claim they have purged from government. Note — Tragedy is that as a result of playing politics with so-called security risks, the names of a lot of other unfortunates who have had trouble wtih John Barleycorn are scheduled to come out in congressional investigations.

Reaction Piece

Dear Steve — I Sent The GOP Home Today

David Mundy

Chapel Hill, N. C.
December 10, 1954

Dear Steve,

My long silence is beginning to surprise even me. My last letter occurred some four months ago, right?

Wir geht's? (Yes, I'm taking German.) I trust that Oberlin is still O.K. (I am still envious of all twenty-five feet of Mt. Oberlin. I haven't found a hill around here yet.)

Still a psycho major? I've been fortunate in receiving "non-boring," if not interesting, professors this semester .Considering your fears of last summer, I hope you the same. Dr. Daniel, my Psych 24 professor, is proving as popular this semester as last summer. My "Texas oil millionaire roommate," who is interested in little else but those little cars (MG's, et al) and women, even finds his lectures stimulating. (He hasn't been converted into a student yet, though.) And even with his rapid-fire delivery, Dr. Daniel's humor is making him something of a George Gobel competitor. Soon I expect to hear that advertisers are inserting spot announcements in his lectures. In a few years the psychology department might afford a new building, or even retire some professors.

My lengthy, perhaps pleasant silence, could endure a little explanation. I, David Mundy, boy writer, have been writing a column for the Daily Tar Heel. And it is plumb excitin'.

As you may suspect, my journalistic splurges are likely to be more in the line of exhibitionism and bravado than anything else. I missed that stage of development back in grammar school anyway.

For years I've been thinking of myself as a quiet, unagressive (i.e., cowardly) being. The strain of a twice-weekly column has either cleared me of a delusion, loosened the bonds of an inferiority complex, or provided a channel of expression for all sorts of depressed desires. Considering your interest in psychology and pending the Christmas vacation, I'll leave further psychoanalization up to you.

Remember my rather perverse insistence that I would deliver no high school graduation valedictory if I couldn't use my own eight-word composition? The story has changed somewhat in its journey down to "the Hill." Intentionally distorted or not. I think it crept onto campus with some of the state's "future leaders." They are BMOC's now, and have the firmest intentions and well-laid plans for becoming BMIS's, if not BMIN's, or even BMIW's. (Abbreviations for big men of the state, nation, and the world.)

The new version says that I "got up at the graduation exercises and told everyone, including the principal and assorted teacher(s) to go to hell." The new version is so colorful that, frankly, I don't mind it a bit. It attributes more "nerve" than I have possessed since my first day in the first grade—when I got into my first and last fisticuffs engagement.

My political philosophy, if it could be called that, is undergoing something of a shift. By Christmas you are quite likely to find one less Republican. The liberal Republicans (the wheels, i.e.) seem set on assassinating the more conservative members. Those of the Secretary Mitchell stripe are anathema (against anti-closed-shop laws! Ye Gods!) The president and the Secretary of State seem more pleased with good public relations than a realistic foreign policy. And I can't go along with brother Joseph. I'm even further from the Southern version of the Democrats than ever, especially over segregation, so I can't join them.

I'm thinking of going my own way and founding a party of my own, the "Mundane Socialists." (re et contra "Marxian Socialists.") Our platform will favor such socialist programs as public ownership of schools and highway, and perhaps even of some utilities. Norman Thomas is only against the "spirit of the backers" of the Bricker Amendment, so I imagine that we will have to make a plank out it too.

See ya —
David M.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . . Hipporotis, c. 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was ginking about in the environs of Murphy, when I saw him. Noah Webster defines a gink as an absurd, eccentric person, and The Horse looked absurd with such a large load of books as he was carrying.

"There's just no satisfying some people," The Horse growled, quite a feat for a horse, indeed. "It used to be s. o. p. for horses to carry loads, no matter what variety. Now I am taken to task for a load of books."

Not taken to task, Horsie, merely being warned. Didn't Poor Richard say in his Almanack, Little strokes fell great oaks. . . ? He did! Similarly, Lotsa courses fell old Horses. . . if the ol' hosses tried to tote the texts of those about all at once.

"I'm osmosing the subjects," The Horse declared. "Absorbing, you know, the contents, via contact with my horsehide. Very edoocashional."

Yes; but horsehide was a tough resister. Proof of this perhaps could be found in The Horse's grades. What was The Horse studying?

"Aristotle, Sophocles, Shakespeare, G. Bernie O'Pshaw, and sometimes Catullus, the latter a most intriguing Roman poet of Julius Caesar's day, and what that lad has to say about Caesar, tsk, tsk!" The Horse elaborated. "Such erudite name-calling doubtless inspired Harold Ickes, the late Old Curmudgeon."

I thought The Horse's selections of classes were appropriate: the principles he was studying were all dead . . . as, close to, was The Horse.

"A ho-ho for your pun-funning, sterile churl." The Horse Shakespeared me; or was it Winchelling? "The principles these celebrated principles stood for are not dead. Howsoever, som of them are more than mildly decomposed. But let it never be said that a bit of obfuscation discouraged a Horse bent on learning."

Okay, okay; but what was The Horse learning, and to what purpose? At his age, what good could it do?

"Ol' Sophocles was still pounding his typewriter at age ninety," The Horse shrugged, "and he was a late starter, too. So was Aristotle. Grandma Moses grabbed the carecloth in which her juniors were prepared to wrap her, turned it into canvas, and started to paint when she was past seventy. Shaw didn't miss by much elevating his hirsute chin to the century mark, and he was still joyfully twacking the rumps of pretense and hypocrisy as he breathed his last."

Ugh, did this mean The Horse was threatening to continue Eyeing things hereabouts until he was one hundred years stale? And they killed Caesar!

"Now, there's an example which Ike would have done well to study," The Horse interposed, clubbing me with a gay hoof to drive home his point. "Ike without doubt perused the tactics and stretegy of Caesar's Gallic Wars, when the former was matriculating at The Trade School on the Hudson y-clept West Point. He should have re-read the Senate passages, howsoever. You know, that 'Et tu, McCarthy!' bit? Other interesting parallels exists. Ike, who was silent while Marshall — a modern-day Pompey — was being done in by Brute McCarthy in those rallies in Wisconsin, knows how the stab-in-the-back feels, now. Heck, Ike's plenty older'n me, and he is still learning, I hope, I hope."

I thought McCarthy was somewhat Classical himself. Shakespearian, titularly speaking, no?

The Horse shuddered, but braced for the blow manfully. I mean, equinely. "Let's have it, Roger," he quavered. "I'm sure it is a rancid joke which is coming, but — like Ike, I'm game to the corps."

I just thought McCarthy might get by in a charade as The Merchant of Venom, that was all. Apparently, it was enough, as well as all. For once The Horse was speechless.

Smith, Winrod & Co. Bit The Dust With Joe

By Congressional Quarterly

CENSURE of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R-Wis.) whatever its long-term consequences, is unlikely to shake the support given to him by certain groups long active on the periphery of American politics.

Led by such familiar and controversial figures as Gerald L. K. Smith, Gerald Winrod, Merwin K. Hart and Joseph Kamp, these groups have played a vocal if not a leading role in rallying opinion to the side of the Wisconsin senator. Recently, they have not enjoyed as much publicity as the recently organized Ten Million Americans mobilizing for Justice, which staked a last-minute drive for petitions to stave off censure of Sen. McCarthy. But they have been no less outspokenly pro-McCarthy.

During the censure debate, for example, Smith, who heads the Christian Nationalist Crusade, circulated the following message to senators:

"A WORD TO THE WISE: We are keeping careful tab on all senators . . . In case of war or intensification of the cold war, any senator who made it difficult for McCarthy will be automatically retired as an appeaser of Communism."

Smith amplified his views on Nov. 23, in a letter to his followers requesting funds. In it, he called the McCarthy fight a struggle against "this Fabian, bureaucratic alien-minded Jew-financed dictatorship."

Smith first came to national prominence in the early thirties as a supporter of William Dudley Pelley, organizer of the Silver Shirts, who was jailed for sedition in 1942. Smith later worked with Sen. Huey Long (D-La.) and when the Louisiana "Kingfish" was assassinated, Smith delivered the funeral oration. Smith also was associated with Father Charles E. Coughlin, pre-war leader of the Christian Front.

Gerald Winrod, a native of Kansas, heads the Defenders of the Christian Faith. During the censure debate, Winrod distributed a report enttled "Senator McCarthy's Persecution." The report denounced as "crucifixion" the work of the Watkins Committee, which drew up the censure recommendations. Winrod warned that "Christians" will work to defeat the six committee members when they come up for re-election. None was up this year.

Tar Heels Down Gamecocks, 88-67

Rosenbluth Sinks 37, Grabs 25 Rebounds to Set Record

Frosh Top Atlantic Christian In Prelim, 86-55, As Quigg Tallies 25, Brennan 23

By BERNIE WEISS

Amazing Lennie Rosenbluth scored 37 points and set a new school rebounding record of 25 here last night as Carolina whipped South Carolina, 88-67, to win its second ACC contest of the year.

Rosenbluth poured 15 field goals through the mesh and dropped in seven foul tosses for his total, which fell only eight points shy of the school scoring record.

Al Lifson tallied 19 points and Jerry Vayda 18 to aid the Tar Heel cause, which was never in danger from start to finish.

The Gamecocks, playing without their star, Joe Smith, were entirely outclassed under the backboards and their shooting was obviously under par. The only big point-producer for the Birds was center Lee Collins, who had 24.

Rosenbluth's new rebounding record broke the one set by Paul Likins last year. The former mark was 23. Both Rosenbluth and Likins matched the record when Carolina beat Clemson last week.

Rosenbluth, a six-foot, five-inch soph, played the entire game last night. He shot 25 times from the floor and made 15 of them. He attempted 25 field goals, made 15.

Lifson and Vayda played well from the floor also. Much credit should be given the pair for their setting up of plays and field goal assists.

Referee Lou Bello also starred on the court. His foul-calling antics drew much laughter from the 2,500 fans.

Led All Way

The Tar Heels were never behind. They quickly jumped out to a 12-3 lead over the shorter Gamecocks and maintained a safe 10 to 12-point lead until the half. The score at intermission was 45-34. During the first half, the team made 22 of 42 field goal attempts from the floor.

At the beginning of the second half, Lifson dropped in a pair of charity tosses. Tony Radovich went in for a lay-up and then two more foul points and the Tar Heels were off once more.

They finished the game pulling away with second-stringers on the floor.

Collins Bird Star

Collins, six-foot, six-inch Gamecock center, was perhaps the only factor which kept SC in the running throughout the last 10 minutes. His play under the basket, both offensive and defensive, was the bright spot in an otherwise dull Gamecock showing. He fouled out in the last two minutes of play.

The visitors were sorely hurt by the absence of Smith, who was forced to remain in Columbia with the flu. He was the team's high scorer last year, and tallied 18 in South Carolina's opener against Georgia.

The UNC frosh quint built up a 20-point halftime lead and Coach Buck Freeman emptied the bench in the last half as his charges swept to an easy 86-55 win over Atlantic Christina College of Wilson in the preliminary.

Joe Quigg with 25 points and Pete Brennan with 23 led the Tar Babies. Johnny Gregg's 20 markers was high for the visitors.

Tonight the frosh meet the Duke University freshman team at Durham in the preliminary to the Duke-SC game. The freshman contest is scheduled for 6:15 o'clock.

Carolina Wrestlers Open Season Against Davidson

The University of North Carolina's varsity wrestling team will take on the Davidson matmen in Greensboro Saturday night in its first intercollegiate match of the season as a climax of the state's first high school wrestling clinic.

The clinic, sponsored by the High School All-Star Game committee in Greensboro, will start at 10 o'clock, with the Wildcats and Tar Heels scheduled to clash at 8 p.m.

Coach Sam Barnes' Tar Heel team is centered around four lettermen from last year's outfit, with two juniors and a pair of sophomores filling out the starters. Co-Captains Pete McGehee and Miles Gregory, 147 and 177 pounds respectively, are returnees from 1953, along with Arthur Gregory, 157, and heavyweight Karl Barkley.

Bill Gray, 123, and Bob Thornton, 130, graduated to the Varsity club from last year's freshman team, while juniors Gene Thompson, 137, and Hugh Barwick, 167, fill out the club. Thompson and Barwick have had no previous match experience.

The 1954 Tar Heel matmen have a 10-game schedule for the winter, including five matches here. After Saturday's opener with the 'Cats, the Tar Heels meet Duke at Duke on Dec. 17. After Christmas, the schedule has Washington and Lee here Jan. 8; The Citadel there, Jan. 14; N. C. State there, Jan. 21; University of Virginia here, Feb. 5 V. P. I. there, Feb. 11; Maryland here, Feb. 19; V. M. I. here, Feb. 25; and Wake Forest here, Feb. 26.

Bolstered by the return of four lettermen, Barnes is hoping to improve on last winter's record of two wins, seven losses and one tie. Last year's record included three losses to Atlantic Coast Conference teams.

Barnes has been working with the wrestlers for several weeks, but has yet to round out a full roster for the season. He expects to complete his roster before the opener.

McGOWAN DIES

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9 (AP)—Bill McGowan, the most durable umpire in major league history, died today after suffering his second heart attack in less than a week. He was 58.

Aussies Hoad, Rosewall Interested In Pro Careers

MELBOURNE, Dec. 9 (AP)—Australian tennis "twins" Lewis Hoad and Ken Rosewall said tonight they were interested in a suggestion they should play professional tennis under the banner of American promoter Jack Kramer.

Kramer, who spirited away Krank Sedgman and Ken McGregor after they had won the Davis Cup for Australia, is now after new blood. He is on his way to Australia and apears certain to seek the services of Hoad and Rosewall and Tony Trabert and Vic Seixas of the United States.

Rosewall said he would do a lot of hrad thinking about the offer from Kramer.

"I may not stay an amateur all my life but that will depend on if and how much Kraar offers."

Hoad said "I would have to consider any offer Kramer may make: it would have to be pretty solid though. But I definitely will not turn professional before the Davis Cup."

Atlantic Coast Meeting Opens Today In G-Boro

GREENSBORO, Dec. 10 (AP) The Atlantic Coast Conference opens its annual winter meeting here today. A heavy agenda topped by deliberations on the football bowl and booking office problems faces representatives of the eight schools. Their aim is to wrap it up by nightfall, but indications are that a Saturday morning session might be necessary.

Groundwork for smooth operation of the session was laid today at a series of closed group meetings.

A CAMPUS-TO-CAREER CASE HISTORY

"All the answers aren't in the book"

W. D. Garland, E.E. '52, Univ. of California, is working for the Pacific Telephone Company. We thought you'd be interested in what Don told us about his first assignment.

(Reading time: 45 seconds)

Here Don Garland makes noise distribution measurements with a Level Distribution Recorder

"My job is to help solve problems of noise and other interference on telephone lines due to power interference. Inductive co-ordination is the technical term for the work.

"First thing the Chief Engineer explained to me was that 'all the answers aren't in the book.' He was right. Most of the problems have required a combination of electrical engineering, a knowledge of costs and generous amount of ingenuity. I like it that way. It's given me an immediate opportunity to put into practice the theory I learned at school.

"In addition to this on-the-job experience, I have attended several special training courses conducted by the company. Now I'm breaking in a new man, just like when I started."

Don Garland's work is typical of many engineering assignments in the Bell Telephone Companies. There are similar opportunities for college graduates with Bell Telephone Laboratories, Western Electric and Sandia Corporation. If you'd like to get more details, see your Placement Officer. He will be glad to help you.

Army Picks Can-Canners To Win Over Enemies

By MARY GRADY BURNETTE

The lurid music of Can Can, a brooding piano player, a worried and concerned director, white silk stockings of shapely dancer's legs and pony tails on pretty girls—these are sights one might see backstage in Broadway or in some Parisan playhouse. Instead, they were seen in the basement of Graham Memorial yesterday at a rehearsal of Sound and Fury.

The rehearsals for the student production are now in full swing, with 45 students practicing from four o'clock to coed hours every afternoon and night. The final product will be presented Dec. 16 in Memorial Hall.

Yesterday something new was added to rehearsal: The U. S. Army had sent scouts to Carolina's campus to look for a girl whose picture could be used on leaflets to be used in psychological warfare. They found her amidst the whirling shirts, the dancing feet and blending voices of Sound and Fury.

Miss Sue Elliott's picture will be used on leadlets which will be dropped at Fort Benning in an experiment in psychological warfare. However, the opportunity to see Sue's picture will be an officer's privilege. The experiment is being used in officers' maneuvers. If the psychological effect comes up to the Army's expectations such leaflets may be used "officially" in the future.

Red pedal pushers livened up the scene which clouds of cigarette smoke tended to make dull. V-neck sweaters were worn by the majority of the men participosts. The sweaters were of all hues. Some such as a boight orange, stood out from the more subtleshades of brown and blue, and added to the color of the scend.

The expected statements and greetings were exchanged. "I'm so excited about this whole deal." "What's wrong? Sam lost the main record."

However, there were a few unexpected shouts, "Take center stage, Helen." Helen steps forward and then calmly announces, "If Peggy were here, I'd be standing on her head."

Over in the corner the banjo player Wyatt Dixon begins to warm up. Soon he is surrounded by the performers who in a short while will be practicing their dances to his rhythms.

Some more performers come in. One of them is met by a question from a blonde. "Did I get a phone call. No? Oh, heck, he knows I'll not be back until eleven."

She looked almost as worried as the member of the chorus who said that he had two quizzes the next day and didn't have time to bother with either.

In another corner two dancers practice a new routine. One instructed the other, "Take two steps to the right and kick, kick, kick. Then move back and move shoulders."

An inquisitive photographer looks in and then continues on his way. As he leaves Bo Bernadin, the director, comes in. Like all good directors, she gets her cast assembled, and the rehearsal gets under way amid shouts of "Start the record over and get with your partner."

Old West Dorm Votes Against Hiring Tatum

In a called meeting this week, the residents of Old West Dormitory defeated by a three vote marbin a resolution which said, in effect, that Old West go on record as favoring the employment of Jim Tatum to assume the reins next year as head football coach.

The resolution is the first recorded expression by a campus group of their feelings regarding the rumored employment of the Maryland grid-leader to succeed George Barclay, present coach.

At present, a large sign hangs on the side of Old West, proclaiming: "We Want Tatum."

At Christmas Time Remember the Lady Who Scrubbed Behind Your Ears...

We needn't remind you that Mom rates the best on Christmas. But we do venture to suggest that if she needs an ear trumpet, she'll buy it herself. What she wants from you is something that will show that you know she's still full of life, with nary a cob-web in the bellfrey.

This Christmas, pay Mom the compliment of treating her as a contemporary. Let your gift tell her that she's on her mental toes and going strong. We think one of these books might do the trick.

The Rogers and Hart Song Book, So swiftly time moves! It was only yesterday that Pop had to wait his turn to dance to some of these favorites with the swellest dame in the world - and you can bet your life she'll thank you for this beautiful collection! $7.50

Roberta Crowell's Story - Here's the autobiography of a man who was turned into a woman. Written with grace and restraint, we think it will fascinate but not shock. Believe us, Mom will not put it down! $3.00

View from Pompey's Head, by Hamilton Basso. A very fine novel, with a Southern setting. We think it will be kept among Mom's favorites $3.95

Goodbye, My Lady, by James Street. A tender and beautiful animal story, a little reminiscent of "The Yearling", and a wonderful gift. $3.00

Burl Ives Tales of America - Here is a glorious folklore round-up, collected and set down by the famous singer of folk ballads. $3.95

A King's Heritage - by King Peter II, of Yugoslavia. Exiled royalty always carries a romantic appeal, and we think Mom will delight in this frank story of the handsome man who was thrown out of a job by the power-happy politicians. $5.00

Good Morning Miss Dove, by Frances Gray Patton. The beloved North Carolina author has hit the jack pot with this novel. It's a book club choice, a best seller, and everybody is talking about it. Mom will enjoy it too. $2.75

Free Love and Heavenly Sinners, by Robert Shaplen. We think Mom will feel right rakish when she reads this lively account of Henry Ward Beecher's fall from grace! It has all the charm of a good gossip session. $3.95

The Second Treasury of Early American Homes, by Richard Pratt. If Mom enjoyed the first volume of this luxirious treasury, she'll find the second even more delightful. If she merely longed for it, here's your chance to bowl her over! $12.50

The exciting new idea behind the motoramic Chevrolet

The Bel Air 4-Door Sedan—one of 14 new Fisher Body beauties in three new series

Maybe once in a car-buying lifetime, you come across something that breaks all the old patterns and establishes new ones. This is that kind of car. This is the true story of how Chevrolet and General Motors shaped a new idea in steel.

Like most good ideas, this one is pretty simple. Chevrolet and General Motors set out to build the first low-priced car that would:

- bring you the very freshest and finest styling to be had.
- bring you the most advanced engine design and engineering features.
- bring you the kind of performance and the kind of ride that have never been available before in a low-priced car.
- bring you the highest quality of manufacture and materials.

All this in Chevrolet's price field? That did take some doing! And isn't it logical that only Chevrolet and General Motors have the people, skills, resources and facilities, to carry out this exciting new idea? Here is how this new Chevrolet changes all your ideas about cars!

Real Show-Car Styling!

Your eye tells you the Motoramic Chevrolet is no styling "patch-up" job. A rakish, low profile . . . soft swiftness from its sleek rear fenders to its wide-eyed Sweep-Sight windshield . . . a new outlook for motoring. And that outlook doesn't change when you slip inside . . . exciting fabrics and trim are harmonized with the whole car.

A Sensational Ride!

You live the new idea instantly . . . you glide . . . actually glide because spherical joints "roll with the punch" of the road in Chevrolet's new Glide-Ride front suspension. And outrigger rear springs mean new balance in turns . . . turns made so effortless by new ball-race steering.

And when you stop suddenly, new Anti-Dive braking control checks that nosing down in front . . . you get "heads up" stopping. Tubeless tires mean much greater protection against blowouts. And with new high-level ventilation there's fresher air.

Power Beyond Compare!

You also feel the new idea quickly . . . quick power like a panther's paw with the new "Turbo-Fire V8" (162 h.p.) and two new "Blue-Flame" 6's. And sparking this performance is a 12-volt electrical system giving you better ignition, faster starting, greater electrical reserve for any of the power assists you might desire. You have a transmission choice of economical Overdrive and improved, automatic Powerglide (optional at extra cost) or standard shift.

Even Air Conditioning!

And if you desire the convenience of power assists (optional at extra cost) . . . you'll find new power-steering and improved power brakes on all models. Power-controlled windows and powershift seat are available on the Bel Air and "Two-Ten" models, while air conditioning may be added on V8 models.

Won't You Try It?

Here, we can only tell you how successfully the Motoramic Chevrolet expresses the new idea behind it. But the car itself can quickly show you! Come in for a demonstration drive, won't you, first chance you get.

Faculty Passes Specific Absence Rule; Allows 3 Cuts Per Class Per Semester

System To Begin In February

By FRED POWLEDGE

A specific system of cuts will go into effect here on the first of February.

The new system, adopted by the faculty recently, will allow students three unexcused absences per course per semester. A fourth unexcused absence will result in failure.

The system, which is now University law, replaces the old one of "responsibility for attendance . . . placed in the hands of the instructors in the various courses." The former plan is outlined in the University of North Carolina Record, 1953-54 issue.

The new rule, approved by the General Council of the Faculty at its Nov. 19 meeting, says "an absence during a two day period immediately before or immediately after University holidays will be counted two absences."

The old rule declared that "a fee of $2.50 is charged the student for each absence immediately before and after a holiday. . .".

The report, signed by Faculty Members H. R. Totten, Clyde C. Carter and F. M. Duffey, further rules that students may be excused from classes". . . only by the University physician or the dean of the school or college in which the student is registered."

Chancellor Robert B. House, Dean of the General College C. P. Spruill and student government President Tom Creasy could not be reached for comment on the new regulation last night.

COMPLETE TEXT

Complete text of the rule, as passed by the General Council, follows:

Undergraduate attendance will be as follows:

Regular attendance at class is a student obligation—an obligation to himself and to the State of North Carolina. It is an obligation to know the rules governing class attendance, to know his attendance status in all classes at all times, and to transmit from the Central Office of Records to his instructors official notices of excuse from class.

A student will be reported to the dean of the school or college in which he is registered when he has been absent without excuse three times in a single class. An absence during a two-day period immediately before or immediatelv after University holidays will be counted two absences. Unexcused absences from laboratory or from class on the day of a scheduled quiz or examination will result in failure of the work missed.

When a student has three unexcused absences in a single class the dean of his school or college will notify him that he is in attendance probation for the course Four unexcused absences will result in the student's being dropped from the course by his dean with the grade of "F".

LIMITED EXCUSERS

Absences from class with cause may be excused only by the University physician or the dean of the school or college in which the student is registered. Request for excuse from absence, except absences excused by the University physician, will be made to the dean of the school or college in which the student is registered. The dean will forward authorizations for excuses to the Central Office of Records on a form provided by the latter office, and the Central Office of Records will issue to the student an official excuse for presentation to his instructors. Instructors will accept only excuses issued in this way. Excuses for absence may not be granted later than one week after the student's return to class.

Sociologists Discuss Brief Florida Submitted To Court

By ARCHER NEAL

Sesegregation in the pubic school was the topic of a panel discussion sponsored by the UNC chapter of Alpha Kappa Delta, national honorary sociology fraternity, Thursday evening. Discussion centered around the means for implemeting the Supreme Court's deceision on segregation in education.

Panel members included Dr. Guy B. Johnson, professor of anthropology and sociology, who served as chairman; Miss Shirley Strickland, Tom Gillette and Jim Beshers, all graduate students in sociology.

The Florida brief prepared for the Supreme Court was chosen as the central one for discussion because, the panel declared, it was the best study that has been made on the problem. All the Southern states were asked to prepare briefs to be submitted to the court for the hearing on how to implement the deceision against segregation in the schools. Some of them chose to ignore the reguest.

Miss Strickland presented an outline of the Florida brief. The main recommendations were:

1. That the Supreme Court adopt a policy of gradualism in applying desegregation in the public school system.

2. That the courts of first instance be Federal District courts, give specific decrees.

3. That local school authorities be given broad powers in determining administrative procedures.

The major part of the brief discusses the reasons for the proposals, including the legal authority for being able to implement the decision in the way that Florida has proposed, and specific suggesions to the court.

Miss Strickland pointed out the need for time required for Florida to acieve a policy of desegregation. Such things as scholarship administration, transportation, scholastic standard, redistricting school attendance districts and health and moral welfare problems need time for changes to be instituted, she said..

Beshers indicated the methods by which the Supreme Court decision could be implemented. He pointed out that there three ways in which this problem could be approached:

1. Certain plans for dealing with the decision are probably illegal, such as setting up a free private school system which has been proposed by some states, he said.

2. Other plans are of an insincere nature, which would involve drawn out legal procedures and red tape in administrative procedures, which would probably be thrown out by the courts. They would be used to prevent a decision of any sort, Beshers said.

3. There are sincere efforts to achieve desegregation, he said, through devising means which are thoroughly legal.

Gillette gave the results of a public opinion survey conducted for the state government by Louis Killian, professor of sociology at Florida State University. The survey was made to determine how the legal principle of the decision could be made into sociological reality. Those queried included white and Negro leaders in such vocations as county peace officers, school principals and supervisors, country and circuit judges, PTA leaders, legislators, editors and radio station managers.

Of the white leaders who responded to the poll, according to Gillette, three-fourths of them were against desegregation in principle, and 34 percent of these said they wouldn't act to implement desegregation, and might act against it. The Negro leadors who responded were overwhelmingly in favor of desegregation, he said

In the question period which followed, Beshers defined gradualism as being "the gradual achievement of the ideal of integration." Gillette pointed out that it has been going on for a long time, but Miss Strickland said that southern whites have not been faced with its coming.

She furtheur added that "the Supreme Court was excellent in making a clear-cut statement agains st segregation."

About 26 persons were present at Thursday night's panel, including several students from North Carolina Negro College in Durham.

Israeli Group Will Continue Tours Today

The four Israeli students who arrived here yesterday will continue their participation in campus activities.

During the morning they will attend classes of their choice, after which they will have luncheon with student leaders.

The group will deliver a lecture on Israeli student life in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial at 4 p. m. Tonight they will meet with folk dancers from Chapel Hill and surrounding communitties in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial to discuss and participate in dances native to the countries represented.

The four members of the group, Rachel Hadas, Yaakov Saphir, David Bar-Illan and Lehuda Amir, are all members of the Israeli Student Organization, a group of Israelian students now studying in the United States. Their tour is sponsored by the ISO in cooperation with the U. S. National Student Association, a confederation of more than 300 college and university student governments.

The general purpose of the tour is to increase student knowledge of Israeli student life and improve international understanding between Israeli and the United States. Arranged entirely by students, it features lectures, music, folk songs and dancing.

Vets' Dance

All UNC veterans, their dates and wives, are cordially being invited to attend a Christmas dance Wednesday night, at the American Legion Hut.

The dance, which is semi-formal, will be held from 8 until 11 p.m. Admission is free, and there will be two door prizes, one for men, and one for women. A combo will provide music for dancing.

Christmas trees, holly, mistletoe and festive decorations will help to carry out the holiday theme. In keeping with the season, egg nog will be served.

Entertainment will be furnished by Bill Fetzer, campus ventriloquist, and Jerry Smith, who will present a piano skit.

Two Will Talk At Stat Meet

Professor Harold Hoteling, originator of statistical methods involving canonical correlation, and Miss Aleyamma George, a foreign student from south India, will be the speakers at the Statistics Colloquium meeting on Monday.

Professor Hoteling will speak on "Canonical correlation between sets of vraieties," and Miss George will describe "Some tests of significance involving canonical correlations," at the meeting.

After she finishes her study of statistics in Chapel Hill Miss George plans to return to the University of Travencore in South India where she is to become head of the department of statistics.

Teachers Increasing

Latest figures on the number of teachers being prepared for certification by the School of Education here show an overall increase of 29 per cent for 1954-55 as compared with the preceding year.

The largest gain is in secondary school preparation with an increase of 38 per cent over last year, Dean Arnold Perrry reported recently.

With the increasing need for well-trained beginning teachers, the University has steadily expanded its program of teacher education and shown a year to year increase in number of teachers qualified, the report said.

The 1954-55 class of beginning teachers includes representatives from every section of North Carolina, 14 other states, Canada and Cuba.

The out-of-state roster numbers students from states ranging from Maine to Florida and as far west as Texas, with the neighboring states of Virginia and South Carolina contributing approximately 30 per cent of the out-of-state total.

More than one-third of the beginning teachers will be certified in the field of elementary teaching, Dean Perry's report showed. While social studies, physical education, English and Science will claim a majority of the new teachers prepared in the sceondary field, the areas of art, foreign language, mathematics and health education are also represented.

With 55 elementary teachers and 87 secondary teachers completing training by the close of the academic year, the School of Education will contribute a total of 142 beginning teachers to the public schools for 1955.

Tuesday's Test For The University

Next Tuesday is an important day for George Barclay, Carolina's football coach It's the day he finds out if he still has a job.

If we may trespass into the sports editor's realm, we suggest it is also an important and day forthe University.

Next Tuesday, the Athletic Council meets. They will decide then, it is said, whether to fire Barclay one year year short of his contract's expiration.

Nobody says George Barclay has been derelict in his duty. Nobody says he has not tried to do his job well. There is nothing morally wrong with him. He gets along well with his fellow men; he has not been late to work.

But there is a yelping jury of alumni who want to fire George Barclay because his team lost five football games. One alumnus has written all the state's sportswriters, "Hundreds of contributors to the Educational Foundation did not make contributions this year, and still more will make none next year unless something is done."

That's why next Tuesday is important not only to Coach Barclay, but to all of us. When the Aathletic Council meets, it will have a choice between its legal and moral obligations to an employee of the University and the power of alumni to whom winning football games is a consideration second to none in their support of their school.

We believe the Council and President Grav will make the right choice. If they don't, it will be a pitiful commentary on our collective values. If they fire George Barclay, the University will have degenerated farther than we thought possible.

3 (Different Shows) For Tonight

A letter in our YOU Said It column today effectively points a finger at an old shortcoming on the campus—the lack of any coordination in the presentation of speakers, concerts and special events.

For years, this chaos has gone on. For years, the YMCA, the YWCA, Graham Memorial, the Carolina Forum, the Carolina Political Union—anybody at all, in fact—have scheduled entertainment for students. It is often entertainment of a high caliber. It often conflicts.

Night before last, when students had to choose among "3 For Tonight", a speech by Chester Bowles and a basketball game, is a case in point. The three attractions robbed one another's audience, so that Mr. Bowles, for example, who brought the most intelligent and worthwhile speech of the year to the campus and should have filled Memorial Hall, ended up speaking to a sparse crowd at small Carroll Hall.

Nobody wants these conflicts, least of all the sponsoring agencies. Why not, then, establish a clearing house, through which evening events must be scheduled? Graham Memorial, as the student union, is the logical choice for coordinator, and would be willing to take on the job.

Such a scheduling agency is no longer just a nice idea to be kicked around by campus political parties and student groups. It's a necessity. It deserves immediate establishment.

No Frat Is An Island - II

Congratulations are due the ATO's for:

1. Planning to bring Louis Armstrong back to the campus next February.
2. Turning all the proceeds over to the March of Dimes.

Chalk up one more for social consciousness on Fraternity Row.

What Defeated Fleishman In Legislature?

Louis Kraar

A BELL tolled from South Building at 8:15 Thursday night, and soon legislators from both parties descended from the heights of Phi Hall all talking about the same thing.

Crusty, colorful Student Party leader Joel Fleishman had been licked. The votes of three of his own party members beat him. They voted against Fleishman.

University Party members talked of Fleishman's political death, reading more into the defeat than it merited. And loyal SP people talked of the fate of three party members who bucked the caucus.

The office for which Fleishman ran—against the UP's Bev Webb—was not a big one, speaker pro-tem of the Legislature. But it marked the first time that Fleishman lost an office for which he ran.

This reporter would not interpret Webb's victory as permanent political death for Fleishman, but it clearly indicates that the able, multiple office-holder is losing his grip.

THE STUDENT Party, in caucus last Sunday night, decided that Fleishman would be speaker pro-tem. With a 28-22 legislative majority, few doubted that the SP would have its way.

Politics—even campus politics—require loyalty to party decisions made in caucus when a legislative body is being reorganized. Ideally, each party is to settle its differences within the caucus; then the party with the majority gets its men elected.

The explanation for Anne Huffman, Sonia Bergan, and Myron Conklin voting against Fleishman is simple. They felt Webb should have the post—despite party loyalty.

With many legislators absent (only 41 of 50 were present), it was an easy thing to get Webb elected. The UP cast all its votes for Webb (18), then the three SP members came along, too. This left the SP with 20 votes—one less than Webb received.

Fleishman isn't through in campus politics. He still holds the reigns of the Forum, Di Senate, and many party members.

He isn't politically dead; he just took a sound beating. What will be interesting now is what he does about the three who voted against him.

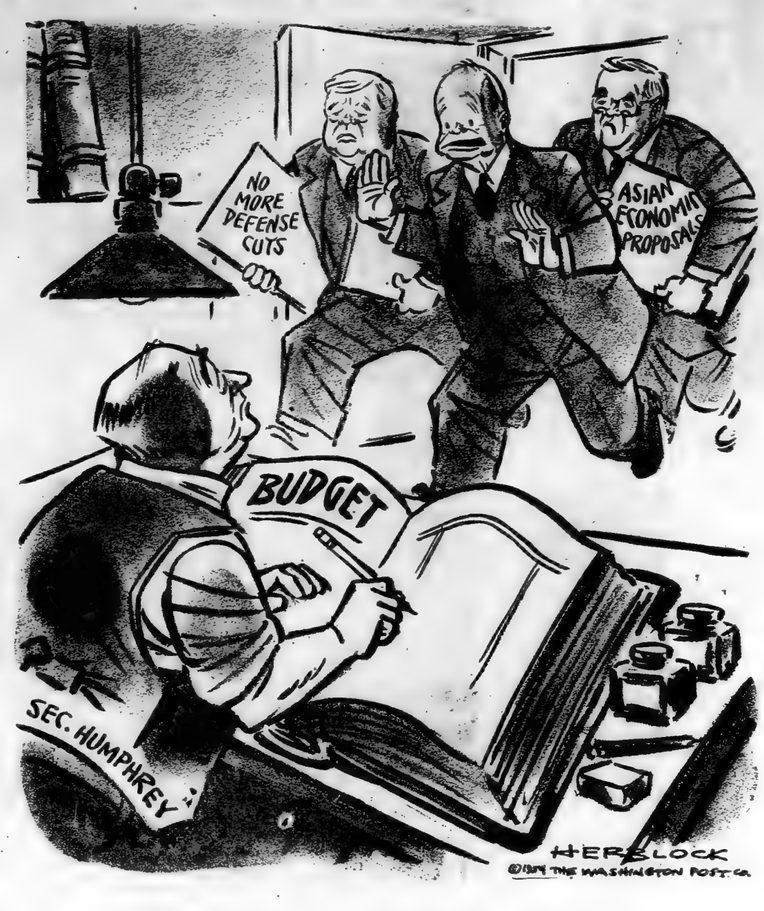
HARRY BELAFONTE, in "Three For Tonight," made the simple ballad an emotional experience.



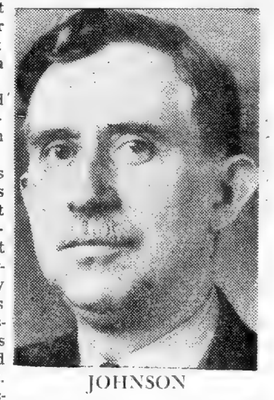
While the dancing Champions pranced gracefully and cleverly and while Walter Schumann's voices sang lush sounds, Belafonte clearly stole the Memorial Hall show.

The singer seems not only able to "put himself" into a song (as the show business jourals say), but Belafonte leads the audience into it. In a traditional ballad like "Mark Twain," he makes one feel the emotions of a Mississippi riverboat worker. And in a Latin American tune ("Matilda"), he literally brought the audience into the song—threatening listeners at one point to "take away your scholarships" for not singing.

The popular song in these days of the muted, underplayed emotions too often dwindles into a saccharin play on words. But Belafonte—relying on simplicity—makes it a thing of beauty and feeling.

Casualness seems to be the theme of the Broadway-headed musical, and it seemed to sit well with the Chapel Hill audience. Perhaps this is one of the good effects of television, this informal trend in which narrators and announcers speak more like people than circus barkers and burlesque comedians.

'Hold It, George — We've Decided To Try For A Balanced World'



Asia, California & The Senate

Gerald W. Johnson

On WAAM, Baltimore

In New Orleans, Adlai Stevenson let out a yell for a sane and consistent Far Eastern policy which is, of course, something that we need desperately. All the same, Mr. Stevenson's speech was badly timed, for it came just after the President had given a demonstration of a wise and consistent policy in relation to Red China.

JOHNSON

One thing his bitterest critics have to admit about Eisenhower is that when he is given a military problem he is prompt, decisive, always sensible and usually right. Chinese mistreatment of our aviators he regards as a military problem; the idea, he thinks, is to provoke us into a fight at a time and under circumstances chosen by our enemies. The President is determined that they shall not get away with it. When he fights it will be at a time and under circumstances chosen by us and not by the enemy.

The Chinese made a silly blunder in forgetting, or ignoring the fact that the prisoners they are mistreating were not in Korea by order of the United States alone. They were representing fifty nations, each of which is morally bound to protect them under the laws of war. The President instantly took advantage of the Chinese blunder by referring the matter to the United Nations, and especially to the sixteen countries that sent troops to Korea.

This act makes it clear that the Chinese, aiming at us, have actually insulted the United Nations. Mistreatment of our men is a slap at Turkey and Siam, who also had men in the battle line; and now that we have put it up to them they cannot afford to ignore the incident. No, the President has handled that affair very skillfully indeed.

What Mr. Stevenson had in mind, no doubt, was Formosa, where the military problem is complicated by a political problem that has roots in California as well as in mainland China. The military problem of Formosa is simplicity itself. It is either get in or get out—take control of the place, or leave it entirely. I don't know which is the correct military answer, but I have no doubt that the Join Chiefs of Staff know, and if that were all it would not take them ten minutes to decide what to do.

Consider California

But that is not all. There is California to consider. In wonderful California, where they invent new religions on Wednesdays and Fridays, new economic systems on Mondays and Thursdays, and new political parties on Tuesdays and Saturdays, any idea can sprout provided it is fantastic enough.

One idea that has taken taken root there is that Red China doesn't exist in reality, but is something dreamed up by Dean Acheson. Senator Knowland, of California, said on the floor of the Senate the other day that we are sustaining Red China, implying that if we should turn it loose it would flop.

As against that kind of thinking Eisenhower's military skill is useless and his politcal skill is not enough to cope with it. The result is we are protecting Chiang Kai Shek simply as an annoyance, but not a real threat to Red China. California will not stand for any other policy; but all foolish policies the very worst is to keep annoying an antagonist without really hurting him.

It is not certain that we could destroy the Chinese Dragon if we tried; but it is certain that we are not disposed to spend ten years and ten million men in the effort; so why continue to let Chiang Kai Shek stick pins into him from behind the protection of our fleet.

Heroes Of The Week

I am bound to admit that I underestimated the capacity of the United States Senate to defend its own good name. A week ago I though that McCarthy was going to escape unwhipped merely by stalling along until the session ended; but such pessimism didn't allow for the spirit of the members, and especially the 22 Republicans who voted for censure.

The Democrats deserve less credit; McCarthy never was their baby and his fury was going to be turned against them no matter how they voted, so they had little to lose. The 22 Republicans were the heroes of the week.

I believe that the explanation is that the ten days' delay worked against, instead of in favor of McCarthy. In those ten days Senators had time to hear from home, and what they heard was that millions of voters are sick and tired of McCarthy and all of his works. To the fanatical three percentcent of the population he was and will remain a hero, but tothe vast majority he has become a bore.

Censure carries no legal penalty. McCarthy remains a Senator with the right to keep on ranting as long as he likes. But henceforth he will be taken less and less seriously, and will probably end like old Heflin, whom they called derisively Tom-Tom. In his last days in the Senate whenever Tom-Tom rose to spend his usual two hours vituperating the Pope nobody tried to stop him, but all the other Senators ambled out into the cloak-room to enjoy a cigar and the reporters deserted the press gallery to play gin rummy until the flood of clap-trap ended. Before the coming session ends McCarthy will probably be talking to empty desks while the presiding officer reads a newspaper and the only person listening will be the unfortunate official stenographer.

But while the medicine the Senate administered was good on the whole, it contained one very sour ingredient. That was its refusal to give McCarthy the same dose for insulting a citizen that it gave him for insulting a Senator. To call a Senate committee unwitting handmaidens of Communism was worthy of chastisement, but to call an army officer with an honorable record unfit to wear the uniform seems to be all right.

How About Us?

Where does that leave you and me? If a general has no rights that a Senator is bound to respect, you can bet your last dollar that a man from Bolton street has none. I don't think that is going to set well with the American people, and the more they think about it the less they will like. It suggests that the Senate at heart shares the view of Secretary Wilson that ordinary voters are kennelfed dogs that may be kicked with impunity by Senators.

But being elected to the Senate doesn't make a man so morally superior to his fellows that he can revile them at his pleasure. We all know that in the past certain men have bought, or bullied, or swindled their way into the Senate and the Senatorial tofa doesn't change these characters into honest men. For that matter, even an honest man is capable of developing arrogance, and honesty doesn't excuse him.

Contempt of the Senate is illegal, as it should be, and may be punished under the law; but there is such a thing as contempt of the American people, and while it is not held to be a crime, it is none the less a danger to the republic that can be, and should be visited with swift political punishment at the polls. For nothing could subvert the American system faster than acceptance of the idea that being a jobholder entitles a man to privileges and immunities that ordinary citizens do not enjoy.

YOU Said It: Dr. George Suggests Parallel Reading

Editor:

Since I have become the center of so much controversy on the campus, may I be permitted a brief comment of Mr. Yoder's column of Thursday. I am quite aware of Mr. Julian Huxley's learnings. I know also that a number of other men of science express opinions similar to his. In fact they are the only opinions allowed open expression in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. It is not yet quite so bad in this country.

Neither Mr. Huxley's opinions, nor Mr. Yoder's, nor mine are of any particular significance of themselves. Only the scientific and historical facts and logic are much significance here. Obviously these can not be explored adequately in the columns of The Daily Tar Heel. I have presented some significant matter in an earlier lecture. I shall make copies of it available in the general library.

May I cite also: The African Mind in Health and Disease, World Health Organization, Monograph Series no. 17 (1953). See especially pp. 88-91. Also, Ridpath's History of the World (edition of 1936), chapter 7, and Arnold Toynbee's A Study of History in on volume,, p. 54.

Let any enquiring mind read the evidence presented in these references, distinguish between evidence and opinion, and then decide who is dealing pseudo science.

Editor:

In the past few weeks several people have knocked on my door asking me to sign petitions requesting that Negroes be kept out of our schools. I had not been in favor of the petition before, but after meeting and talking to persons who were carrying the petition, I believe now I would like to have two school systems—one for the Negro and the average white person, and other for the petitioners.

Why doesn't the University of North Carolina invest a few bucks in a Department of Coordination?

Tonight (Thursday), Chester Bowles, famer American Statesman, will appear at Carroll Hall; his speech will begin at approximately 8. "3 For Tonight," a musical drama starring Harry Bellafonte, Marge and Gower Champion is scheduled for 8:30 tonight. The University plays hosts to USC tonight in a basketball game at Woollen Gym; the fray is scheduled for 8 o'clock.

I like politics, basketball, and music, but not all at once. Why don't the various organizations in charge of scheduling athletics, entertainment, etc. get together so the students can benefit from all three attractions?

But what am I worrying about? I've got a quiz tomorrow.

Mr. Kamp & The 'Plot Against Joe'

(This is Today's Chuckle, an example of the literature of the "Constitutional Educational League", the organization of Joseph P. Kamp. This particular pamphlet, titled, "Ford Motor Company and American Bar Association Help Communist Conspiracy by Joining Plot Against McCarthyism," was received by purchasers of new Fords, Lin-Lincolns, Mercury's. — Editor.)

Because of Soviet aggression, betrayal and brutality throughout the world, and domestic disclosures of Communist propaganda, intrigue and infiltration, it is commonly believed that the American people—at least the more intelligent elements—have been so thoroughly alerted that it is now impossible for the Communists to make any real headway in the United States.

Yet, the master-minds of the Communist conspiracy have been so diabolically clever in their machinations and in the manipulations of their witting and unwitting dupes and stooges that, even at this late date, 1953, they have been able to enlist the support and cooperation of two supposedly super-intelligent, ultra-respectable and all-powerful allies—the Ford Motor Company and the American Bar Association.

These two typical American institutions have become important factors in the Communist - inspired campaign against so-called "McCarthyism"—a campaign whose purpose is to discredit and destroy any and every Congressional effort to expose or otherwise cope with the Communist plot to overthrow the United States government.

Even though either or both of these organizations may yet come to their senses before becoming too deeply involved, the mere fact that it has been publicized that (directly or indirectly) they are "investigating" Congressional investigations has already made a major psychological contribution to the success of the Communist effort.

In effect, this means that—innocently, of course—the 9,000,000 owners of Fords, Mercurys and Lincolns are giving their financial support to the Communist cause, and some 50,000 of our leading lawyers are lending their prestige to the same purpose.

What makes all this really sinister is that this whole disreputable Communist-aiding business is carefully hidden behind a cynical facade of apparent high-minded concern for the protection of the civil rights of individual Americans.

The worlds of the cafe society pianist and the progressive jazz pianists have drawn so near that labels become difficult to apply. Marion McPatland, Oscar Peterson, Ralph Sutton, George Shearing, Don Elliot and Billy Taylor are just a few of the top pianists found often in New York's polite society hangouts. Their music is similar in that it's very different from most any other kind.

Their music is easy, swinging, and sophisticated. Their talent is unquestioned, and to hear their relatively small audience tell it, they're sensations, full of imagination in a world of dullards.

Last winter, there came a new member to the high society piano element. His name is Alex Kallao, and his work now appears on a new Victor 12-inch LP. Critics have praised this young newcomer with reason. He is blind and only 21 years of age, the son of a concert pianist who raised the boy on Bach.

Like Peterson and Marion McPortland, Kallao does not prefer jazz to the classics nor the classics to jazz. His playing is progressive, not incomprehensibly so, and his touch is nimble and free, his interpretation of popular tunes, easy, with a light swing beat.

He plays with a slightly classical feeling against a two man background of bass and drums, all of which adds greatly to the modern sound. Milt Hinton, the bass man, has played with Oscar Pettiford, (while Pettiford took to cello) Brubeck and many other West Coast greats, and the same stands for drummer Don Lamond. It is on the opening number, of these two is presented.

SOMETIMES I'M HAPPY, that the well known skill High-speed rambling is perhaps the easiest description of the modern jazz piano jump renditions. Here Mr. Kallao presents his trio in its finest form. In a question-answer opening at a two-octave stretch, he quickly slides into the exciting running right hand with the lagging left, the trdaemark for many progressves. Hinton's bass work is quite smilar to that of the pianist in that his skillful, thorough runs seemingly reach the upper and the lower registers simultaneously.

ALMOST LIKE BEING IN LOVE is dressed up with some subtle improvising which doesn't wander too far from home. A steady swing beat gives the tune a carefree air of happy rhythm, bouncing the delightful melody here and there.

SPEAK LOW, an exotic tune usually subject to most any interpretation, receives fair treatment by the Kallao group. Beginning with a bongo rhythm, they soon turn SPEAK LOW into something a little more boisterous, finally returning to the bongo beat with a suggestion of mild humor.

JUNGLE RHUMBA, a long time favorite of Cavallero fans, resembles the straight concert version with a gentle touch added for contrast. The torrid Latin tune which isn't exactly the modern jazzman's idea of a standard, sounds delightfully pleasant under the fingers of Kallao.

Duke Ellington's COTTONTAIL fits the Kallao picture perfectly. Aside from the opening theme, COTTONTAIL is open to any ideas one might wish to add. Rhythm and key are its only limitations, these being subject to change. As in all the others, Mr. Kallao presents the Ellington ditty in a highly imaginative fashion. All the trills and runs, coupled with the left-hand lag, account for an amazing bit of piano work. His ability to control the tune at such high speeds makes him one of the most respected musicians of his kind.

The group goes into I NEVER KNEW with a thorough rapid beat, employing some really outstanding cymbal work by Don Lamond, and by switching keys, adding bits of foreign selections, and using a stop-start beat, the group reveals the close understanding of its members talents and feeling. The pretty ballad GONE WITH THE WIND has fast become a regular among the progressive jazzists, and Kallao gently leads his group through the number, drawing on a kind of sophisticated tenderness. The result is a beautiful rendition of a very nice tune, and though the rhythm swings slightly, creating an air of quiet relaxation.

Over The Hill

FRED BABSON

Very rarely is a varsity athlete president of his school's Phi Beta Kappa chapter. But Carolina boasts such a phenomenon in Paul Likins.

Likins, a senior, has played four years of varsity basketball, in the big-time circle, and has still found time to compile the highest scholastic average of any undergraduate in the University. As if that were not enough — he accomplished this feat in the field of Physics.

The 6'9" center hails from Elkhart, Ind. He had not originally intended to make his name via the sports route. While in high school, Likins (he was tall then, too) was spotted by the basketball coach, who persuaded him to lend his efforts to the school's cage team. Playing along with Big Paul on the Elkhart High School team was another current Carolina athlete, Dick Starner, senior end on this past season's football team.

Further testimony to Likins' high academic standing is the fact that he is presently a strong contender for a Rhodes Scholarship, possibly the toughest of all scholarships to acquire. Its reward is study in a top European university.

Today, while Coach Frank McGuire takes his cage squad up to Williamsburg, Va., for tonight's tilt with William and Mary, Likins is in Atlanta, beng interviewed by the highly discriminating Rhodes Scholarship screening board. Following the interview, Likins will catch a plane to Richmond, where he will join his teammates and continue the journey to Williamsburg with them.

Likins left for Atlanta yesterday, missing the pre-game practice.

Out of the varsity preliminary game between the UNC Frosh and Atlantic Christian College last Thursday night in Woollen Gym came one of the most amusing incidents we've seen in years. Late in the second half, as Carolina led by a comfortable margin which fluctuated between 20 and 30 points, the visiting coach sent in a substitute. It was not the first substitution the Atlantic Christian coach had made; in fact he had sent in several reserves during the course of the affray.

But there seemed to be something different about this lad. His gait was rather awkward, something of a lope. He seemed to glide along smoothly in his unusual stride, his mouth wide open as if he were completely awe-stricken by something ahead of him. Adding the finishing touch to the incongruity of his appearance on a basketball court was a head full of straight, red hair, of the Huckleberry Finn variety, except that it was perhaps a duller red.

A good-natured crowd was on hand. The home forces were safely ahead, and the crowd was searching for a little excitement. They just stepped from behind his plow and wandered onto the basketball court.

Immediately after his entry into the game, cries went up of "Atta boy, Red. Way to go Red." At first, the cries were from a particularly fun-loving few, but within a matter of minutes the whole crowd had joined in. Red, who didn't give the appearance of being especially skilled in the cage art, did not get the ball from his teammates as much as the fans thought he should. Cries went up, "Give the ball to Red." When he did get the ball, spontaneous, deafening roars filled the gym.

For the remainder of the game, the fans forgot about the score and concentrated solely on Red's welfare. In the last minute of the game, Red got the ball long enough to take two shots, both of which were accompanide by thunderous shouts of encouragement from the crowd, which by this time had gone completely wild over this very ordinary-looking young man who looked uneasy and out-of-place on the court.

When the final gun sounded, Red got a tremendous, final ovation.

Throughout the clamor and excitement of the crowd over him, he remained blank-faced and unresponsive. He seemed more puzzled than anything else over this sudden adulation. It was probably the first time in his life he had ever drawn so much attention from so many people. And it may well be the last.

But I'll bet that someday Red will be telling his children about the time he played basketball in Chapel Hill.

Frisco Fullback Perry May Set Rush Record

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 10 (AP)—San Francisco's 49ers wind up an unlucky pro football season tomorrow against Baltimore-a season which in recent games has had few bright spots except the ground gaining of fullback Joe Perry.

Thanks to injuries and a leaky pass defense, the dreams of a National Football League title blew up weeks ago.

But before they finish off against Baltimore, the 49ers want to see the big Negro fullback crack the rushing record of 1,146 yards set by Steve Van Buren of the Philadelphia Eagles in 1949.

This will take a deal of doing. Joe has 140 yards to go, and the Colts bring a stout and stubborn defense which includes five tackles each hefting 245 pounds or more.

Perry already is the first pro runner in history to rack up 1,000 yards or more in two consecutive seasons. He hit the 1,007-yard mark last Sunday against the Green Bay Packers. The 49ers whitewashed Green Bay 35-0.

The crowd of 20,000 or so expected to turn out in Kezar Stadium also will be rooting for Billy Wilson, the rangy, glue-fingered end, to in the league's pass reception title. Wilson now is tied with Pete Pikos, Philadelphia. Each has 52 receptions.

Elks Grid Tilt Set For Today

RALEIGH, Dec. 10 (AP)—Appalachian State Teachers College and Newberry appear evenly matched for their meeting in Riddick Stadium tomorrow in the third annual Elks Bowl football game.

Newberry has a 5-3-2 record. Appalachian, which defeated East Tennessee, 28-13, in the Burley Bowl at Johnson City, Tenn., on Thanksgiving Day, has an 8-2 season record.

The game is regarded as a toss-up on the basis of comparative scores of the teams against the same opponents. Newberry defeated Catawba 13-8, Elon 28-0, Guilford 13-7, tied Lenoir Rhyne 13-13, and lost to Presbyterian 20-18. Appalachian won over Catawba 27-13, Elon 20-6, Guilford 19-6, Lenoir-Rhyne 21-14, and was beaten by Presbyterian 14-7.

Kickoff time is 2 P. M. The game is sponsored by the North Carolina State Elks Assn. to raise funds for their youth activities. Officials said there has been a heavy sale of tickets.

Several hundred youngsters from orphanages in this area will be guests of the Elks at the game. They will be given tickets which were purchased by Elks members and turned back in to the Association.

Newberry will be at top strength for the game. Quarterback Danny Brabham, who missed four games during regular season play because of injuries, will see action along with fullback Stanley Bessenger, who was hampered by leg injuries much of the season.

Appalachian is led by quarterback Ned Pennell, who was voted most valuable player in the North State Conference this season. Both teams use the split-T formation.

Carolina Frosh Roll Over Duke Imps, 77-64

Quigg, Brennan Spark Victors

Frosh Win 4th Straight Handing Duke Loss No. 2

The University of North Carolina freshman cagers rolled over Duke's Blue Imps, 77-64, for their fourth straight victory last night in Duke's Indoor Stadium. The game was played as a preliminary to the Duke-University of South Carolina tilt.

Joe Quigg and Pete Brennan, Carolina's twin terrors from New York City, continued to spark the undefeated charges of Coach Buck Freeman. Quigg poured in 25 points, the same total he amassed in Thursday night's victory over Atlantic Christian College; while Brennan was only a hair away with 24 tallies, one more than his output Thursday night.

Another New Yorker, Jack Kearns, swift, stocky Tar Baby guard, sank 18 points. He was the only other Carolina man to dent the two-figure column.

The defeat was Duke's second as against one win.

Guard Bucky Allen was high man for the losers with 16 points, while Bobby Joe Harris and Paul Schmidt collected 14 apiece.

The UNC frosh take on the Wake Forest yearlings next in a tilt slated for Monday night at Woollen Gym.

Duke—Forwards — Newcombe 10, Schmidt 14, Bryson 2; Centers—Buhowsky 4. Clements 2, Cole 2. Guards—Harris 14, Allen 16.

Six Runners Try to Better Mile Record

Six indoor track milers, three frosh and three varsity, will run races in the Tin Can this afternoon at 3 o'clock for the express purpose of bettering the indoor mile record.

Those who will run against the clock are Bob Barden, Jim Beatty and Boyd Newnam of the varsity, and Ben Williams, Everett Whatley and Richard Rigsbee of the frosh.

The mile standard was set in 1935 by Harry Williamson, who was a member of the Olympic team that year. The mark stands at 4:20.

Last year as a freshman, Barden ran a 4:23 mile. Beatty, primarily a cross-country runner, is also good at the mile as he was a miler before turning to the longer distances. Beatty was undefeated in eight cross-country maches this year and set three records to boot

Undefeated Carolina Tackles William and Mary Tonight

By BERNIE WEISS

Undefeated in three games, Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Heels tonight try their hand against outside competition in Williamsburg, Va., where they tackle the William and Mary Indians.

W & M, scouted by frosh coach Buck Freeman when the team dropped a double-century mark contest to N. C. State in Raleigh last week, is regarded as one of th top teams in the Southern Conference this season and is easily potent enough to walk off with the title.

Sparkplug of the team is little Pohnny Mahoney, senior letterman who made second string on the all Southern Conference five last year. Freman calls Mahoney one o fthe best players he's ever seen.

McGuire said yesterday he wouldn't be surprised if Mahoney and Co. put on a good show and "knocked us off." He figures the Indians, of course, to be much stronger than any five the Tar Heels have faced this year.

Carolina has won all its games thus far, whipping the McCrary Eagles, Clemson and South Carolina in that order. The Tar Heels are averaging better than 88 points a game, and high-scoring forward Lennie Rosenbluth is averaging almost 30 points per game.

Rosenbluth suffered a bruised thigh Thursday night when Carolina subdued South Carolina, 88-67 but is expected to be reday to go tonight. The other starters will be Jerry Vayda (with Rosenbluth) at forwards, Al Lifson and Tony Raovich at guards, and Paul Likins at center. Likins, president of the local chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, flew to Atlanta, Ga., yesterday to be interviewed for a Rhodes Scholarship. He will meet the team in Richmond today.

After tonight, the Tar Heels' next game won't be until next Saturday eve when they play hosts to Maryland's Terps in the Woollen Gym. Then the team lays off until the annual Dixie Classic in Raleigh, Dec. 27-28-29.

Seixas' Drills Are Limited To One Daily

BRISBANE, Dec. 10 (AP)—U.S. tennis champion Vic Seixas has hit such a fine peak he was put on once-a-day practice today but Tony Trabert's failure to find his old touch dampened the enthusiasm of the American Davis Cup camp.

Meanwhile, the sparkling play of 23-year old Stefan Stockenberg featured the workouts of the bustling Swedes who hope to upset the favored Americans in the interzone finals here next week.

Bill Talbert, non-playing U. S. captain, said he ordered Seixas to lay off the morning phase of the team's twice-a-day training periods in order "to keep him hungry."

"Vic is the kind of player who needs to keep anxious in order to play his best tennis," Talbert said.

"I like to see him like a diner who has his plate pulled away before he has had enough. I want to keep him hungry."

Seixas, who has been playing brilliant tennis thoughout his present visit to Australia as contrasted to last year's dismal slump, beat Autralian pro Dinny Pails in a practice session yesterday and today breezed through two sets with Hamilton Richardson.

Deafmute Maria Degata Decisions Billy Peacock

MELBOURNE, Dec. 10 (AP)—Italian Maria Dagata, a rugged little deafmute, gained an easy decision over Billy Peacock of Philadelphia in a 12-round bantamweight fight at Melbourne Stadium tonight.

Dagata, 119 pounds, completely outfought and outpointed Peacock, 117¾ pounds.

At the very most, Peacock won two rounds-the 9th and 11th. Dagata's terrific in-fighting won him the others by a big margin.

Swimmers Meet Duke In Season's 2nd Meet

After a successful opening meet in which three records were bettered, the University of North Carolina varsity swimming team takes on the Duke tankers at the Duke Indoor Pool Wednesday, Dec. 15 in its second meet of the season.

Coach Ralph Casey's swimmers topped the Bainbridge Naval Training Center's team 45-39 this week with two Atlantic Coast Conference marks and one school mark falling during the competition.

Phil Drake broke the UNC mark of 2:40.8 in the 200-yard breaststroke with a 2:38.8 performance, while Charlie Krepp cracked the ACC 200-yard backstroke record with 2:14.4. Krepp's mark does not go into the ACC records, however, as the match was not an inter-conference one. The Tar Heel medley relay team of Krepp, Drake, and Larry Shannon bettered the 2:58.8 conference mark with 2:54.9 in the event.

Coach Casey's charges should give N. C. State's championship Wolfpack a run for the ACC title this year, as nine lettermen are returning to the club, along with a host of outstanding swimmers from last year's freshman team. State grabbed 11 out of 13 conference individual championships last winter, and compiled a 6-0 record. The Tar Heels were second in the loop with a 4-2 mark.

The Tar Heels have scheduled seven dual meets this season, and will compete in the ACC meets as well. Carolina will be host to the ACC meet March 10-12.

The schedule: Dec. 15, Duke, away; Jan. 7, South Carolina here; Jan. 8, Virginia away; Jan. 18, N. C. State away; Jan. 31, Georgia away; Feb. 3, Michigan here; Feb. 26, N. C. State here; and March 10-12, ACC meet here.

Feds Crack Car Ring

FLORENCE, S. C., Dec. 10 (AP) One of the largest interstate car theft rings in the East was believed broken up by the FBI following conviction here today in U. S. District Court of two Baltimore auto dealers, on two counts of interstate car theft and one of conspiracy.

The jury deliberated only 23 minutes before returning a guilty verdict against Bennie Hart and Nicholas Raymond Janney, both of whom have long criminal records.

Judge Ashton H. Williams postponed sentence until next Monday on motion of defense counsel.

Janney was brought here from Atlanta Federal Penitentiary where he is already serving a 3½-year sentence on a previous court of car theft to which he pleaded guilty.

The convictions climaxed a full years' work by FBI agents from Darlington and Florence to Baltimore, after they had ben tipped off to the operation when Janney tried to sell a stolen car at an uato auction in Darlington Dec. 10, 1953.

Author Doris Betts Is Named In December's Mademoiselle

Mrs. Doris Waugh Betts, winner of the 1953 Putnam Prize for her book, "The Gentle Insurrection," and book reviewer for The Chapel Hill News-Leader, is among several young writers featured in the December issue of Mademoiselle Magazine.

Along with five other young writers, Mrs. Betts, who was a candidate for the recently awarded Mayflower SocietyCup, appeared in an article titled "Story Sellers."

The writers were asked whether beginning authors should employ an agent or try to sell their own stories. Mrs. Betts is quoted as being in favor of an agent, and adds, "Send your agent several stories. One is inadequate."

Mrs. Betts' book, "The Gentle Insurrection," is a collection of 12 short stories which has received wide acclaim. The shory from which the book takes its name received the $2,000 award in the Putnam-University of North Carolina Prize Contest last fall. A second story, "Mr. Shawn and Father Scott," won $500 in Mademoiselle's 1953 College Fiction Contest.

A former editor of Coraddi, the Woman's College literary magazine, in which two of the stories were first published, Mrs. Betts has also worked as a newspaper woman in Statesville. Her husband, Lowry Betts, is a law student here.

Religious Jobs For College Women To Be Discussed Soon

The wekend of Feb. 11-13 is the date which has been set for a Conference on Religious Vocations for College Women to be held at Union Theological Seminary in New York City.

According to Miss Elsie Bush, assistant to the Dean of Women Students at the Seminary, the purpose of the conference is two-fold; first, "to bring the challenge of church vocations to outstanding college women who have not yet decided where to invest their lives," and second, "to emphasize the varied possibilities available in these vocations for women already committed to some work in a church field."

Further information on the conference can be obtained by contacting Joel Savell at the Wesley Foundation of the University Methodist Church.

During last year's conference the areas of discussion included women in the ministry, missions, relgous education, college teaching, student work and sacred music.

Foreigners Visiting

"For many foreign students it it quite an experience to visit an American family and share their home life. It is also true that many American communities enjoy having these students in a home-away-from-home," explained Furuhata.

The Foreign Student Deputation Committee of the YMCA and YWCA World Relatedness Commission have worked on preparation for the project in conjunction with the sponsoring groups in High Point.

The members of the Deputation Committee besides Furuhata are as follows: Miss Purabi Bose, India; Jogn Chu, China; F. C. Chen China; Y. T. Hong, Formosa; D. Zoologists Set Meet Here

The fifty-first annual meeting of the American Society of Zoologists will be held here form Dec. 28 through Dec. 30.

Dr. D. P. Costello, chairman of the department of zoology here, in charge of local arrangements, said the program will consist of a number of individual papers and demonstrations. The subject matter will cover the entire field of zoology, he said.

According to the announcement by the Society secretary, Rudolf T. Kempton, the meeting marks the first time in 19 years that the Society has not met jointly with either the American Association for the Advancement of Science or the American Institute of Biological Sciences.

The highlight of the three day program will be an address by Dr. Walter Wilson, professor of zoology at Brown University, and president of the Society, who will speak at a dinner session.

Advertising Media Discussed

Advertising media was the subject of a talk delivered by Wesley H. Wallace, assistant director of the Communication Center here, to members of Alpha Kappa Psi, national professional fraternity in business administration, last Thursday night.

The advantages and disadvantages of using radio and television as advertising media and the comparison of radio and television with other types of media were discussed in the speaker's 30 minute talk. A question and answer period followed.

Before World War II, Wallace was an announcer at WPTF in Raleigh. During the war, he served in the Phillipines as head of Armed Forces Radio.

—New Cut Rule Initiated—

No student may receive credit for any course unless he has attended at least 75 percent of the meetings of the class, except by permission of the administrative board of the school or college concerned. A student who has not met this minimum attendance requirement may not take the final examination in the course without the consent of the instructor concerned and the approval of the dean of the school or college in which he is registered.

EXEMPTIONS

A student who is on the honor roll is exempt from regulations governing class attendance except those pertaining to absence from laboratory or quizzes and examinations and to minimum of 75 percent attendance in all courses.

The faculty is responsible for enforcement of attendance regulations. In order to discharge this responsibility properly, members of the faculty will:

a.) explain the attendance regulations during the first week of every class;

b.) keep an accurate daily record of attendance;

c.) report promptly to the dean of the school or college in which the student is registered the name of any student on attendance probation who is absent without excuse; d.) accept only excuses issued by the Central Office of Records.

The grade of a student who quits a course without the permission of the dean of his school or college is recorded officially as "F". The grade of a student who drops or is dropped for other than disciplinary reasons from a course in which he is failing at that time is recorded as an "F", unless in the judgment of the dean, his failure was caused by circumstances beyond his control.

The dean of the school or college in which the student is registered will determine whether a student may remain in residence after having been dropped from or having quit one or more courses.

Petition Now Being Signed To Retain Coach Barclay

Decision Due Tuesday; Old West Dorm Answers Horner

By NEIL BASS

A petition favoring keeping Coach George Barclay on the Carolina bench another year was said to have "nearly 300 signatures" yesterday.

The document, at present located in Town and Campus men's wear store downtown, was the latest chapter in the story of Coach Barclay. The story will end Tuesday when the Carolina Athletic Council meets, allegedly to decide whether or not to retain the varsity coach for the last year of his three-year stretch here.

The petition bears the signatures of a number of Barclay's gridders, including Roland Perdue, Will Frye, Larry Parker and Norman Lane.

The whole thing started on Dec. 6, when Sports Editor Morris McLemore of The Miami Daily News quoted "an insider on the situation" as saying:

"This looks like it—(Jim) Tatum is coming (to Chapel Hill to replace George Barclay)."

Last Wednesday night, Old West Dormitory met and defeated by three votes a resolution which declared "that Old West Dormitory go on record as favoring the employment of Jim Tatum to provide the University with a definite asset a winning football team."

The first expression of feelings by a campus group was introduced at an Old West Dormitory meeting Wednesday night at which time the dorm residents killed by three votes a resolution which declared "that Old West Dormitory go on record as favoring the employment of Jim Tatum to provide the University with a definite asset, a winning football team."

Then, a blast leveled by Jack Horner, sports editor of The Durham Morning Herald, at Old West for what Horner called an expression by "unappreciative" students. Horner further assailed the conduct of the group by saying that "President Gray should issue a statement that would throw cold water on groups like Old West."

In a letter to Horner, Roy Moose and Raymond Taylor, advisor and president of Old West, respectively, answered the charges and retaliated by asserting that "Old West cannot condone your blatent attack through misrepresented facts directed toward this institution."

The communique to Horner expressed further that "this letter is not concerned with whether Mr. Barclay or Mr. Tatum should be our coach, but rather with the rights of students to voice an opinion regarding their own athletic program."

Moose and Taylor said "a student at Carolina is a free individual and the administration is too enlightened to throw cold water on group like Old West Dorm thereby suppressing the opportunities for thought and expression."

In Law School Mock Trial:

Columnist Freed

After only 15 minutes deliberation, the jury declared Daily Tar Heel Associate Editor and columnist Louis Kraar "not guilty" of stabbing Student Party legislator David Reid.

Thus ended the annual Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity's annual mock trial Friday night—after five hours of testimony.

Reid, who charged Kraar with "injuring" him in a Y-Court hassle on Nov. 3, appeared in court wearing a thick bandage over his "wound."

The defense contended that Reid was injured by a nail—not Kraar.

The political columnist pleaded self-defense to Reid's charge of "assault with a deadly weapon with intent to do bodily harm."

Connie McMahon, over whom the Y-Court fight was said to have been, appeared on the witness stand wearing a somber, black dress and looking misty-eyed during the testimony.

Superior Court Judge J. A. Rousseau of North Wilkesboro presided.

Economist Publishes Volume On 'Constructive Liberalism'

A study of the American people in action in their group capacity, as shown through the pre-1860 economic liberalism in Georgia, has been completed by Dr. Milton S. Heath, professor and chairman of the department of economics in the School of Business Administration and research professor in Social Science here.

Dr. Heath compiled Constructive Liberalism: The Role of the State in Economic Development In Georgia to 1860, as the last study in a series of four sponsored by the Committee on Research in Economic History of the Social Science Council.

In his work, the author deals with the two traditional concepts of economic liberalism: "pure laissez faire, which views the role of the state as passive and minimal," and the other that "sees in public action a positive force essential to the full and successful development of private freedom of action."

The book covers such topics as land policy, human resources, commerce and industry, money and banking, internal improvements, railroads, the rise of the corporation, regulation, taxation and public debts.

Dr. Heath deals with economic liberalism in theory and practice prior to 1860 in Georgia as a leading example of the thought and policy among the Southern states.

Baptist Student Banquet

The Baptist Student Union will hold its annual Christmas banquet in the basement of the church tonight at 6:45

Dr. Robert W. Burns, staff member of the embryology department of the Carnegie Institute of Washington, will discuss the animals in 207 Venable Hall at 8 p.m. tomorrow. Dr. Burns will speak under the sponsorship of the North Carolina Chapter of the Society of Sigma Xi, national scientific fraternity.

Society President A. T. Brauer of the department of mathematics will preside.

Dr. Burns was born in Hillsboro, W. Va., in 1896, and received his A.B. from Bridgewater College in Virginia and his Ph.D. in zoology at the University of Cincinnati. He went to the University of Rochester as an assistant and later became an associate professor of anatomy.

In 1940 he joined the embryology department of the Carnegie Institution of Washington in Baltimore.

Dr. Burns' research interest deals with the differentiation of sex in animal fetuses. He has published many papers on the results obtained by using various techniques to study the growth and control of sex, particularly in the opossum.

History Of 'Three For Tonight'

3 Men Got Together & Mapped Out Show

By JACK MARKHAM

Three men sat together for several months and talked about a new show, a show unlike any Broadway had seen for many years.

Paul Gregory, producer; Robert Wells, lyricist, and Gower Champion, dancer-choreographer, were gathering together all the ideas for dances, songs and drama that they had stored up through the years of their varied and individual careers. They combined them to create the show which was seen by students, faculty members and people last Thursday and Friday nights.

Paul Grgory had in mind producing an all Negro show starring Harry Belafonte as well as the Champions' show. But he decided to contrast in one show the dramatic and electric Belafonte with the charm and vivacity of the nation's top dance team, Marge and Gower Champion, using the Voices of Walter Schumann in place of an orchestra. This striking combination was presented as "Three For Tonight."

Marge and Gower Champion

became a team in 1948 and were married shortly after. As a team they devised their routines for a night club act, an act which

Carolina's Employees Successful

Placement Service Report Gives UNC High Percentage

By DELL HOYLE
UNC News Bureau

The majority of University of North Carolina graduates are quite successful in finding employment in their preferred fields and at very satisfactory starting salaries, according to a Placement Service report here.

Director Joe M. Galloway, submitting his office's annual report to Dean Fred H. Weaver of the division of student affairs, reported also an increase in the number of North Carolina graduates who are remaining in the Tar Heel state to work.

During the past year 78 percent of the North Carolina residents accepting jobs through the Service remained in this state, he said, compared with 72 percent in 1952-53.

Out of the 639 students on the Service's active list in 1953-54, 65 percent took jobs and 16 percent entered military service.

Galloway, explaining that students list three fields of preference when registering, reported that 51 percent found jobs directly in or closely related to their first preference. Second choices were accepted by 16 percent and third by six percent.

VETERANS

"We have found this year, as before, that employers are willing to consider and often hire non-veterans where feasible," Galloway said. "Though the majority of the 1954 graduates now employed are veterans or have 4-F classification, it is interesting to note that 36 non-veterans have taken jobs."

Salary scales continued a slightly upward trend ,which had been evident for the past two years, the director said. "Highest salaries are those for Ph.D chemists, which averaged $512 a month," Galloway said, commenting that none of this group took jobs in North Carolina.

Registrants with master's degrees reported good financal rewards, on the average, with $341 for those with Business Administration training, and $327 for those in liberal arts.

Bachelor degree holders found good scales, especially those in Business Administration areas of sales and accounting.

"The A. B.'s in Liberal Arts have not fared quite as well salary-wise as the Business Administration majors, mainly because most of the girls are in the A. B. group. But some very fine positions in the business world fell to Liberal Arts men this year," Galloway said.

SCOPE

The Placement Service report included its activities in temporary employment interviews, arranged for undergraduate students and others desiring summer work.

Out of the total of 639 registered ersons, 334 were in the bachelor degrees category, 96 held advanced degrees, and 209 were alumni, who have maintained active registration. The total included 525 men and 114 women.

Director Galloway reported 221 campus visits made by representatives of business, industry and government to interview students during the year. In addition, 485 job opportunities were reported by mail or telephone, he said.

Individual student interviews scheduled on the campus numbered 2,252 an increase of almost 100 over the previous year.

"Group meetings were arranged whenever possible so that persons not available for immediate employment could hear discussions of employment requirements and types of openings with individual companies," Director Galloway said.

Aww, Honey Chile...

CHARLOTTE —(AP)— A YWCA group singing Christmas carols here noticed something slightly off.

A little investigation disclosed that one girl, from even deeper in the South, was adding a word to the opening line of the carol.

She sang: "O lil' ol' town of Bethlehem . . ."

How Unkind Is The Cut?

The faculty announcement that only three class cuts per semester will be allowed next semester sounds like a cue for some white knight to come charging into the arena to do battle for student rights. We'll be watching with interest for the appearance of the plumed champion, but we won't be able to support him.

For as long as we can remember, the number of unexcused absences has been left up to individual instructors. At least one professor in the Business School is notorious for allowing no class cuts at all. It is common knowledge that certain other courses may be missed at will without penalty. The new rule standardizes absences and, we think, in a reasonable way.

We may expect campus politicians to don indignant armor and play student savior when the next elections roll around, but the faculty mind is made up on a matter that is within their control; so political Launcelots may as well keep their swords sheathed.

Slowly, it seems, but surely, we are edging back to the idea that scholarship is more important in a University than weekend travelling, extra-curriculars or sleeping late in the morning. The new rule will squeeze us vets as class-cutters, but probably to our eventual advantage.

'This Is The Way The World Ends, Not With A Bang. . .' (Bang!)

O, for the esoteric, violent life of an Ivy Leaguer!

Our Yankee neighbors, always proud of their vigor as compared with the mild, easy-going ways of us Southerners, have proved their point again. For this week, at Columbia University in the city of New York, one student socked another in the nose, knocked him down and broke his elbow. And why? Because, while seated side by side in a restaurant, the victim had been quoting lines from T. S. Eliot's "The Hollow Men" which were considered "derogatory" by the assailant.

Poetry, it seems, doth not have charms to sooth the savage undergraduate at Columbia. It is frightful to consider what might happened to the victim if he had been quoting from James Joyce's "Ulysses" or from "From Here To Eternity."

Cracks In The Elephant's Hide

Senator Wayne Morse has predicted the Republican Party is on the "road to oblivion." He may not be far wrong.

Yesterday's rumblings, the withdrawal of support for McCarthy by General Van Fleet and the slap on the wrist administered McCarthy by the Wisconsin Republican Party, and the reiteration by Senator Knowland of his own rebellious stand against the President, can only be interpreted as signposts along the road Mr. Morse mentioned.

Life magazine's editorial writer, usually hesitant to point out cracks in the GOP elephant's hide, has said it well in a very un-Lifelike editorial:

"It was a disquiting paradox that while the Senate as a whole was living up to its responsibility, the Republican faction split squarely down the middle in a shocking display of party irresponsibility. It made a sorry contrast to the monolithic unity displayed by the Democratic side, where not a man deserted the caucus decision to condemn McCarthy. . . .

"Most disconcerting of all was the lack of leadership from the man offcially charged with it. At a time when Senator Knowland was demanding an investigation of Eisenhower's foreign policy, an Democrat, George of Georgia, was defending it. . . ."

And themost important, most self-evident sentence of all:

"Eisenhower must not let the wreckers of his party intimidate him from planning policies big enough to fit the global problems of our age."

Reflections On Saturday, Cuts And Futility

Louis Kraar

TODAY IS the day this page is supposed to take on a literary outlook. But after a Saturday afternoon walk about the deserted campus, I'm wondering what's the use.

The student populace, apparently recovering from the shock of the new cut rules, just wasn't to be found. The restaurants hardly had soiled a menu. The library occupants—a small, bored-looking bunch—could have filled the front row in Kenan Stadium, with room left over for dates. And even the television-equipped dorms lacked the glow of 20inch screens flashing ancient Western movies or infant-minded comedians.

Perhaps, everyone isn't intellectually, gastronomically, and videoly satisfied. Maybe they're all in Carrboro seeking gasoline for their autos at cut-rate prices. Or perhaps the student body decided a walk in the woods was the only way to get away from the world of just three class cuts. Perhaps it could be that they're taken to a town to the West of the Hill for liquid reinforcements.

Nothing is more dreary or more empty than most Saturday classes. The students (myself included) amble in like sleepwalkers sleep, and wak up with th ringing of the Bell Tower.

BUT THE men of the faculty have decided that all this will go out lige a dead civilization when next semester and a new cut rule comes.

Cut more than three classes, the teachers have declared, and you have failed.

It may be that we are about to begin a new era of campus life; I doubt it though. If students want to come to class (and most do), they will do so. If they don't they'll cut.

As for failing after three cuts it's always seemed to me that cutting is a failure anyway of an alarm clock, a professor, or a sleepy student.

She Seemed 'Born To Lose'

By Barbara Willard

Born To Lose is an original short-short story written especially for The Daily Tar Heel by staffer Barbara Willard, a welcome newcomer to the literary page.)

Now I've known people that weren't exactly of the cherry tree variety before, but take this character, Bill—he can out-lie "My Bonie," with the ocean thrown in.

I didn't even want to go to the office dance. I sez to myself, I sez, "Bim," I sez, "don't do it." I sez, "That fugitive from a glue factory that sits next to you at work won't give you a minute's peace even if you escape dating him. But would I listen to the me with a halo—no, I listen to the me with a straight jacket.

Bill, this good friend of mine, if we could use the term so loosely, comes up to me last week and says, "Bim, if you have no one special to go to the office dance with, I'd apreciate it if you'd date a friend of mine."

Now, don't ge me wrong, I don't get these blind dates too well, but I had seen "Man-of-War" eyeing me like I was his long, lost "Sea Biscuit." Thinking anything would be better than tripping the "anything-but-light and most fantastic" with the office do-do, I offered my services to my "friend." I even promised to provide my own seeing-eye dog. That's gratitude for you; he knifes men in the back in return.

Well, by the time the dance day rolled around, I wanted to roll on to my rewards. The only two eligible bachelors in the moldy office where I work had both asked to be my escort for the grand affair. Of course, under normal circumstances, they couldn't even have passed for Grade A hog-callers at the County Fair. Still, they were better than anything else the office offered up. There I was, close-pressing spinsterhood and taking on a newcomer when I already had contact in the ranks.

Back to my little next-desk neighbor! To add insult to injury, after all the pains and pangs I'd suffered to be able to turn him down without gagging on a lie, the schmoe didn't even ask me

Now, that proves beyond the slightest shade of suspicion that I have claim to membership in the B.T.L. Club of America—Born to Lose, no less.

After work I approached this character who was playing the go-between role for me and the unknown hero. "Bill," I said, "about this date, is he someone I know?"

"No," he stammered, " I don't think you really know him." That rat! I should have caught that word really, but how was I to know that better things than him crawl out of my woodwork?

Trying to be optimistic, I trudged home to the apartment telling myself that maybe, after all, it wouldn't be so bad. He might have just two heads instead of three. As if I'd be so lucky! Once, I even got so weak as to think I'd prefer "Ape Man" back at the office to this unknown quantity. I hurriedly downed some Bromo-Seltzer and prevented the accident almost occasioned by the mere thought.

A cold shower (great heating system where I live), a run (my last pair), and a wilted corsage later (the cleaning woman—HA—sat it on the radiator when it was delivered), I was waiting in all my glory to walk the last mile. A glance in the mirror told me that I looked like "Madame Butterfly" trying to get out of a collector's net.

I hadn't long to wait though, for the little man was quite punctual. I went to the door like a high school girl on her first date—with a truant officer.

If I had been preparing myself for six months months in advance, I still would not have been ready for what I saw. There "it" was, trying to look like someone had stolen his best saddle. It was too much!

They told me after I had subsided that they had to stick another spoon (along with the silver one I've retained since birth) in my mouth to keep me from chewing my tongue off.

I made a mental note that Bill would wish I had when I finished with him. I excused myself myself long enough to stick a wrench in my bag to settle the score with him, and we were off. I was "off" when I went to work at that office.

"Horseface" remarked how lovely I looked, and I, in as civil a tone as I could muster in my weakened condition, thanked him for the flowers and told him how sorry I was that I had got only a boutonniere for him, instead of one of those horseshoe wreaths they give the winner.

Being the polite soul he is, he asked about my parents who he doesn't know from a zebra. I told him that Dad was to be paroled next week and Mama still ran the same old joint. Nothing! Just that blissful little smile that only those completely void of even a slight excuse for brains have.

I asked about his parents, how the blue grass was, and if any of his brothers or sisters were running in the Derby this year. Still nothing! You just can't squelch some people!

With a cloud of dust, more speed than Silver, and a "hi-ho-why-was-I-born", we arrived at our destination.

Naturally, "Idiot Child" thought I was just bashful because he and Bill had to pry me out of the car. Demure little thing I am!

Seeing no way out, I assumed my best martyred expression and walked in like someone straight off the rack.

There was a slight disturbance when everyone saw us. A girl friend of mine had to be given artificial respiration; the punch went down the wrong way.

The very epitome was yet to come—the dance. Now, I'm no female Arthur Murray myself, but I do know enough to know that one's feet should be applied to the floor. He evidently mistook mine for stepping stones. And not until the third bone in my newly-malformed feet cracked was I allowed to be dragged off the track. By this time, I had lost all regard for the human race; so I sent in as perfect a substitute as I could find much against his chivalrous protests. She was his female counter-part. On the side, I asked if I could borrow her broom to get home on.

You said it! After I found Bill and gouged his eyes out, cut off his tongue and plucked his ears off of his now bald head, I left him to enjoy the dance and went home. The only reason I had even gone to the dance was to get my Christmas bonus, but not even money was worth this.

I never went back to the office. I now have a great job with a promising future, a job that suits all my needs and desires. I am assistant matron at the Pine Log Home for Aged Women and Female Waifs.

No longer do I interest myself in people like Bill, who gets my vote for this year's award from the Liar's Club, and "the other one" who couldn't get an award if he were the only contender.

My main goal right now is to establish a 4-F chapter here for my little waifs, who shall never escape into the open, where there are men, if I can prvent it. In that world where there are creeping, crawling things like I have seen, this would be a very valuable, worthwhile organization. I only hope someday to become adviser to a 4-F Club—Future Fungus Fighters Federation. After all, we must never forget—there's fungus amung us.

Whitehead In The Parlor

Professors can be fun. If that is an assertions you don't find acceptable— on the basis either of observation or intuition—we have a suggestion. Read the remarkable conversations titled Dialogues of Alfred North Whitehead. (Atlantic Monthly Press-Little Brown & Company. 396 pp. $5.00.)

★

These are the conversations of one of our century's wisest men recorded by a fellow faculty member at Harvard, Lucien Price, who visited Whitehead and his wife at Cambridge for countless evenings stretching over 10 years. Price found the couple relaxed and willing to talk about anything from women to religion, two subjects not foreign to college bull sessions anywhere.

All this creative thinking is tempered by a kindness and subtle humor that makes the book a joy. (When asked, "Which is more important, facts or ideas?" Whitehead answered, "Ideas about facts." Or again, "One is almost ashamed to say that the day is hot, or the soup is cold, is seems such a trifle to endure. The world is so upset that even our most platitudinous concepts, things that would once have been accepted by anyone, require to be looked at a second time.")

WHITEHEAD

"Once learning solidifies, all is over with it," Whitehead remarks to Price. And that is the recurring theme of these Dialogues. Origination, curiosity, investigation—these are the important things. Ideas won't keep. It is the "rigid dogma" that destroys truth, and that is what we must guard against.

Those familiar with Whitehead's pholosophical discourses, Science and the Modern World, Modes of Thought and the rest, will find in his conversations disarming side remarks and stories of the sort that can fit into conversation, but not into learned treatises. One obtains a deeper insight into the philosopher and finds himself wishing Lucien Price might have known and talked with Rousseau and Bacon and Mill.

But the greatest thing of all about this book is its range. Here, Whitehead is on record on a thousand new subjects—John Dewey, Russian novels, Dwight Eienhower, Socrates, the Old Testament, to name a few.

Professors can be fun, even while they're being profound. It is a yardstick, some say, of a man's greatness: How human he is. If that is so, Lucien Price has recorded the observations of a very great man.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

THE HORSE was looking glum, indeed, when I saw him outside Graham Memorial. Why, this was where I had last left him!

"I'm heartbroken, Roger me boy" The Horse mourned. "They are putting a coin-machine in here at Graham Memorial. Soon it will be a thin-dim for a slurp of Java."

Well now and then The Horse might have a dime with him. Cheer up!

It isn't that," The Horse said sadly. "It is what has caused the benign management here, under the aegis of Smiling Jimmy Wallace, to put the coin-machine in. What is the use of inveighing about Honor Systems in the classroom when Ten Dollars worth of students a week take Jimmy Wallace over? You know the deal Jimmy has had set up here for sandwiches and java?

I did, and I hailed it! Serve yourself your coffee; take a sandwich—price marked clearly on each of the latter—and pay at the counter at the far end. Hey! The Horse didn't mean — ! Noooo!

"Yup," The Horse confirmed. "I do. Some of nice looking, decent, friendly kids here at our university have been picking Graham Memorial's pocket to the tune of, Ten Dollars weekly, on sandwiches and coffee."

Now, now! Wasn't this sort of strong talk?

"Oh, you perhaps think the kids take a cup or five, when they don't have the money to pay, and forget about it? Let's allow for a few of those. But the extremely nice lady-clerk who is responsible for collecting the modest fees for the service tells me a different story. In fact, she queried one very nice looking lad when he was going to pay for the sandwiches she had seen him filch from the refrigerator . . . for something over a period ten days . . . and the lad said, 'Lady, I'm broke. I can't pay, and I am hungry.' "

How distressing! But — maybe the lad was hungry, and broke?

"We have such things as student-aid," The Horse shrugged. "Unfortunately, it cannot stretch to cover all needs. Sacrifices must be made for worthwhile purposes — like, getting an Education — but the wrong person is sacrificing when the honest students are called on to carry the freight for the dishonest ones. And this is the case, for they have to raise the price of the sandwiches, now, in the hope that those who pay will carry those who pick pockets. For that just what is going on. Don's yak-yak to me of Campus Honor when things like this happen!"

Charge it off to human nature. Maybe some of the kids just can't resist making a score, as professional confidence-men put it when they get a sucker and take him. Maybe others thought they were paying too much for Student Activities, and thought this a good way to get even on the charges. Maybe still others—always excepting kleptomaniacs, who are suffering a disease—maybe still others thought it was smart, or didn't like Jim Wallace's ideas, and figured this was a cute way to give him a workout. Still, I was sorry The Horse had brought this up, had given it publicity.

"So am I." The Horse said darkly. "This may serve as a tip-off to more ambitious pilferers, and the whole daggone coffee-machine and refrigerator will end up missing! But one way and another, let stop worrying about intellectual honesty until we can learn to kep our paws off the little things in life. Let's also, whoever owes back money, square themselves and mail in anonymous contributions to The Dishonored Coffee System, or some such. It is too late to stop the machine that has been ordered. But it is never too early to square a guilty conscience and get back on the track of common decency. Poor Richard, in his Almanack, said, 'Little strokes fell great oaks.' Just so can little acts of dishonesty negate a proud university's honor system. There is no honor among thieves, and there is no thievery among honorable men. We can't be both."

The Horse felt strongly on this?

"Durn right," The Horse growled. "It costs me a nickel more a day, this does, to drink coffee!"

"Wump!" said Mr. Wump, the low-vision Frog.

Revolutionary War

Walter Spearman

The American Revolution was lively enough when it occurred, but James Street made it twice as lively in his last book, "The Revolutionary War," which was completed just before he died in September (The Dial Press, New York. 180 pp. $3). The tune to which the British army marched when it surrendered at Yorktown was "The World Turned Upside Down," and Street used this as his theme in presenting what he termed "a de-mythed account of how the thirteen colonies turned a world upside down."

In de-mything some of the "mythtory" that has crept into our history, Street may anger an occasional D.A.R. and cause some scholarly historians to groan, but he has certainly succeeded in telling the story of the Revolution in the language of the man in the stret. This history is so far from dead that even call it the Revolution in be-hop. He makes the joint jump.

"A bewildered, hungry David had tripped a stumbling Goliath to launch man's first big-league republic since ancient Rome"—that was the Revolution, says Street. "Thirteen sons aimed to go in business for themselves. The old man objected and they kicked his shins."

How did we manage to win?

"We were loaded with talent while Britain was suffering one of the few brain famines that has ever plagued her political or military life." We won "with the help of guts, gumption and gunpowder—and the kingdom of France."

Street dips into economic, social, military and cultural aspects of the war but mostly he talks about people. Jimmy Street always liked people—even when he looked back at the American Revolution. He can pin them down with a telling phrase. Sam Adams "nudged and nagged us into revolt." George Washington "wetnursed the republic rather than siring it." Paul Revere was "the errand boy of our Revolution, even though he was later convicted of cowardice". George Washington's mother was "a cantankerous soul who was a pain in the neck to her son." Tom Paine was "the kind of a fellow who elbows in to get a cinder out of a friend's eye and then steps on the friend's sore corn." Alexander Hamilton was a "Nobody who became Somebody." Benjamin Franklin was "our first citizen of the world." Thomas Jefferson was "the patron saint of our democracy"—and he was also Jimmy Street's hero.

Was Christopher Marlowe Shakespeare?

Ed Yoder

Was Christopher Marlowe Shakespeare?

After over a century and a half of the Baconian Wars, Stratfordists are getting ready to go to war against Calvin Hoffman who has suspected since 1936 that Christopher Marlowe might have written Shakespeare's plays.

In case you're interested in the whole story, it's told in the December Esquire magazine by Robert L. Heilbroner.

Mr. Hoffman's theory suspends from one slender thread: if he can ever prove that Marlowe's body was not carried dead of knife wounds from a tavern in Deptford, England, on a May day in 1593, he has a real case. If not, history can only remain, like the other theories of the "anti-Stratfordists" possible but not probable.

This is the story he tells. Christopher Marlowe, the towering genius of pre-Shakespeare Elizabethan playwrights, had gotten his feet on hot ashes on several counts along about the yeaf 1593. He had been accused of atheism, unitarianism (which was almost a greater heresy), defending sexual aberration, and of consorting with unsavory characters.

He was soon knifed to death under mysterious circumstances in the tavern at Deptford, supposedly by one Ingram Frazier. Frazier was a reputed "gentleman sharper and spy." Marlowe's body is supposed to have been lowered on June 1, 1593, into an unmarked grave. Mr. Hoffman's curiosity about the whole thing, and most of his evidence, hinges on the belief that Marlowe actually escaped the fracas. He finds it significant that most of the information about Shakespeare's life post-dates 1593.

Since he began to suspect that the Marlowe theory has some validity, Mr. Hoffman has been on a hop, skip, and jump tour of libraries. He has crossed the Atlantic to beg permission to open graves. He has written letters to authorities on Shakespeare, attempting to give some notice to his idea.

Here, in general, is some of Mr. Hoffman's evidence:

Shakespeare was born of commoners and there is no record of his education. Marlowe, likewise of lowly parentage, became a brilliant scholar at Cambridge.

Shakespeare, who demonstrated in several plays a good reading knowledge of Latin poets like Ovid, was said by Ben Jonson to have known "small Latin and less Greek." Marlowe issued formal translations of Ovid.

The mysterious story told in the sonnets could not, according to biographical information, have been based on Shakespeare's life. It could have been based on Marlowe's experiences — his lost lost identity, his exile, his ignominious banishment from fame.

The cadence and word length of Marlowe's style tallies almost perfectly with Shakespeare's. (Bacon, the Earl of Oxford, and the others who have been suggested as possible "Shakespeares," have widely differing styles.)

Many of the allusions of Shakespeare and Marlowe are similar. For example, Mr. Hoffman quotes the famous lines from The Tragical History of Dr. Faustus: "Is this the face that launched a thousand ships?" (Marlowe talking.) Then, from Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida: ". . . she is a pearl, whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships."

Mr. Hoffman's theories, revealed quite clearly by the Esquire article, are, on the surface (and to one who is a layman in both Marlowe and Shakespeare) cogent. I think, however, that Shakespeare's supposed deficiencies in Latin and Greek, in general education, can be overlooked. Assume that the weight of evidence shows that Shakespeare himself is most likely to have written his plays. A man who could have gained such skill in the use of English, a skill which baffles and abashes anyone who reads it sensitively, would hardly have let the lack of formal education keep him down. (Hardin Craig, by the way, believes that Shakespeare might have taught school and learned his Latin there. He says Shakespeare revealed a technical knowledge of schoolmasters and schoolbooks in plays like Love's Labour Lost.

There is no proof that Shakespeare never went to school. The great London Fire of 1666 burned many of the records concerning writers; perhaps a Cambridge transcript went up in smoke!

Old Abe Lincoln didn't get up to Princeton or Harvard but he wrote some good English prose.

Mr. Hoffman deserves a hearing. But Shakespeare, like Homer, was an incredicle phenomenon in the annals of writing. Man's unbelief at phenomena raises a psychological problem that must be taken into account. It is a natural tendency — one which no doubt has given force to the Bacon controversy—and all the others to try to reduce Shakespeare's literary infinitude to "human" size.

Indoor Track Season Opens January 15

By RAY LINKER

Seventy varsity and freshmar tracksters are working out daily in the Tin Can in preparation for the indoor track season which opens on January 15 with a dual meet against North Carolina State here.

With many of last year's outstanding freshmen moving up to occupy varsity positions, Coach Dale Ranson is expecting to develop a team better than last year's squad that finished second in the conference.

Ranson, with the help of his able assistant Coach Joe Hilton, has been running his charges through workouts since the first of the month, and considerable development has been seen, although much more work is necessary before a winning team can be turned out.

Newton Missed

There are strong men in almost every event, with only the 440 yard dash and the relay appearing to be weak spots. Jeff Newton, last year's 6.2 60-yard dash man, is gone, but two boys who were outstanding on last season's frosh team—Jim Bynum and Larry McMullan—have moved up to help Jay Zimmerman hold down that event.

Boyd Newman, conference outdoor halfmile champ, will be back to run that event indoors, as well as doing the mile, which will be led by sophomore Jim Beatty. Bobby Barden, the teams best distance runner for many years, will set the pace for Carolina in the two-mile. Glenn Nanney will give the Tar Heels depth in this longest distance run.

Strong In Hurdles

The hurdles events look exceptionally good. Claude Rhule and Richard Waters consistently won both the high and lows as frosh last season. Waters best time on the 120-yard highs last spring was 15.2, while Rhule did 15.4. Rhle set the pace in the 220-yard lows with a fast 24.8, and Waters turned in a 25.0 outdoors. Waters won the freshman individual award in the Indoor Games last February.

Waters cleared 13 feet on two occasions last year, and is expected to be the Tar Heels pole vaulter this year. Charlie Yarborough senior who has cleared 12'6" several times in the past, will follow Waters in the pole, but Yarborough will probably excell in the broad jump. In one meet last spring he bettered Duke's famed Joel Shankle. Jim McGhee was the outstanding broad jumper for the frosh in the spring and is expected to give the team depth in this event.

Morris Back

The field events find Roger Morris leading the shot and discus as he has done in the past. He will get much assistance from Larry Maslow, Johnny Jones, John Bilich, and Don Klochak in the shot and Roland Perdue, Ralph Beaver, and Stan Donnahoe in the discus.

Senior Steve Marcinko, who was second in the conference javelin last year to UNC's Harry Brown, will lead that event this year. He will get competition from Bob Wilson, who will also be used in both hurdle events, and the high jump.

Ken Bryant, outstanding frosh, moves up to take over top duties on the high jump. Don Wright and Don Mitchell with hold down the 440, while Bill Booth will help Newman handle the 880.

Ranson will run dual meets with State and Duke as well as enter the Conference division of the Indoor Games, and will perhaps enter some individuals in certain invitational meets.

UNC Led At Half, 39-34; Lifson, Likins Foul Out

Radovich Tallies 14; Indians Spread Scoring As 5 Men Hit 2-Column Figures

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Dec. 11 (AP)—Three foul conversions in the last 15 seconds by guard John Pires, his only points of the game, gave William and Mary's Indians a pulsating 79-76 victory here tonight over previously unbeaten North Carolina.

Only a few seconds previous forward Johnny Mahoney had connected on a tap-in under the basket to bring the Indians from behind and stake them to a 76-75 lead.

Pires' first crucial foul shot followed Mahoney's goal and brought the count to 77-75. Forward Jerry Vayda, however, collected a charity toss for the Tar Heels to narrow the gap to 77-76. Pires, fouled while trying to freeze the ball, then sank two more fouls to ice the contest and give William and Mary its third victory against two setbacks.

North Carolina, led by the sensational sophomore Len Rosenbluth who pitched in 39 points, held a 39-34 lead at intermission but the Indians came surging back to tie things up at 41-all midway the last half on a goal by Mahoney and thereafter it was nip-and-tuck.

MILE TRY FAILS

In an attempt to break the standing mile record for the Tin Can, several varsity and freshmen runners toured the distance yesterday.

The record of 4:20 set by Harry Williamson in 1935 still stands as no one was able to come under the mark. Sophomore Jimmy Beatty came the closest of anyone to breaking the record as he won the event in 4:21.6, which is exactly a second better than he did in establishing a freshman outdoor record last year.

Bob Barden, veteran of many seasons, kept pace with Beatty until the last quarter when he dropped back to finish in 4:27. Everett

WF, Frosh Play Here Tomorrow

The undefeated University of North Carolina freshman cagers meet the Wake Forest yearlings at 8 p. m. tomorrow night in Woollen Gym. Coach Buck Freeman's charges have rolled over four straight opponents so far this year, registering victories over an Atlantic Fleet service team, High Point Junior College, Atlantic Christian College, and Duke, in that order.

Expected to spark the Tar Babies are Joe Quigg, Pete Brennan and Jack eKarns. Quigg, 6'7" center is averaging more than 25 points per game; Brennan, 6'5" forward has an average slightly under 25 points; and Kearns has been good for better than 15 tallies per tilt.

Matmen Lose

Carolina's Wrestling team dropped their first meet of the season to Davidson last night in Greensboro, by the score of 28-10.

Co-Captains Miles Gregory and Pete McGhee took the only two matches the inexperienced Tar Heel team was able to win. Gregory pinned David Fagg of Davidson in the 177 lb. class, in 5:10 McGhee pinned Larry Wright in 5:55.

Several matches were close, as the experience of the Davidson squad proved to be the decidin, factor in the meet.

The Summary:

130 lbs. — Bill Warlick, Davidson, pinned Bob Thornton in 4:0

137 lbs. — Ritezell Snyder, Davidson, pinned Gene Thompson in 5:07.

147 lbs. — Pete McBhee, Carolina, pinned Larry Wright in 5:5

157 lbs. — John Buxton, Davidson, decisioned Art Gregory, 3-2.

177 lbs. — Miles Gregory, Carolina, pinned David Fagg in 5:10.

Heavyweight division — Dave Burns, Davidson, pinned Carl Barkley in 4:56.

Grants-In-Aid Major Item At ACC Session

GREENSBORO, Dec. 11 (AP)—The Atlantic Coast Conference moved briskly through its fourth session in two days this morning to conclude its annual winter meeting and as the delegates headed for home the main conversational topic was the grants-in-aid issue which missed passage by one vote last night.

The consensus was that when the conference meets here next May the proposal will pass.

Clemson, Duke and Virginia all had a part in bringing the matter to a head last night, but the main force behind the surprising vote was Frank Howard, Clemson's head football coach and athletic director.

Howard started the hour - long discussion by delivering a forceful plea for "protection" against the "evils" of recruiting. Said Howard "All I want is protection on enough boys to be able to put on a contest. I don't want to pull other schools down to my level; I want to build up to theirs.

"I have lost 10 boys each August for the last 10 years, boys who had told me they wanted to come to Clemson and then were induced to go elsewhere. I believe a boy knows early where he wants to go to college, but a coach or alumnus offering more changes his mind.

"I don't think any coach does a better selling job than I do-but I think some do a better buying job. This proposal is something we should have done 10 years ago.

When it was suggested that a committee might look into the matter, Howard remained firm, replying, "Gentlemen, I want action here-tonight."

In final shape the conference voted on a proposal that would prevent a boy from participating in athletics at any of the remaining ACC schools after committing himself to one member and being duly accepted and approved by the proper authorities as eligible to receive financial aid.

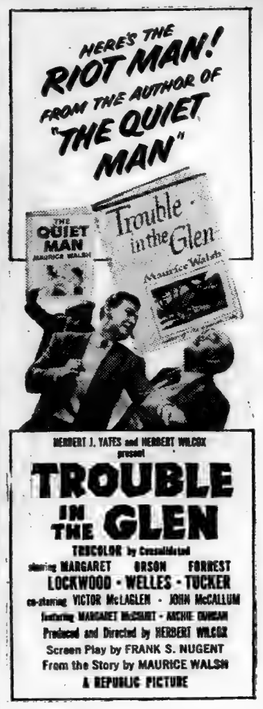
'Arsenic' Murderess Once Was Starred With Ben Turpin

EVA McKENSIE is shown above in scenes from (directly above) a one-reel comedy of the days of silent movies, and (above, left) "Arsenic and Old Lace," a present-day attraction of the Carolina Play-Marion Fitz-Simmons. The two act parts of the tow sweet old ladies production, which will run Tuesday through Saturday at the Playmakers Theatre. In the picture at the left, she (left) is shown with Marion Fitz-Simmons. The two act parts of the two sweet old ladies whose favorite charity consists in serving elderberry wine spiked with arsenic to lonely elderly gentlemen as a cure for loneliness. In the picture above, Mrs. McKensie (at left) is shown with Comedian Ben Turpin in the one-reeler. Now living in Chapel Hill, Mrs. McKensie has had many starring and feature roles in movies and Broadway productions during her long career.

Doing a vaudeville act with her brother when she was four years old began the theatrical career of Mrs. Eva McKensie who will make her first appearance with the Carolina Playmakers Tuesday night when she plays the role of the endearing murderess, Abby Brewster, in the Playmakers production of "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Mrs. McKensie was born Eva Heazlitt in Cecil, Ohio. She married fellow actor, Bob McKensie, to 1913.

Troupers in every sense of the word, they did vaudeville acts and dramatic sketches until they left the stage for the silent films. The two appeared in many westerns until Mrs. McKensie was singled out for her abilities in comedy. She was then cast in several one reel comedies with Ben Turpin and also acted in several productions with Charlie Chaplin.



Mrs. McKensie's roles in these slapstick productions made her the target of oozy meringue pies and subjected her to being pushed backwards into swimming pools and tripped into giant mud puddles.

While the McKensies were acting in Hollywood a daughter, Fay, was born to them. Carrying on the family tradition of beginning a carrer in the theater at an early age, Fay appeared in a movie with Gloria Swanson at the age of ten weeks.

With the advent of sound and the consequent upheaval in motion pictures, the McKensies returned to the stage to form a stock company of their own and toured California for several years. In the early thirties they returned to Hollywood, where both were featured again in films. Mrs. McKensie appeared in pictures with Irene Dunn, Henry Fonda, Margaret Sullivan and Charles Boyer.

was built around their main talent—dancing. They successfully blended the various styles of the art at which they are so proficient—tap, ballet, ballroom and modern. The Champions toured the night club circuits for two years and then were offered co-star billing with Imogene Coca, Sid Caesar and Mary McCarty on TV's "Your Show of Shows."

Then a call came from Hollywood and a chance for a part in MGM's "Showboat." This led to a series of film contracts including such exciting motion pictures as "Lovely To Look At" and "Everything I Have Is Yours."

Two new films, "Jupiter's Darling," which stars the captivating Champions with Esther Williams and Howard Keel, and "Three For The Show," co-staring Betty Grable, will be released early in 1955. During the shooting of "Jupiter's Darling" the Champions lived in a tent on the back lot of MGM Studios for 10 weeks so they could get used to dancing on 10 rainbow-hued elephants featured in the film.

In an interview before their show Friday night, Mr. and Mrs. Champion proved to be as engaging a couple as they are on stage. They seemed to project an aura of happiness and charm which makes them even more vivacious in private life—and better looking.

Writes Letter To Governor:

Author Of Gasoline Study Wants State Investigation

ANOTHER GRAPH BY LEGISLATOR BRYAN
. . Chapel Hill leads the pack in gasoline prices

By LOUIS KRAAR

Legislator Norwood Bryan has requested Governor Hodges to have the State Attorney General look into Chapel Hill gas prices.

"It seems to me that the prices (of gas) in Chapel Hill are artificially high," the student wrote the governor.

Bryan pointed out, on the basis of a personally-conducted survey, that regular gasoline prices here are 3.4 cents higher than in Raleigh.

He also cited price differences in Durham and Carrboro. Both places sold gas cheaper than in Chapel Hill.

Bryan declared that the matter of high prices "has been largely explained away, evidently in consultation with representatives from the gasoline interests and the Chamber of Commerce.

He said that the explanation was not adequate. "The convenient fiction of having the gas arrive by a mythical ship which docks at Wilmington and transported by mychical trucks to us here, is belied by the fact that the gasoline comes out of a pipeline near Greensboro and is trucked from that point," Bryan wrote Hodges.

He continued, "That such fictions are indulged in and are seemingly condoned by the public and its officials, to the detriment of the public at large . . . is most regrettable."

In a statement to The Daily Tar Heel, the member of the legislative Gasoline Committee pointed to three facts which should determine the price of gasoline:

1. Volume
2. Overhead
3. Transportation costs

"As far as volume is concerned, Chapel Hill has a very high car per capita count," Bryan said. "And with only eight gasoline stations, I hardly think that the volume of business is either restricted or lacking."

Turning to overhead, he cited that Raleigh and Durham (where the prices for regular and premium are lower than here) "also have high overhead."

Transportation costs, Bryan said, "are the same for Chapel Hill dealers as Raleigh and Durham dealers."

Bryan declared that "the gasoline interest in Chapel Hill are using the students and charging what the market will bear.

"In polite terms, this might be called 'price gouging,'" Bryan said.

Dorm President Plans Expression Resolution

"I am planning to introduce in the Interdormitory Council meeting on Wednesday night a resolution in which the IDC would remind dormitories that they have the right to express themselves on anything they want to and to urge them to use this right," said Raymond M. Taylor, president of Old West, yesterday.

This move will be made as an indirect result of an Associated Press story of Dec. 6 from Miami, Fla., which said, "The Miami Daily News said today it learned from an 'excellent source' that Jim Tatum will transfer from Maryland to North Carolina to succeed George Barclay as head football coach at his alma mater."

After the story appeared in The Daily Tar Heel, a resolution was brought up and defeated in a meeting of Old West which declared "that Old West Dormitory go on record as favoring the employment of Jim Tatum to provide the University with a definite asset, a winning football team."

On Dec. 10, the sports editor of The Durham Morning Herald, Jack Horner, attacked the Old West resolution, saying, " . . . somebody at Chapel Hill ought to put . . . the unappreciative students in their place unless they plan to make a coaching change." He also said, "A statement from President Gordon Gray, or Chancellor Bob House, could throw cold water on groups like Old

Stacy Reports Poor Heating In Dorm Rooms

Steps are being taken to improve heating conditions on the third floor of Stacy, accordng to The Rebel Yell, Stacy's newspaper. A petition, drawn up by Jack Wilson, Allan Hills and Bill Houser, was signed by all third floor residents and submitted to assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jeffries who turned it over to those authorities who are concerned with heating facilities, said the paper.

"Recordng thermometers placed in several of the rooms showed a 62 degree average with the windows closed. Normal room temperature is 70 degrees," said The Rebel Yell.

Smith Entertains Faculty

The girls of Smith Dormitory will entertain faculty members and their families at a Christmas party tomorrow from 5 to 6 in the dorm's parlors.

Invitations have been issued to approximately 100 faculty members and administration, and the invitees have been urged to attend the party, along with their children.

Decorations and refreshments will follow the holiday theme, with special favors on hand for the children.

Scales Is Scheduled For Court

GREENSBORO—Junius Irving Scales, charged with having held membership in an organization advocating the violent overthrow of the government, is scheduled to make his second appearance in U.S. Middle District Court here today.

The 34-year old Greensboro native, alleged Communist party underground leader for three years, first appeared in the court last Tuesday when he made motions for a reduction in bail and a one-week delay of his arraignment in order to secure council. Both motions were granted by Judge Johnson J. Hayes of Wilkesboro.

Bond for Scales was cut from $100,000, which was set at the time of his arrest in November to $35,000. At last reports, however, Scales had not posted the reduced bond and was being held in Forsyth County jail at Winston-Salem.

His appearance today will come during the second week of the current term of federal court for the trial of criminal cases. This week's session began yesterday morning.

Dean Weaver Speaks To SP On Government

DEAN FRED WEAVER
. . . just what is wrong?

Says Government Dedicated To Learning Through Doing

By ARCHER NEAL

Dean Fred Weaver told Student Party members last night that "the chief attribute of student government is the fact that it is student government. It is a laboratory dedicated to the proposition that students learn through doing."

Weaver spoke on the topic "What's Wrong With Student Government" at the request of the Student Party at its regular weekly meeting in Graham Memorial last night. He pointed out that he had no axe to grind, nor did he represent the South Building point of view. He added that "the dean's word is not gospel, nor can he take the student's point of view," but insofar as he was able he would try to do so.

Dean Weaver pointed out the things that he considered right about student government before making recommendations as to how it could be improved. He said that "student government has preserved the freedoms of our institution." He also noted that it is praiseworthy because of the opportunities of self-education it provides, and pointed out expressions of student government such as the Carolina Forum, student parties, and the IDC as being excellent examples.

Weaver said that "students are responsible for the soundness of what they do," and that student freedom does not exonorate responsibilities.

In pointing out specific wrongs of student government, Weaver said that there was not a sufficiently deep comprehension of the honor system. We need to understand it, then perpetuate it. There

"There is jurisdictional confusion with respect to maintenance of the honor system. There is no expedition of important matters." As a consequence, initiative is paralyzed, and without initiative, there is no student government." Weaver recommended that the student council be made an executiev council of the whole school, with comprehensive authority. It should not just try cases, but undertake constructive activities.

Weaver said that we don't give enough attention to foreign students. There is a lot that could be done that hasn't been so far, and pointed out the efforts that schools such as Columbia University are making in foreign student activities. "Interest in foreign student keeps us from becoming provincial", he added.

"We can find places to put our shoulders to the wheel," Weaver said in summing up. "We have good assets, especially our custom of student freedom."

The wallet was found undisturbed. It contained 28 $100 bills and two $1 bills.

Schoolboy's Dream

OCCOQUAN, Va. (AP)—Any shortage of teachers in Prince William County High School this week can be blamed on a skunk, or skunks.

One or more of them made a weekend visit at a rooming house where five teachers live. As a result, at least four of them expected to remain home yesterday.

"We've sent our clothes to the cleaners," Richard McMaster, one of the four xplained. He said the fifth, Joseph Patterson, may venture out—if high school pupils are agreeable.

McMaster said the skunk—or skunks—got under the house and left his olfactory calling cards. In some quarters one could get a whiff of suspicion that high school pupils might have had something to do with the odoriferous affair.

Air Group Initiates Eighteen

Eighteen new members were recently initiated into the Jesse J. Moorhead Chapter of the Arnold Air Society.

The new initiates are: John Barab, Atlantic City, N. J.; Pete Daniels, Wanchese; Albert Long, Durham; Steven Opitz, Ford, N. J.; Lou McDaniel, Gibsonville.

The purpose of the Society is to create a better understanding of the Air Force on the part of civilians, to further the mission of the Air Force ROTC, and to bring together persons of like interests in the Air Force. The criterion by which members are chosen is scholarship and leadership.

The local chapter, which was named in honor of Colonel Jesse J. Moorehead, former professor of air science here, now has 32 members.

She was escorted by Joe Bafford, is from Lexington, N. C. The dance, the lagest function of Delta Sig, was held at the Durham Naval Armory.

Mae Marshbanks, Joel Carter, Violet Galvin and Jan Saxon will sing solo parts in "O Thou That Tellest Good Tidings," "The People That Walked in Darkness," "There Were Shpherds. . ." and "Rejoice Greatly," O Daughter of Zion."

University's WUNC To Live-Broadcast Concert

WUNC will broadcast at eight o'clock tonight, directly from Hill Hall, the annual Christmas Concert sponsored by the Department of Music.

Newspaper Cuts Output

The Rebel Yell, Stacy dormitory's weekly newspaper, will become a bi-weekly publication, according to an announcement made in last week's issue.

"It was decided by unanimous vote (of the Rebel Yell staff) that since participation in publishing the dorm paper has been grossly lacking, and the burden has been borne by a very few; and since dorm activity has subsided, resulting in a minimum of news pertaining to the dorm, the Rebel Yell would hereafter be published bi-weekly," said the announcement.

Stay At Home, Young Man

Director Joe M. Galloway of the Placement Service brings the good news of the week in his office's annual report to Dean Weaver—that 78 percent of the North Carolina residents who accepted jobs through the service this year stayed in North Carolina, compared with 72 percent last year.

The old story in Tar Heel education has been that North Carolinians accept public schooling from the state—grammar school, high school and the more than 50 percent the state pays toward University education—and then, particularly if he is a good student with outstanding prospects, goes North to become a contributing citizen of New York or New Jersey or Ohio.

North Carolinians, Mr. Galloway's figures lead us to hope, are finding the pastures as green, the industrial chimneys as high, the opportunities for professional service as attractive right in their own back yard. If that is so, we may look forward to the stepped up progress this changing attitude will bring us and the South.

Committees & Profs

We heard last week of a professor who had to spend every afternoon for an entire week in the stifling atmosphere of "committee" meetings.

This is only one of many demands that seem more and more to distract teachers from their professional roles. But to the Daily Tar Heel it is the least excusable.

We have no quarrels with committees which are absolutely vital to the teaching job. But something's amiss when a professor must consume afternoon after afternoon, day after day, in committee meetings. His enthusiasm, preparation, and thought for classes obviously must undergo abraison.

A situation which requires teachers to devote excessive time to planning and administration implies that the properly administrative agencies are faltering.

Saddling professors with functions that are not rightly theirs will result in considerable damage to classroom effectiveness—for both the student and teacher. It can't be tolerated.

The University's Achievements

(From the Greensboro Daily News)

In the past several years, the University has expanded materially through its intensive building program. But that is only the framework for the main task—education and public service. President Gray points out that the consolidated University has "no less than 160 major educational units—departments, schools, divisions and colleges."

The tremendous amount of public service overlapping strictly formal education and reaching out to satisfy the vital needs of the people may be indicated by naming a few agencies engaged in such work, such as the Institute of Government, the Extension Service, the Morehead Planetarium, the research in social science which holds a mirror to a region, the Institute of Statistics, the all-University Communication Center, the symphonic dramas stemming from Chapel Hill, the Minerals Research Laboratory, the foundations for business administration, textiles and the press, and a host of other units disseminating the learning that leads to a better way of living.

North Carolinians are fortunate in the quality of their institutions of higher learning, both state supported and private, and they are right to take a keen and critical interest in them.

But the race for education is never finished, and the scandalously low standing of North Carolina in the number of college students in proportion to the population is plenary proof that we must increase the quantity of higher education very considerably without sacrificing what makes it worthwhile, excellence.

Frosh Sees Santa Claus In 3-D Now

THE PARENTS of a Woman's College freshman wrote and asked what their daughter would like for Christmas.

The WC student, obviously taken by the whirl of the college world, sent her folks this list: "A copy of Roberts Rules of Order, a French-English Dictionary, and a cocktail dress."

THE VOICE, introduced by the operator's crisp: "One moment for long distance," was that of an old friend.

"Have you got any reptiles down there on campus?" the friend, who is a University alumnus, asked over the phone.

I told him I didn't know any personally but was sure the zoology people had some of the slimy creatures.

"Do you think you can get some good-looking coeds to model some pictures?" he asked next.

I told him that Carolina still had some attractive coeds, and that some would surely pose for him.

My friend told me he'd arrive from Fort Bragg that night and that he would tell me about his mission then, leaving me to wonder all day about the reptiles and coeds.

That night, the friend, whom I learned is in psychological warfare, explained that he needed photos of snakes and girls for leaflets the Army plans to use in a coming maneuver.

"The snake leaflet is what we call a white leaflet. It establishes creditability," he explained.

"After that we drop these with the pretty girls to lower their morale and take their minds off the maneuver."

So apparently next month, when the Army begins its maneuver, Zoology Department snakes will gain confidence and Carolina coeds will lower morale—a paradox if I ever heard one.

RENEWING THE quest for a good movie, I plunked down another 50 cents at the Carolina Theater ticket booth, bought another of those outrageously high six cent candy bars, and proceeded to view "Carmen Jones."

The technicolor tragedy that filled the wide screen this time warmed my heart. "Carmen Jones" made Bizet bounce with feeling and naturalness.

Only regret about the whole production (aside from the expensive candy bar) was that Harry Belafonte's voice wasn't suited for operatic singing, so one was dubbed in for him. His straight acting was good enough, and so was the movie.

BEING ON trial for assault isn't always fun, even when it's just a mock one. After the Phi Alpha Delta mock trial, I've decided that Y Court fights (even fake ones) just aren't the way to settle differences.

The mock fight, as you remember, was over a girl—Connie McMahon, who despite mock testimony, really isn't a "Bell Tower baby," as one witness said. Matter of fact, her testimony gave the trial one of its many humorous moments.

Miss McMahon at one point was under intense cross-examination from the lawyers for the defense. All at once, the attorney questioning her threw a loaded question.

"I object," shouted Bob Byrd, chief counsel for the prosecution.

"Objection sustained," Judge J. A. Rosseau declared.

And Miss McMahon in typical female fashion asked, "Can't I answer just a little of it?"

Ike Ignored Advice On McCarthy

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON—President Eisenhower got a lot of private advice as to how to handle Joe McCarthy's bitter attack, but he, himself, made up his own mind what to do.

Those who saw Eisenhower in his press conference after McCarthy's barrage never would have guessed how sore Ike was when McCarthy blistered him. White House friends say the President was purple with anger, though he did not say a word.

Stassen reminded Ike that Dean Acheson, when secretary of State had first ignored McCarthy's charges of communism in the State Department, figuring that the American public would not be taken in by them. But McCarthy's Hitlerian tactic of repeating the same charge over and over again eventually sank home and a few people realize today that McCarthy has not named one Communist in the State Department.

Stassen reminded Eisenhower that his administration should not make the same mistake.

The President listened carefully, but decided otherwise.

The President also listened carefully when Republican Chairman Leonard Hall discussed the "McCarthy Crisis" before Ike met with newsmen last week. Hall, who has leaned toward McCarthy in times past, felt Joe should be appeased and not be permitted to bolt the Administration.

But Eisenhower did not appear overly impressed with Chairman Hall's discussion. He listened, but did not even tell Len what he intended to do.

South American Prosperity

Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey, returning from the Internationla American Conference in Rio de Janeiro, told friends:

"If I were only 2 years old, I would go to Brazil by the next boat, working my way if necessary, and I guarantee you by the time I was 40, I would be a millionaire."

Humphrey's brief trip to South America convinced him that Latin America is on the threshold of phenomenal industrial development. He suggests that, if American businessmen are wise, they will put more investment dollars south of the border than in other parts of the world.

The economic progress of some of these nations, Humphrey says privately, will amaze the world in the next 20 years.

Hatemongers

The House Committee on Un-American Activities will soon publish a sensational, but tragic, report on "Neo-Fascist and hate groups," a subject the Committee has ignored for almost 10 years. Communism, during that period, offered better headlines.

The report singles out the National Renaissance Party for possible prosecution under the Smith Act; and also, blasts the hate peddling paper "Common Sense." This is the first official suggestion for applying the anti-subversion statute to a fascist group during the Act's 15-year history.

The Committee found that "the program and propaganda of the National Renaissance Party is virtually borrowed wholesale from the Fascist and Nazi dictators."

STASSEN

. . . urged Ike to name names.

The little Hitler in charge is a "young fanatic," James H. Madole, of 10 W. 90th St., New York City, whose sneering boast is that what Hitler accomplished in Europe, the National Renaissance Party shall yet accomplish in America."

The Party is replete with a "uniformed Elite Guard in the Nazi style," the report goes on, though a bolt of lightning has replaced the Swastika as the party symbol.

The Committee sums up NRP's aims as "preservation of the white Aryan race by gradual deportation of the unassimilable, the denial to Jewish people of citizenship, profession and political posts and the right of intermarriage."

While avowedly anti-Communist, NRP isn't above sweet-mouthing the Red line when it serves its purpose. It praised the anti-Semitic purges in Prague two years ago and agrees with the Communists that "the economic and political ambitions of a small coterie of Wall Street Bankers" are pushing the U. S. into war. And it has high praise for the "superbly efficient totalitarian economic systems of the Communists."

'Common Sense'

Second target of the Un-American Activities Committee report is the anti-Negro, anti-Semitic hate sheet, "Common Sense," which has blasted about every prominent American including President Eisenhower, whom it labels a "Marxist stooge."

"The solution customarily offered by publisher Conde McGinley Sr., to 'Save America'," says the Committee, "is an increase in the circulation of "Common Sense.' It is apparent that the publication represents a modern example of the racketeers who made a business out of hate propaganda during the 1930's.

The McGinleys also do a good business hawking hate books and pamphlets from their headquarters in Union, N. J. Paid subscriptions to "Common Sense" jumped from fewer than 10,000 to more than 20,000 during 1951, the year of the Korean war. Committee winds up its indictment of these two Fascist threats with this appeal: "The Committee is convinced that there is a concurrent need for continuous investigation, exposure and, where necessary, prosecution, to the end that no activity of a pro-Fascist nature will ever be stature or influence in the United States."

(Note—The Committee had not held a hearing on the subject of Fascism since January, 1946, when it looked into Gerald L. K. Smith's operation. Smith's influence and wealth have grown considerably since then.

WITNESSES OF THE TIME

"Art provides a link not only with the creative human being but with the epoch in which he lived, with life remote in time and place or so immediate that we have not yet grasped it. Obviously, we can only see and understand and interpret in terms of our own time. We decode with contemporary keys. But the great works of art—be they poems or paintings—remain the best witnesses of their times. Revelations of the inner core of life which produced them, their silent testimony is itself unchanging, challenging us to uncover the truth. Thus art delights and informs; it answers urges toward pleasure and knowledge; and it enhances our own experience by allowing communications with man at his best and by linking us to the timelessness of the world."—Aline. R. Louchheim, in New York Times.

'A Study Of History' Is No Argument For Dr. George

Ed Yoder

My beliefs about the 'scientific" validity of Dr. George's position remain unshaken by his letter of the other day to The Daily Tar Heel.

I've taken his advice and tried to consult the historical and scientific sources he mentioned, but I think they tend to bear out Mr. Huxley's theories rather than his own.

Dr. George's position, as I understand it, is that in entering desegregation in the public schools we must look toward the eventual problem of intermixing the races. That must certainly come into play.

Furthermore, Dr. George, basing his statement on his reputation as a scientist and physiologist, believes that the black races are inherently inferior in ability to contribute to "cultures." By intermarriage, he feels that the Negro influence would degrade the "white" race.

The implications of Mr. Julian Huxley's article, 'Eugenics and Society," are that we can't (as Dr. George seems to be doing) have a really scientific picture of the capacity of the Negro until he is given equal environmental opportunities. That, of course, would be stimulated by hoisting the Negro's educational equality as desegregation proposes to do.

In his letter, Dr. George mentioned, for example, page 4 in Arnold J. Toynbee's A Study of History. Apparently, Dr. George either (1) misread what Mr. Toynbee has to say there about ethnology or (2) thought that no one would take the trouble to read page 54. For page 54 makes no case for Dr. George's side.

Here is what happens on Page 54: Mr. Toynbee lists in a very general way the contributions of the various "races" to culture. He finds that "the White Races hold the lead." On the other hand he finds that 'the Black races alone have not contributed positively to any civilization—as yet." This, of course, would lend support to what Dr. George says.

But I am led to wonder whether Dr. George read the rest of the page and the paragraph and a half on Page 55. Mr. Toynbee does not conclude from this inductive evidence that the Negro or Black races are inferior. He says, rather, "If anything positive emerges from this classification it is that half our civilizations are based on contributions from more than one race . . . What the value of these subdivisions may be and whether at any time they represented historically and socially distinct peoples is another matter; the whole subject is exceedingly obscure."

That is the passage that Dr. George cites as evidence; for the life of me I can't see how it can work at all on his side.

For several days, I defended Dr. George on the grounds that his integrity as a scientist made his viewpoint worth considering. But as I thought about the matter, I began to suspect that his emotions, his political and social outlook, had perhaps mixed with his science. As evidence of emotional reaction, you have to look no further than his statement about Huxley's theories: ". . . they are the only opinions allowed open expression in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. It is not yet quite so bad in this country." He seems to feel that he must conjure up the basic hatred current in America toward anything that is 'Russian" to support his so-called "scientific" position.

Other than an interest in social and educational justice for the Negro, my major interest in George's petition is this: We must make every possible effort to maintain stability in seeking the answers to grave segregational problems. When a scientist like Dr. George begins to assert as final "science" positions he can't fully support (see Page 54, A Study of History) he undermines the intelligent respect for authorities.

In facing up to the Supreme Court's decision we must fear emotionalists (on either side), even wearing the cloaks of science. The question calls, not for hot battles 'where ignorant armies clash by night," but for informed debate in the daylight of reason. Remove moderation and undermine real authority and science on either side, "take but degree, away, untune that string, and hark! what discord follows."

What Would Thoreau & Jefferson Think Of Our 'Peace Of Mind'?

Warren Weaver
In The Saturday Review

This has been a long time coming to a head. Some years ago I started to read Joshua Liebman's book "Peace of Mind." It irritated me so that I abandoned it after two or three chapters. I was so upset that he mere mention of peace of mind would stimulate my adrenals and cause me to flail about with all the logical and ethical quarterstaves at my disposal.

Then a year or two ago I heard a sermon on this same topic; and I was thus reminded that this strange doctrine is still being preached. Indeed, I am forced to believe that it is gaining ground. For within the last weeks I have been looking at Norman Vincent Peale's "The Power of Positive Thinking." That word "positive" sounded good to me. But since books of this general type usually prove to be too weak medcine for me to want a very big dose, I scanned the table of contents, and picked out Chapter 2—"A Peaceful Mind Generates Power."

I hadn't gone very far before I hit sentences like these: "The life of inner peace, being harmonious and without stress, is the easiest type of existence." (Is that what we want, Dr. Peale, the easiest type of existence?) Or: "A primary method for gaining a mind full of peace is to practice emptying the mind" (you do it by going to sea and throwing your worries, one at a time, off the ship's stern like bits of garbage.)

I couldn't quite stick this, so I dipped briefly into Chapter 14, "Relax for Easy Power." Here I found: "One of the simplest methods for reducing tension is to practice the easy-does-it attitude." There Dr. Peale and I parted company. I just dont' think easy does it.

I regret the fact, which I think is wholly accidental, that both of these authors are religious leaders. I regret this because I deeply believe in religion and belong to the school which tries to practice it, even to the extent of going regularly to church. I also regret this for superficial tactical reasons, for when one criticizes a couple of popular clergymen he is certainly spitting into a high wind.

I am also aware of the fact that I am very possibly being unfair to these books by Rabbi Liebman and the Reverend Mr. Peale. I have read very little of either of them. I am sure that Mr. Liebman was and Dr. Peale is a wise and good man, and that both books were written in a genuine desire to help people. I realize that there is such a thing as a neurotic inner discontent which keeps its victim from having a healthy and happy wrestle with external problems. And I am quite willing to concede that these authors may have intended only to allay those internalized miseries which are irrelevant to reality, so as to free men's energies for the stirring aspects of the real world. There may be thousands upon thousands of persons who seem to profit by this sort of advice. Indeed, as I write this Dr. Peale is at the head of the best-seller list, and has been on that list for 110 weeks. All I am saying is that this kind of advice doesn't soothe me; and that, besides, I don't want to be soothed.

The concept that peace of mind is the great desideratum is clearly allied to the principle of non-activity which, as Schweitzer has recently emphasized, flows directly out of a negation of the world. This negativistic attitude, Schweitzer says, "is professed by the thinkers of India, and by the Christianity of antiquity and of the Middle Ages." The contrasting attitude of activity and of "passionate affirmation . . . interesting oneself in the things of this world and in the life we lead in it" — he states to be characteristic of "the Chinese thinkers, the Hebrew prophets, Zoroaster, and European thinkers of the Renaissance and modern times."

Modern times? Are we slipping back and how far? For what do you think about peace of mind. Galileo and Darwin? Are you in favor of it, Luther and Cromwell? Is this what we learned from you, Thoreau and Whitman? Is this what you had in mind for our own nation, Governor Bradford and Roger Williams, Ben Franklin and Thomas Jefferson?

Most specifically of all, peace of mind is not what I ask from religion. To pray for peace of mind appeals to me as a rather unpleasant insult to the God of the restless cell, of the blazing novae, of the swirling nebulae. The God, in short, of progress, not of stagnation.

Peace of mind is a state which I trust will not come to me as long as I am alive. It is very possible that peace of mind will in fact come after death. Depth is a state which I recognize as inevitable, a state I do not understand, a state I do not fear—but a state which I do not propose to adopt any more promptly than proves necessary.

God pity me on the day when I have lost my restlessness !God forgive me on the day when I am satisfied! God rouse me up if ever I am so dull, insensitive, lazy, complacent, phlegmatic, and apathetic as to be at peace!

Tar Babies Wallop Deaclets, 93-72, To Remain Unbeaten

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

The Athletic Council meets tonight. The big issue, of course, will be: Who will the head football coach be next year? The "Bring Jim Tatum Here" drive seems to have lost most of its impetus; whereas, the "Keep Barclay" cry grows stronger. From the outside looking in, it appears that Barclay will receive a vote of confidence tonight, and his contract will not be broken. However, this is merely conjecture.

Competing very strongly with the football coaching situation for publicity is Carolina's fabulous sophomore cager, Lenny Rosenbluth. Rosenbluth has already shattered any illusions that his amazing freshman year was a mere flash-in-the-pan, as he looms as a star on a national scale.

In three games (the McCrary tilt excluded, since it was not against collegiate competition), Lenny has established himself in a firm position at the front of the Atlantic Coast Conference scorng race. His three-game total of 106 points gives him an average of 35.3 per game. His closest competition comes from Wake Forest's All-America senior, Dickie Hemric, who has tallied 130 points in five games for a 26-point average. In three games Rosenbluth has garnered 41 field goals, while Hemric has made 37 in five affrays.

Here is Rosenbluth's amazing record to date: He has made good on 41 of 86 field goal attempts, almost a .500 shooting average; and 24 of 28 free throws, defying the law of averages. In addition, he has grabbed 59 rebounds, an average of 19 per game. Center Paul Likins led the Tar Heels in that department last year with an average of 11.

Lenny leads Carolina in every statistical department. His 39 points against William & Mary is a one-game high; his 15 field goals and 11 (of 12) free throws in that same game are also team high marks; and his 25 rebounds against South Carolina set a UNC record and tied the ACC mark.

Needless to say, one man doesn't make a team, and Rosenbluth is getting able assistance from his teammates. Senior guard Al Lifson has 45 points, junior forward Jerry Vayda has 44, junior guard Tony Radovich has 33, and senior center Paul Likins has 18, rounding out the top five.

The consistently steady performances of Lifson and Vayda are complementing factors to Rosenbluth's scoring which rate mention.

N. C. State's nationally fifth-ranked Wolfpack invades South Carolina, taking on Clemson tonight and USC tomorrow night. If anything, these two games should tend to raise State's rational prestige.

Writers are comparing State Coach Everett Case to a well-dressed woman with no place to go. Even if his red-hot team should go through the season undefeated, it couldn't engage in post-season tournament play. The 'Pack was ruled out of this year's NCAA tournament play as a penalty for overemphasizing the sport.

Bob Williams, ex-Notre Dame All-America quarterback, was picked on the All-Navy team and was chosen the most valuable player among gridiron performers serving in the Navy. Williams played for Bainbridge. He is property of the Baltimore Colts.

An interesting story from Moscow says that the Russians admit they are making a great effort to re-popularize tennis and raise a good crop of young players, but that so far their players are far below Davis Cup or Wimbledon class.

Australia will be relieved to hear that.

Terp Contest Saturday Ends Pre-holiday Slate

A basketball clash here Saturday between the University of orth Carolina and Maryland will round out the pre-Christmas ath letic achedule at the University. Sx other varous athletic contest are slated during the week.

The cage tilt with Maryland will be the third against the Atlantic Coast Conference competition for the Tar Heels, who journeyed over into the Southern Conference Saturday night to take on William and Mary. It will also be the third league contest for the Terps, who have already served notice that they are to be considered amor g the strongest in the conference with a win over powerful Duke.

Terp Coach H. A. Millikan will bring five lettermen to Chapel Hill for the tilt, including big Bob Everett and Bob Kessler, runner-up scorers to All-American Gene Shue last season.

Wednesday, the varsity swimming team of Coach Ralph Casey will play host to Duke in a bid for its second straight victory of the season. The UNC swimmers defeated Bainbridge in their first competition of the season last week.

Thursday night, the freshman basketballers swing back into acton against the Campbell College Jayvees, with the tilt slated to get underway at 8 p.m. on the Campbell court.

Coach Frank Barnes' wrestlers will get their first shot at an Atlantic Coast Conference foe Friday when they go to Duke. The matmen opened their card Saturday night against Davidson at Greensboro.

Saturday, the pre-Christmas card will be rounded out with the gymnastics team playing host to the Jersey City Recreation Department and the freshman cagers going against Charlotte High School as a 6:15 prelim to the varsity clash.

Kearns Pours in 32 To Spark Locals; Carr Gets 21 For WF

Unknown Charlie Adams Gets 11 Timely Tallies For Carolina; Quigg Sinks 17, Brennan Hits 16

By TOM SHORES

The University of North Carolina freshman basketball team came up with two new scoring stars last night at Woollen Gym to down the Wake Forest College freshman team bya score of 82-73, as they registered their fifth straight victory in the young season. Tommy Kearns and Charlie Adams led the show for Buck Freeman's highly talented Tar Baby team, Kearns taking individual scoring honors with a total of 32 points. Adams had 11 timely points, several assists, and played an outstanding defensive game.

The game started slowly with the lead changing hands four times before Kearns made a drive shot, then stole the ball and made a behind-the back assists to give the Tar Babies a 14-11 lead. The Deacs made a tap-in field goal and then proceeded to hit a cold streak that saw Carolina run the lead to 27-13 before the visitors could scratch again. Wendell Carr and Swede Frauson helped cut the lead to 44-32 at intermission.

The Deacs came out fired up at the start of the second half and at one point cut the lead to four points when the scoreboard read 53-49, but two quick baskets by Adams, one by Joe Quigg and Kearns shot the lead back up and Freeman's crew won going away, with the subs playing the final four minutes.

Quigg had a great night on the defensive board, but could only muster 17 points, a bad night for him. Pete Brennan collected 16 before fouling out. Carr led the losers with 21 points with Frauson adding 15 and Henry Bowers 14.

The Tar Babies next game will be with Campbell Junior College at Buies Creek on Thursday night, then on Saturday night they entertain Charlotte Central High at 6:15 here.

Former Army Quarterback, John Sauer, Appointed Citadel Mentor

CHARLESTON, S. C., Dec. 13 (AP)—John E. Sauer, West Point quarterback 10 years ago, today was given a five-year contract as head football coach at The Citadel. Announcement was made by Gen. Mark W. Clark, president of the military college.

Sauer, 29, succeeds John D. McMillan who, along with his assistants was dropped last week. Sauer will take over his new duties Jan. 1.

Sauer was quarterback on the 1944—45 Army teams of the Balnchard-Davis era. For two years Sauer assisted Coach Earl Blaik at Army. Next he served for three years as assistant backfield coach at the University of Florida. From there he went into profssional league coaching, serving as an assistant last year and with the Los Angeles Rams of the National Professional League this year.

The Citadel's football fortunes are at a new low. The Cadets, in two sasons under McMillan, won 4 and lost 15. Last year their 2-7 record matched that of 1948 as the worst for a full season since 1905. This season a new record was set, the Bulldogs winning only 2 of 10.

The 1918 Citadel team failed to win a game, but played only three due to the war, losing two and tying one.

Thirty—three—year—old McMillan was offensive line coach here one year before taking over as head coach following the resignation of J. Quinn Decker.

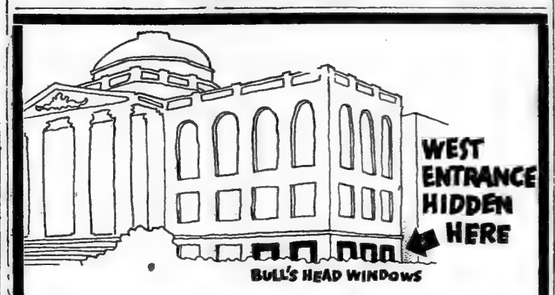
Prior to coming to The Citadel, McMillan had been coach at Erskine College for five years. In 1945 he coached at the University of South Carolina while Rex Enright was on naval leave. That team won a bid to the inaugural Gator Bowl game at Jacksonville, Fla.

Lettermen Meet

The Monogram Club will meet tonight at 7 o'clock in the club room. Pictures for the Yackety-Yack will be taken and the final vote on the candidate for the Dixie Classic Queen will also be taken.

All members should wear their monogram sweaters with tie.

Community Chest Has Almost 90 Per Cent



The Community Chest was inching toward the 90 per cent mark this morning, with $22,128 reported in cash and pledges out of the goal of $24,721.

Campaign Chairman Phillip P. Green Jr. said that response to the final clean-up mail appeal last week was quite good. Contributions are still coming in to Chest Treasurer Walt Baucom at Hospital Saving Association. Returns are also pretty good from the Boy Scout leaders who've been giving considerable help in the clean-up campaign, Mr. Green said.

Student Actors Go On The Boards Thursday

The sign outside says "Carrboro Cash Store," but the only thing inside that's left of the store are a few posters proclaiming the "specials of the week."

It's a white board building just beside the rail road tracks before you get to Carrboro and "Sound and Fury" has rented it for their scenery shop.

Saturday night, the the show's director Bo Bernardin, head scenery artist Hartwell Conklin and crew were working on the sets bundled up in all of the warm clothes they could muster and they still swore it was colder in the store that than it was outside.

Miss Bernardin says that the show is "shaping up very well" and last night the whole cast had a full practice with complete musical score and dance routines.

Music for the show is under the direction of Max Warner (piano) and his combo is made up of Wyatt Dixon (guitar and banjo), Jake Phelps (bass viol) and a drummer who is reported to be a protege of Gene Krupa.

The show will open Thursday night in Memorial Hall under the name of "Scandals of 1955," It is made up of "takeoffs" on two broadway shows, "Pajama Game" and "Can Can."

Tickets for the show, which boasts and all-student cast of 45, are on sale today, tomorrow and Thursday at Graham Memorial and the Y-Court at 50c a throw.

Hilltop Trees Dormant; Low Pressure's Back

The high wind today is predicted to be in the low 40's, said officials at the Raleigh-Durham airport, yesterday. The weather conditions persisting now are caused by a low pressure center located in Georgia, and moving slowly eastward.

HILLTOP TREES

Dr. J. N. Couch, Professor of chemistry and botony, says "Weeks of cold weather would not harm the trees".

He went on to explain that most of the trees in this climate, even the holly, are dormant now. At the dormant stage, there is little water in the sap, and therefore no growth occurring. He said that if a cold spell had happened in the spring after more water had gone into the sap and growth were taking place, then the trees would be harmed.

Even such trees, he said, as the Japanese magnolia which is due to bloom after Christmas, will not be affected by the cold weather. There is a Japanese magnolia located in the north east corner of the Arboretum.

The only way this type of weather could harm the trees, he said, would be for the water on the trees to freeze. The weight of the ice would cause the limbs to break off.

—Resolution Coming Up—

West Dorn . . . "

Taylor gave Horner's attack on the Old West resolution as the main reason for the resolution which he will bring up.

"The sports editor of a paper in a near-by town put in his column that Old West and University students do not have the right to express themselves as that, and so the first reason I am bringing up the resolution is to remind people that they have the right and that if they do not use it people will assume as he did that we don't have it," said Taylor.

The president of Old West, in giving other reasons for his resolution, said, "Many students think that the people of the state have the wrong idea of what students think here. They say that The Daily Tar Heel and the Di and Phi express opinions which resolutions (such as the one brought up the meeting of Old West) give the average student an opportunity to make known his ideas.

Barclay Will Stay On Another Year

2 Advisory Groups Give Coach Confidence Votes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chancellor Robert B. House of the University of North Carolina last night made it clear that the institution will fulfill its contractual commitment to head football Coach George Barclay and that there "has never been any issue between Mr. Barclay and the University over the terms of his contract in any way."

Barclay's three-year contract has another year to run.

The Chancellor issued a brief prepared statement following re commendations of the Universit Faculty Committee on Athletic and the Athletic Council, both o which are advisory groups. Both gave Barclay a vote of confidence The Athletic Council acted at it regular monthly meeting last nigh The Faculty Committee had pre viously gone on record.

Chancellor House's statement:

"The contract between the Uni versity of North Carolina and it head football coach, Mr. Georg Barclay, is a three-year contrac with another year to run. Ther has never been any issue betwee Mr. Barclay and the University ov er the terms of his contract in an way. We have never had a coach more cooperative with the Univer sity purposes than Mr. Barclay. Th University desires to disassociate itself emphatically from certain ru mors launched in the public pres to the effect that the Universit was seeking to dismiss Mr. Bar clay."

A. W. Hobbs, chairman of th Athletic Council, transmitted tha group's advice to Chancellor House following a session in which othe wise routine business was transac ted.

The Council saw fit to make it recommendation and Chancello House his statement as the result of persistent reports that alumni were unhappy oevr the progress of the team and advocated a change. North Carolina, under Coach Barclay's staff, this year won four games, lost five and tied one. Barclay's first North Carolina team, in 1953, won four and lost six.

Reports that the coaching change might be made were first circulat ed after the season's closing game, which Duke won by 47-12. Coach Jim Tatum of Maryland was most prominently mentioned as Barclay's successor if the latter's contract was "bought up" as some alumni had been reported as favoring.

The Board of Trustees issued an order last January in which com plete control of athletics was dele gated to the Chancellor, responsible only to the President, with the athletic director in turn responsible to him. This order emphasized that the Council and Faculty Committee had only advisory duties Chancellor House pointed out, however, that he did not feel it proper for him to make a state ment despite the widespread rumors, until he had heard expres sions from these groups.

The Council's meeting was executive and no details of the discussions were made public. Rather, they were sent direct to the Chancellor.

Governor Calls For

'Long Look' At Spending

RALEIGH (AP)—North Carolina has reached the point where it must "settle down and take agood long look" before beginning new spending progrmas, Gov. Hodges said yesterday.

The governor told his news conference he will recommend to the Legislature only appropriations approved by the Advisory Budget Commission. Just maintaining present state services will require a "rather terrific" amount of additional revenue, he said.

His specific recommendations on spending and taxes will be spelled out in his budget message to the Legislature, Hodges added.

In announcing that a report on the state's prison system is expected from the commission on reorganization of state government late this week or early next week. Hodges indicated separation of the prisons from the Highway Commission may be delayed.

He said he expects about the time the report is received to replace the late Dr. Howard Odum of Chapel Hill.

Hodges Urges Citizens To Observe 'S-D Day'

RALEIGH, (AP)—Gov. Hodges yesterday urged Tar Heel citizens to "drive and walk with utmost caution" today to insure the success of "Safe Driving Day," observance in North Carolina.

Hodges made his appeal in a state-wide radio talk over a network of about 67 stations. The governor said that during the 24 hour period starting at midnight last night the nation's drivers "will combine courtesy, caution and common sense in a mass effort to combat accidents."

He expressed the wish that North Carolina will set new records for accident-free motoring durin SD Day.

Pointing out that S-D Day could mean "Sudden Death Day," Hodges appealed to his listeners to "drive and walk as you would have everyone else drive and walk."

He said all drivers and pedestrians were being asked to: 1. Observe the letter and spirit of all traffic regulations, 2. be courteous to every driver and pedestrian—practice sportsmanship, and 3. give full attention to driving and walking.

U. S. News 'Amazing' To Turks

American newspapers, with their bulk and large advertising content, are often a more amazing sight to European visitors than the American skyscrapers, a Turkish journalist told journalism students here yesterday.

Bulend Ecevit, who is completng a three-month assigment as a guest writer for The Winston-Salem Journal & Sentinel, presented a comparison of European and American newspapers in general and discussed the Turkish press in particular.

Ecevit was introduced by Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the School of Journalism under whose sponsorship he visited the campus.

"European papers are smaller mainly because of economic reasons: low average incomes make volume advertising by businessmen unprofitable, and the papers have less money ho spend on newsprint, which is very scarce," Ecvit remarked.

He added that the pressure of small size is an advantage as it forces concise reporting and careful copy editing. The very bulkines of American newspapers may destroy their fitness for hurried readers.

ROTC & Gym Classes Will Have Three Cuts

The campus ROTC units and the Physical Education Department will abide by the new cut rule passed last month by the Faculty Council, according to statements received from the three departments yesterday.

The new ruling, which allows three cuts per semester in all classes, is slated to go into effect beginning next semester.

Col. George J. Smith, professor of Air Science and Tactics and head of the AFROTC unit on campus, said yesterday that his unit would comply with the Faculty Council ruling.

Heretofore AFROTC cadets have been allowed no unexcused absences in the military classes.

Starting next semester freshmen and sophomores in the program will be allowed their three cuts in Air Science classes and will then be put on probation. Junior and senior students, who are payed for attending classes, will simply not be payed for the classes they miss, but they will not receive any demerits for their three allowed cuts, said Col. Smith.

The AFROTC ruling for juniors and seniors now it that the student who cuts is cut in pay for two class periods and is also given demerits.

Col. Smith said that the Department of Air Science and Tactics was a department of the University and therefore must abide by University rules.

He also squelched a rumor that there would be no AFROTC Saturday classes next semester. He said the department had considered it at one time so that field trips to Air Force bases could be arranged on Saturdays. "However," he said, "if the boys don't have Air Science classes scheduled on Saturdays the office of Central Records will schedule them for other classes and we can work out of our own classes easier than we can those of other departments."

Commander Edwards, executive officer of the UNC Naval Reserve Unit, said yesterday that the Naval Unit "will comply with whatever rule the Faculty Council passes" concerning absences.

At the present, midshipmen in the NROTC program are not allowed any "unauthorized absences" from Naval Science classes and drill periods. "A midshipman's pay is not docked for absences," Edwards said, "but demerits are issued." The program consists of three Naval Science classes and two laboratory periods.

NROTC Ceremonies Are Held

Ceremonies were held yesterday by the Naval ROTC here to honor Chief Petty Officer "J" C. Perkins who is retiring from active service, and to present special rifle and pistol awards to midshipment in the NROTC Battalion.

Chief Perkins was honored by presentation of a "letter of appreciation" by Colonel R. C. Burns, USMC, professor of naval science here.

Chief Perkins first moved to Chapel Hill with his family in 1951 when he commenced his duties with the Naval unit here. Upon his retirement from active service, he and his family will move to Texas.

Pilate Belongs To Burning Tree

With Christmas in the air, we were moved to pick up, the other day, Dorothy Sayers' play cycle, The Man Born to Be King. It carries a shocking, truthful message for our time — that the Christ whose birth we celebrate next week would probably be crucified again if he were to show up in the world today.

Here comparisons are all too clear. Pontius Pilate, for example, was not an evil man. He was a Roman foreign service officer in Judea to promote Roman justice. But he was afraid of the questions Senators might ask from the floor about his management of the troublesome matter of the Nazerene heretic. He was afraid of making a mistake, of the consequences in the department of state back home.

If Pilate were alive in Washington today, as Doris Fleeson has said, he almost certainly would belong to the Burning Tree golf club and would be driving a government Cadillac. And it is reasonable to assume that he might again ask, "What is truth?" and again wash his hands, turning the whole affair over to McCarthy or Velde for investigation.

Miss Sayers makes her point this way:

"We played the parts in the tragedy. . . . For the Christian affirmation is that a number of quite commonplace human beings, in an obscure province of the Roman Empire, killed and murdered God Almighty—quite casually, almost as a matter of religious and political routine and certainly with no notion that they were doing anything out of the way.

"Their motives on the whole were defensible and in some respects praiseworthy. There was some malice, some weakness and no doubt some wresting of the aw — but no more than we are accustomed to find in the conduct of human affairs. By no jugglings of fate, but by that destiny which is character and by the unimaginative fo lowing of their ordinary standards of behavior they were led with ghastly inevitability to the commission of the crime of crimes."

'And in case you have any lingering ideas that this was all done by people remote from us, Miss Sayers assures you otherwise:

"God was executed by people painfully like us in a society very similar to our own —in the over-ripeness of the most splendid and sophisticated Empire the world has ever seen. In a nation famous for its religious genius and under a government renowned for its efficiency. He was executed by a corrupt church, a timid politician and a fickle proletariat led by professional agitators. . . a bloody, dusty, sweaty, sordid business."

Miss Sayers has sounded a powerful analogy; the tragedy of this Christmas is that it will not be heard amid the over-ripe splendor of our own sophisticated Empire.

Guys & The Hard-Boiled Heart-Lifters

Louis Kraar

THE OTHER day in Stockholm, while author Ernest Hemingway lounged around his Cuban plantation, the Royal Swedish Academy of Literature gave him the top writing prize in the world—and a hint.

The hint came from a professor who said that "brutal, cynical and callous sides" to Hemingway's earlier works perhaps delayed his winning the award.

The professor went on to say that the old man of modern littrature "also possesses a heroic pathos which forms the basic element in his awareness of life, a manly love of danger and adventure, with a natural admiration for every individual who fights the good fight in a world of reality overshadowed by violence and death."

All of this seemed to mean one thing. The man acclaimed as one of the world's greatest writers was hard boiled, wrote of the dignity of man, but gave little hope in his works.

This thing that literary critics and college professors have decided to call 'the dignity of man" seems to be all the encouragement that men writing today give us.

When a man like Lt. Henry in "A Farewell to Arms," or Nick Adams of many short stories gets in a tight spot, he seems to have two choices. He can act like a man—rise to meet the circumstances or be a coward. Either way, Hemingway characters find the going tough. But if they pick the brave way to go, that thing called 'the dignity of man" is brought out.

NOW THESE prize-givers in Sweden seemed to be telling Hemingway, who was five thousand miles away in Cuba, that writers should give some hope in their books.

When William Faulkner, who made it to Stockholm to get his Nobel prize, appeared before the literary men, he gave a beautiful speech about "problems of the human heart."

But Faulkner, too, wrote little that indicated that man can hope for something besides dignity.

In his speech Faulkner said that the writer's job is "to help man endure by lifting his heart, by reminding him of the courage and honor and hope and pride and compassion and pity and sacrifice which have been the glory of his past."

But when one reads this speech now—then looks at the works of the author—you begin to wonder if Faulkner really believed it. He writes of the South of heros, maniacs, Civil War conflicts, and 'the dignity of man," but there is little hope.

NOW I'm not one who thinks every story should end happily. Real stories don't.

But neither do real stories always end with only dignity and no hope.

James Jones wrote of the Army in "From Here To Eternity," but all one saw was sex, four-letter words, and a hard life. Perhaps, this is what the service is like. But the writer of books has more of duty than just to record what happened. If he's a good writer, he will try to make it mean something. He will try to, as Faulkner said in his Nobel Prize speech, "help man endure by lifting his heart."

A friend of mine likes the old man of modern literature, Hemingway, because he has what my friend calls 'guts." And he does. His characters are hard boiled.

But if our writers don't start giving us more than just "dignity" and tough guys, readers of books will turn their heads to television, where they'll get escape.

As the Nobel Prize bestowing professor said, there's more to life than the "brutal, cynical and callous sides." Maybe soon our writers will give the better, hopeful side.

'Who Said, 'What Have We Been Doing Up Till Now?' '

The 22nd Anniversary

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — This week happens to be the 22nd birthday of the column which whirls under the above caption; also it's the natal anniversary of the author of the column; also it's been four years since Joe McCarthy delivered an hour-long diatribe on the Senate floor demanding that this column be banned by editors, that Adam hats be boycotted; and when he first employed Indian Charlie's below-the-belt tactics in the men's cloakroom of the Sulgrave Club.

The latter two incidents were among the most painful of my life, in more ways than one, and it is with no pleasure that I recall them today.

I do not even get any satisfaction from the fact that Harry Truman, who was quite gleeful over these two incidents, has now changed his mind; nor that Senator Watkins of Utah has changed his. Senator Watkins, meeting Joe McCarthy the next day, remarked: "Joe, the newspapers differ as to where you hit him, but I hope both accounts were right."

A lot of people besides Senator Watkins have changed their minds since then. They realize that, far more important than anything that happened to me, the country has suffered and a lot of people have suffered—innocent people who couldn't defend themselves. I was able to defend myself. Most of my editors stuck by me loyally, and though I did lose my radio sponsor, a lot of other radio stations and sponsors have come to my support.

So, other than some painful and humiliating memories, I have no complaints to make.

What Happened To Others

But I do want to record some of the things that have happened to other people, little people who have been forgotten and pushed aside in Joe's rush for bigger and better headlines .

One of the first men he listed as a communist in the State Department was Val Lorwin, then a labor adviser. McCarthy cited his name in February 1950 when he first charged, in Wheeling, W. Va., that there were "205 card-carrying communists known to the Secretary of State." Next day he changed the figure to 57, and the day after to 81.

And though General Bedell Smith, Republican Undersecretary of State, swore under oath last year that not one communist had been found in the State Department, Val Lorwin was indicted for perjury when he denied he was a communist.

That was approximately four years ago. And for four years Lorwin lived under a cloud, unable to clear his name, unable to make much of a living. He had no money, but he borrowed some. A lot of friends helped him, and Jiggs Donohue, former commissioner of the District of Columbia, generously defended his case for cost.

Finally, the Justice Department went into court and asked that the case be dismissed. There was no evidence on which to base a prosecution.

I talked to Lorwin afterwards. He was not bitter. He had been through four years of hell, but said the experience had showed him how many fine people there were who believed in him and were willing to help him.

Joe's Defenders

Some people claim: "Joe McCarthy did a good job cleaning up communists, so he should be forgiven some of his mistakes."

Unfortunately they forget that Joe didn't start on Communism until 1950, by which time the Justice Department had already indicted the top communist leaders of the nation. I had exposed the Soviet spy ring in Canada in February, 1946, the year McCarthy was elected to the Senate. I had warned the State Department about Alger Hiss, also in 1946 and exposed the Russian blueprint laboratory in Silver Springs, Md., basement in September, 1947.

Drew Pearson
. . . his birthday

Joe was four years late waking up to this danger, but when he did wake up, he made so many accusations that he started a wave of terroristic tactics in government that sometimes out-Mc. Carthied McCarthy. That is one of the worst results of McCarthyism: those who are afraid they will be exposed by Joe if they don't outdo Joe.

For instance, in July 1953, the Navy Department suspended Abraham Chasanow, after twenty years' service. No charge was placed against him. For one whole year he couldn't even find out what the suspicion was. Finally the Washington newspapers took up his case, and the Navy belatedly restored Chasanow with a formal and public apology.

Again, take the case of a professional witness for the Justice Department, Paul Crouch. Mr. Crouch has been going around the country testifying against all sorts of people and making a good living from Uncle Sam—$9,000 a year—as a professional witness. But when he testified against Jacob Burck, Pulitzer Prize winning cartoonist for the Chicago Sun-Times, that paper turned round and investigated him.

It found that, whereas Crouch testified he had been an editor of the Miami Herald, Editor George Beebe of the Herald gave an affidavit that he had only been a type-setter for three months.

Whereas Crouch testified he had been Florida State Director of the CIO, the CIO gave an affidavit flatly to the contrary. In all, 29 misstatements of fact were found in Crouch's sworn testimony. Yet this was the man the Justice Department was using to out-McCarthy McCarthy.

McCarthy's Impact

It will take a long time for the government to get over its present Gestapo-NKVD tactics toward its own public servants.

Even more important, it will take State Department diplomats a long time to get away from the tactic of writing reports that they think would read well before a McCarthy committee rather than reporting on what they consider to be the truth.

If a diplomat knows that a future Senate committee may demand his dismissal because he wrote his considered judgment about China as he saw it, rather than writing what the politicians at home want him to wire, then preventive war is a lot more likely.

For the diplomats of today know that John Paton Davies, John Carter Vincent, and John Service were all discharged because they reported what they thought in 1945 rather than what the politicians advocated nine years later.

Joe McCarthy has now differed with almost everyone in Washington; beginning with me and ending with President Eisenhower. And while those personal differences are not important, it is important and unfortunate that it will take the country a long time to get over the impact of his tactics.

Yes, Tommy Santa Claus Can Exist

David Mundy

Chapel Hill, N. C.
December 15, 1954

Dear Tommy,

Yes, Tommy, there can be a Santa Claus. He is a symbol of all the many kind, generous, warmhearted elements of the world, a giver who gives without expectation of return. He is a symbol in which you should always believe.

Many would contest belief in such a "nice" symbol. Even I, who would ask you to have such faith, have no such faith of my own. We, the others andI, have collided with a world which our pride, "sophistication," self-will and alleged intellect declares to a hard one of scientific realities.

We have, yes, become cynics. We consider, think, and talk about what we call reality. That is a bright light, glaring, unfriendly. It casts forlorn shadows. Its rays destroy that beautiful, happy world of symbols and beauty, of which Santa is but one symbol.

This world of ours, the world of the cynics, is inescapable for those inhabiting it, and unpleasant. The inhabitants admit the exisentence of no such thing as a "good" man. Derisive laughter goes out to those who believe in such "superstitous fetishes" as patriotism, religion, friendship and love.

Many have fallen into it, this other world which lies as a trap especially prepared for those overcome by ill fortune or thwarted in some ambition. I would ask you to beware.

This Santa Claus has more than a seasonal meaning. He can, as a major symbol, stand as well for all those much derided elements of life which provide happiness.

You now, if you have not changed unusually, may be on that point of reorientation in your outlook on life. Keep those symbols, of which Santa Claus is but one. They will be derided as being childish. They will be assaulted as being unreal, superstitions, and fetishes. And, perhaps worst of all, you will be termed "old fashioned," "naive," and even "foolish." Even I in a bitter moment might say so; but then the attackers are an unhappy, unsatisfied, ulcerated lot.

I would, as my advice for the new year, say:

There is a Santa Claus, good, just, kind and generous, as long as you will allow him to exist in you. Believe in him, and regard the world in the context of such symbols. It won't be, as we put it, "scientific," but it will be a world of happiness.

Yours,
David M.

Portrait Of Ike

By James Reston
In The New York Times

It is easy, in the Washington atmosphere, to be critical of the President. He does not follow Washington'e rules. He is not fierceley partisan, which is regarded rather as a weakness of character in this political hive. He is uncritical of his opponents, and he doesn't do his homework.

On the big questions, the trends are moving with him. All the indications are that he is going to avoid both war and depression. The temper of the country is moderate. It is weary of angry men and the great convulsions of the past generation: and while neither he nor anybody else can define what he means by 'moderate progressivism," the people are for both of them.

This is his great strength: He can tune in on the deepest instincts of the American people. He approaches problems in moral terms; he is superficial about many questions; he is generous; outspoken, often ill-informed and contradictory. But so is the country.

He is, indeed, almost a symbol of America at this particular moment of its history, and this asset, backed by the power of the Presidency, is still enough to hold the balance.

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was sitting in the crisp, sunny pleasantness of The Y Court, stirring his coffee with a dainty hoof.

"I can't figure it out," he confessed. "Nope."

What couldn't he figure out? The coffee? I thought he had a lot of company in that puzzlement!

"I have been roundly scolded by several unimpeachably patriotic Tar Heels for my remarks about dishonor at Graham Memorial's Honor-System Coffee & Snack Bar," The Horse explained. "I was reminded, quite unnecessarily, that The Daily Tar Heel is read far and wide, and that I was bringing into question the fair name of our oak-girt campus."

Well, I could see the point.

"The shame is not in the telling, but in the doing," The Horse defended himself. "Sure; it is but a matter of a handful of students, or their guests, and the financial wound is not deep. But it is the implication behind the petty thievery I mentioned, that is frightening."

Oh, come, now! Frightening?

"History records that the defeat of every proud nation or people has been preceded by a moral and ethical collapse," The Horse pointed out with a dripping hoof. "The glory that was Greece, the grandeur that was Rome, the sprawling empire that was Spain, all these examples of cultured living went down the drain of compromised ethics and morals long before their marbled and mosaicked edifices became sepulchral memorials to dead principles. As a sagacious Bishop of Rome succinctly stated it, anent co-existence with the Russkies via playing footsie with them Diplomatically, 'You can't compromise with the Devil.' And that goes whether it be winking an eye at subtle little subversions within . . . or grabbing sandwiches and coffee without. Without paying for them, that it."

Oh? Then we should police The Graham Memorial igloo, vigorously?

"No," The Horse spurned my remedy for the pinch-penny pilferings. "Vontrol starts with an stems from the individual. Censor your own personal conduct with an eye to ethical and moral conformity, and you won't have to yak-yak about Honor Systems because that is the system of Honor."

The Horse would pretend to see in some picayunish sandwich swiping a threat to our nation's safety from predatory world powers?

"I do," The Horse nodded. "There are signs even now that in 1956 these same Russkies we feel so superior to will give us a rude shock. I am going to say it now, and maybe you will remember it in 1956, when the Olympic Games roll around. Russia is more than an even-money bet right this minute, to carry off the honors in our next Olympics. They ran away with the recent marksmanship shoot in Latin-America, a field which was spreadeagled by our American trigger-pullers."

Waaaaaaaadaminnit, *waaaaaad*aminnit! The Horse, then, viewed Russia as a quote moral force unquote?

"I am not speaking of their dictatorial governers; The Horse specified. "But in the average Ivan and Ivanovna—their equivalent of our John and Jane —you have a breed of hardy peasant much like that which was the backbone of American energy a century or even a half-century ago. All the eggheads in Athens could not give the muscle-bound Spartan hoplites a trimming, the mincing dilettantes of Rome couldn't stand off the German barbarians. The peasant may be simple, but so is his adherence to his codes of morals and ethics. He may be as full of frustations as a yard-dog is of fleas; but his belly-muscles are hard, his back is strong, and his shooting-eye is accurate. And Buster, they still pay off in wars on The Queen of Battle: the lowly foot-sloggers who get there fustest with the mostest innards. And the good old USA is soft as a one-minute egg, compativey speaking. We are world leaders in Sport . . . as spectators, not as participants. As gruff and courageous General Chester puller of The Marines once put it bluntly to a shocked audience in Virginia, 'Whaddyamean, the American Boy is the world's best fighting men? I have seen Chinese women who could outfight and outshoot the average boot who comes to us to-day for training at Paris Island! Wake up, Americans! Your heritage of lean-waited competence is overlarded with the fat of easy living and push-button civilization.' "

Didn't The Horse fear he would be tagged as a Red, or as a Pinke, baldly predicting our first defeat ever in an Olympics?

"I don't care what I am tagged as so long as our hoplites are not tagged," The Horse shrugged. "But "But they will be if we continue to trifle with our moral and ethical codes. You don't just get soft in one spot and stay unyielding in all others. And that goes for a campus, too. Honor is not just in the classroom, it is also in the nickel-a-cup coffee at The Graham Memorial Snackery."

For a rarity, I think The Horse's vision is 20-20!

The Modern Temper

Eric Hoffer in Harper's

A poignant dissatisfaction, whatever be its cause, it as bottom a dissatisfaction with our selves. It is surprising how much hardship and humiliation a man will endure without bitterness when he had not the least doubt about his worth, or when he is so integrated with others that he is not aware of a separate self.

The remarkable thing is that we really love our neighbor as ourselves: we do unto others as we do unto ourselves. We hate others when we hate ourselves. We are tolerant toward others when we tolerate ourselves. We forgive others when we forgive ourselves. We are prone to torture and sacrifice others when we torture and sacrifice ourselves.

Perhaps our craving to change others is but a reflection of the craving to change ourselves. The self-dissatsified are likely to be ardent reformers.

For all we know, the wholly harmonious individual might be without the impulse to push on, and without the compulsion to strive for perfection in any department of life. There is always a chance that perfect society might be a stagnant society.

TV's Producer Has Got Experience

By UNC NEWS BUREAU

Richard Burdick, actor, writer and director, who came here to be executive producer of the Consolidated University's television station, WUNC-TV, channel 4, has already gotten programming well under way for the station's proposed opening Jan. 4.

As executive producer, Burdick will supervise all programming and production and the maintenance of uniform program excellence.

Burdick has had a great deal of experience and acclaim in

RICHARD BURDICK
. . . executive producer

radio, TV, motion pictures, the theater and as a teacher.

In the television field he worked with McClatchy Broadcasting Co. in Sacramento and Hollywood, Cal., and was producer-writer for the California State Fair, servicing the entire state. He also had personal management of Max Baer.

In radio he was production manager of Station KSFO, San Francisco, for two years and was program director of Station KFBK in Sacramento.

He has been a writer for more than 1,000 broadcasts of every type for all major networks. His credits for commercial broadcasting range from Hopalong Cassidy to Family Theater to Columbia Workshop.

Budrick has had quite a few fiction and non-fiction articles published in numerous national magazines, in addition to composing the music and lyrics for approximately 100 songs, many of which have been recorded by leading artists. He has also had wide experience as a public relations counsel.

Burdick's success as a dramatic writer is indicated by the fact that he has five full-length national productions to his credit, as well as the co-authorship of Irving Berlin's "This Is the Army."

His work in motion pictures includes screen writing for Sol Lesser productions, RKO and Warner Bros., and some acting roles with the latter group.

On the legitimate stage he has performed on the Eastern Stock circuit and in Broadway productions. He has served as director of the Sacramento Civic Repertory Theater.

In the teaching field, he has served as instructor in television-radio writing and production at Sacramento State College, and as instructor in acting and directing, Eaglet School of the Theater.

To augment his professional successes Burdick is also an accomplished amateur magician and is often called upon to entertain at parties and meetings.

But when it comes to the planning and programming for WUNC-TV, Burdick is all business. He has been hard at work for the educational station's January debut since early September. When the VHF station comes on the air viewers can be sure that Burdick's productions are more than something he pulled from his magician's hat.

WUNC-TV was conceived back in June of 1952 when 150 deans, directors and administrators from the University here, Woman's College and State College and representatives of other groups gathered here in a two-day conference to consider what educational television might mean to the people of North Carolina.

An All-University Council was appointed by the conferees to make inventory of program resources and make recommendations about the activation of a University station.

On May 11, 1953, the idea was approved by University trustees, and five months later the Federal Communications Commission granted the University a construction permit.

Smith Entertains

The girls of Smith Dormitory will entertain faculty members and their families at a Christmas party today from 5 to 6 o'clock in the dorm's parlors.

Invitations have been issued to approximately 100 faculty members and administration, and invitees have been urged to attend the party with their children.

GM's Got A Coffee Dispenser

The newly acquired lime-tinted machine stands sedately in a corner of Graham Memorial's kitchen, pouring out its heart to any chance passerby.

The mellow shade of its exterior seems to invite passers-by to insert a dime and in return, it with great care and devotion will pour forth its lifeblood: coffee, black with cream and sugar or any variation of the two.

Inside its compact little body, the vender has a capacity for 400 cups of the steaming fluid and spurts forth, apparently with gurgling sounds of happiness at being able to accomidate, at the mere pressing of a lever and dropping of dime.

Play Tryouts

Tryouts for parts in student written and directed one-act plays will be held by the Carolina Playmakers at 11 Murphey Hall today between 4 and 6 p.m.

The three plats chosen for The three plats chosen for production are "riends," by Joseph Rosenburg; "Doris," by Virginis Ferguson, and "Gomennasai," by Christian Moe, winner of the Frederick H. Koch scholarship.

Graduate students in the department of dramatic art will direct the plays.

MANLY WADE WELLMAN, Chapel Hill author, playing the part of a cop with literary ambitions in the Carolina Playmakers' production of "Arsenic and Old Lace," takes advantage of a trussed-up dramatic critic, played by football quarterback Len Bullock, to force him to listen to a play he has written.

'Arsenic' Set Is 'Macabre'

A stage setting in the manner of Charles Addams has been created by James Riley for the cold-blooded comedy of corpses, "Arsenic and Old Lace," which opened yesterday at the Playmakers' Theater for a five day run.

The Brooklyn parlor of the dear old ladies who serve arsenic-spiked elderberry wine to their guests in Joseph Kesselring's comedy-melodrama has been conceived by Playmaker Technical Director Riley in tones of what he calls "vitriolic velvet and macabre mauve," and, aided by Donald Treat and Walter Creech, he has constructed a set with all the gingerbread work and gee-jaws of the most ornate architectural style of 1880.

Tickets for the Playmaker production are available at the Playmaker business office in Abernathy Hall and at Ledbetter-Pickard's.

Chapin Honored

Dr. Marvin E. Chapin, professor and head of the department of oral surgery here, has been re-appointed National Consultant in oral surgery to the office of the Surgeon General, United States Air Force, active until July, 1956.

The position will entail visitations to various Air Force installations within continental United States and overseas.

Person Hall Hours

Person Hall Art Gallery will be closed from Dec. 23 through Dec. 26, and on Jan. 1. On Jan. 2 it will be open from 2:30 until 5 p.m. Rental pictures, which are usually due on the second day of each month, may be returned on Jan. 3 without being counted late.

The Tree That Grew In Brooklyn:

Betty Smith Cut It Down

By SUE QUINN

Betty Smith grew up in Brooklyn, N. Y. She wrote a book called A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, and another, Tomorrow Will Be Better, with the same setting. But her heart, now, is divided between Chapel Hill, her official home, and Nags Head, where she has a cottage on the ocean.

A couple of weeks ago she visited Brooklyn for the first time in two years. And, last week, she cut down the tree in her back yard that was presented to her when her first book was published.

"It wasn't right," she explains, "for that thing to be standing when the hurricane ruined all the others." It seems that Miss Smith got panicky when she realized that sprouts of the tree were growing into her basement. There were two others just like it growing in the back of the yard, on 315 E. Rosemary St., and she never had cared too much for it anyway, she says, so down it came.

LARGE FAMILY

Betty Smith grew up in a large family, and now lives with her daughter and three grandchildren, but says that "The greatest present I can have is to be by myself." She quit school after the eighth grade (at the age of 13), but studied for four years at the University of Michigan, did graduate work in playwriting at Yale and says she has read an average of a book a day for as long as she can remember.

After growing up in a town where even the weeds have to force themselves up between cracks in the concrete, she is still ecstatic about the trees in Chapel Hill.

And, although she says she's so afraid of water that she trembles when she hears the roar of waves in the night, Miss Smith can say that "I'm never so happy as when I'm near the ocean!

"Music is very evocative," she maintains. "I was brought up in a dancing part of the city, and when I hear a popular song I can almost always remember where and when it was played, and what kind of clothes the people were wearing."

NEW STORY

A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, she remembers, was relatively easy to write. Now, she says, knowing that people expect her to surpass or at least equal her first triumph, she must proceed with caution. She is currently working on a story of the Depression period, but seems to be finding it hard going. Everything was drab and bleak, she explains, and it is difficult to find the color necessary to make an interesting book.

Miss Smith says she now does most of her writing at Nags Head, where she can have both the ocean atmosphere and the solitude she prizes so highly. There, too, she is free of social obligations, which she says she despises. With her long, dark hair in a pony tail, and dressed in comfortable clothes, she spends a large part of each day fishing, acquiring a year-round suntan in the process. At night, she reads or visits the local Bingo emporium, where she says she's picked up an impressive mass of loot, including two TV sets, a refrigerator and an electric range.

On her next trip to Nags Head she plans to go duck hunting. The sport fascinates her, she says, even though she's never even plinked a pigeon.

Dr. James Andrews, Chemist:

Professor To Go To Formosa

Dr. James C. Andrews, professor and chairman of the department of biochemistry and nutrition here, has accepted an invitation of the Foreign Operations Administration to go to Formosa (Taiwan) to serve as consultant for the School of Medicine of the National Taiwan University during the next six months.

He has been granted a leave by the executive committee of the University Trustees.

Taipei, the largest city in Taiwan, is the present capital of free China, and the university there is being partially supported by the FOA as a part of our support of the Chiang Kai Shek government.

The teaching program in the university is carried on in the more or less official Mandarin Chinese, Dr. Andrews said. It is an attempt to standardize the language, since the present population of the island employs about 15 different Chinese dialects.

Dr. Andrews plans to be in Formosa from Jan. 1 to next July. After his term as consultant expires, he expects to return by way of India and the Mediterranean, arriving about September 1.

A native of Indiana, Dr. Andrews received his B.S. degree in chemistry from State University of Iowa and his Ph.D. from Columbia.

Clausen is professor of jurisprudence at the University of Copenhagen and is also a noted Danish dramatist. He is author of the leading Scandinavian treatise on the theory and technique of the theater.

Carolina Varsity Swimmers Meet Blue Devils At Duke Today

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

Observers on hand at Monday night's affray between the Carolina and Wake Forest frosh cagers came away mumbling about the power potential of next year's varsity.

It is a little premature, perhaps, to begin speculating on next year's potential, but there are three or four frosh players who appear ear-marked for extensive action on the varsity next season. Tommy Kearns, who played second fiddle to Joe Quigg and Pete Brennan in the first four games, came into his own Monday night.

Kearns' type is a rarity nowadays. He is one of those under-six-foot phenomena seldom found on the basketball court anymore. Very stockily built and fast like a jack rabbit, his favorite play is a daring, underhanded drive shot, which he seldom misses. In the process of executing his drive play, the diminutive Kearns is invariably fouled. He was granted 21 gratis tosses Monday night, 16 of which he sunk. His total for the night was 43. Needless to say, he has a pretty fair eye for the basket.

Another previously unsung, if not unnoticed, performer, in the person of Charlie Adams, made his presence known against the Deac yearlings. Adams, a six-foot product of North Carolina high school cage play, broke into the starting lineup, and teamed with Kearns at the other guard slot to produce a fast, clever fast-break team. In addition to his adroit assists of the fas break, Adams dropped in 11 points.

A few words will suffice in mentioning Quigg and Brennan. Both of the tall school, 6'7" and 6'5", respectively, they continue to lead the Tar Babies in scoring. Wake Forest had several big, albeit clumsy, men, who were fairly successful in bottling up UNC's two tall men. Quigg was held to 17 points, Brennan to 16.

Basketball teams participating in the Dixie Classic December 27-29 will gross about $6,000 each. Each team will be allotted $2,000 for expenses, plus 10 per cent of the gate. Host N. C. State gets an additional 10 per cent for underwriting the tournament. In addition to the host Big Four teams, other participants in this year's Classic will be West Virginia, Minnesota, South California, and Cornell.

The Tar Heels drew Southern Cal for their opener on the afternoon of the 27th.

Marine Lt. Bob Mathias, Olympic Decathalon champion and former Stanford University gridder, said recently that his future plans will leave no time for professional football after he returns to civilian life.

A couple of years ago, Mathias drew considerable national attention by quitting the Stanford football team, excusing himself with the sttaement that the players were under too much pressure as a result of overemphasis of the sport.

Whereupon, Ed Danforth, well-known Atlanta sportswriter, took him to task in an article which appeared in a widely-read national magazine. Danforth began by acknowledging Mathias' excellent athletic record as an Olympic hero, and at the same time the writer drew a line betwen contact and non-contact sports.

In his clinching sentence, chastising Mathias for quitting football and then criticizing the sport, Danforth said very succinctly: A lot of boys have found out that football is a rough sport, and a lot of them have quit, Bob. The only difference between them and you is that you are wired for sound.

La Salle Tops Weekly Poll; State 4th, Wake Forest 17th

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

La Salle's NCAA champions headed the nation's college basketball teams yesterday in the first weekly Associated Press poll but the talented Explorers and at least four other members of the elite top 10 are heading for stormy weather—and quick.

In addition to the leaders from Philadelphia, third-ranked Illinois, fifth-ranked Dayton, seventh-ranked Indiana and eighth-ranked UCLA face menacing opposition this week. The other members of the first 10—Kentucky, No. 2; North Carolina State, No. 4; Missouri, No. 6; Duquesne, No. 9; and Niagara, No. 10—appear safe for the rest of the week, maybe.

La Salle 4-0 should breeze past Lafayette tonight Wednesday but Saturday the Explorers get a formidable test when they take on Jack Gardner's unbeaten Utah quintet 6-0 in New York's Madison Square Garden. That one shapes up as the game of the week.

Illinois 3-0 meets Miami Ohio tonight and then journeys to South Bend to tackle Notre Dame's 3-1 20th ranking team on the Irish court. Dayton's tall Flyers 4-0 bump into real trouble tonight when they plya host to a fine Louisville 6-0 squad which is ranked 12th.

Indiana 2-2, beaten twice already, travels to Cincinnati Saturday to oppose the rugged U. of C. Bearcats who had a 4-0 record through Monday night's games.

UCLA 3-0 plays two games on foreign courts, meeting Santa Clara Friday and San Francisco Saturday in the San Francisco Cow Palace.

Kentucky 2-0 entertains Temple Saturday, N. C. State 5-0 faces Clemson, South Carolina and Texas Tech in a hectic week, Missouri 3-1 plays Arkansas Wednesday, Duquesne 2-1 hosts College of Pacific Wednesday, and Niagara 3-1 takes on Cornell, Syracuse and Toledo in a busy week.

Duquesne, which lost to George Washington 71-64 in the Steel Bowl final without star Si Green in the lineup, will have the springy Brooklyn Negro back in uniform. Green, rated a fine All-America prospect, suffered an appendicitis attack before the G. W. game and was taken to a hospital. The doctors, however decided an operation would not be necessary at this time.

George Washington, ranked 11th on its 3-0 record, meets tough Wake Forest 4-1 Tuesday night.

In all 12 of the first 20 teams in the poll were unbeaten through Monday night. By late Saturday night at least half may be out of the all-winning group.

Frosh Journey To Buies Creek For Cage Tilt

Carolina's high-flying freshman basketball team journeys to Buies Creek tomorrow night, to take on the Campbell Junior College Jayvees, in a game which Buck Freeman's five hopes to make their sixth straight win of the season.

The Carolina quint, paced prior to last Monday night's game with Wake Forest by Joe Quigg and Pete Brennan, turned up a new star on the court in the person of guard Tommy Karns, who bucketed 32 points to lead the Tar Baby quintet to a 93-72 win over the Deaclets of Wake Forest.

However Quigg and Brennan remanied in the van of the Tar Baby five. Quigg had a great night on defense, and Brennan contributed 16 points before fouling out of the contest.

The squad will leave tomorrow afternoon for the journey to Buies Qreek, which is located 17 miles south of Raleigh.

'Athlete Of The Week'

SOPHOMORE LENNIE ROSENBLUTH (above) has been selected by the sports staff of The Daily Tar Heel as "Athlete of the Week" for the second week in succession. This makes the first time this year that any Tar Heel has won twice in a row. Rosenbluth was chosen this week for his performance Saturday night against William and Mary. In that game he scored 39 points, canning 11 of 12 free throws and 14 of 27 field goal attempts. He leads the Atlantic Coast Conference in total points with 106 in three games for a 35.3 average.

Americans Picked To Top Swedes Tomorrow

By WILL GRIMSLEY

BRISBANE, Australia, Wednesday, Dec. 15 (AP)—Vic Seixas and Tony Trabert are heavily favored to give America victory over Sweden in the interzone Davis Cup tennis finals starting here Thursday, despite the sparkling form and brash confidence of the European champions.

"The devil may be impressed but not I," said 29-year-old Lennart Bergelin. "I have beaten better players than these two Yanks.

"In my mind, I think we should lose 5-0 but in my heart I have the feeling we may upset them," said the towering Swede.

Bergelin and Davidson, for whom the world is a tennis court, are Sweden's nominees to try to pull one of the major court upsets of all time by whipping the Americans in a best-of-five series on the Milton Courts Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Two singles matches are scheduled for Thursday, the doubles on Friday and the final two singles on Saturday. The victors qualify to meet Australia in the challenge round in Sydney Dec. 27-29.

The Swedes' performances in practice have been so sharp that many observers are predicting a surprise for the Yanks, whose captain, Bill Talbert, is out on a limb with a forecast of a 5-0 American sweep.

Gunner Galin, Sweden's diminutive nonplaying leader, who has been most conservative, had to acknowledge today that Bergelin's play has been so brilliant in practice that he himself is surprised.

"I have never seen Lennart play this way," Galin said. "He is playing much better than when he was here in 1951."

Adrian Quist, former Australian ace, who doubles as a newspaper and radio commentator, said he felt Trabert is in danger of losing both singles matches on present form.

Trabert, still bothered by "Wimbledon blisters," has failed to show the strong stroking powers he displayed in 1953 when he won the U. S. championship and played the star role in the Davis Cup challenge round.

Tar Heel Tankmen Are Favored Match Slated For 4:30 O'clock

UNC, Expected To Give State Battle For ACC Title, Broke Three Records Against Bainbridge Team

Carolina's varsity swimming team, which set three records in its opening meet with Bainbridge Naval Training Station, is favored to cop its second victory of the season this afternoon in a match with Duke.

The first event at the Duke Indoor Pool is slated for 4:30 o'clock.

The Tar Heels easily out-swam the Naval lads, 45-39, last week, and the team is in top shape for this meet.

Duke, on the other hand, has lost its only meet to date, dropping a decision to Clemson last Friday.

In defeating Bainbridge, Coach Ralph Casey's tankmen topped two Atlantic Coast Conference marks and one school record.

Phil Drake broke the UNC mark of 2:40.8 in the 200-yard breaststroke with a 2:38.8 performance, while Charlie Krepp cracked the ACC 200-yard backstroke mark with 2:14.4. Krepp's mark does not go into theACC records, however, as the match was not an inter-conference one.

The Tar Heel medley relay team of Krepp, Drake and Larry Shannon bettered the 2:58.8 conference mark with 2:54.9 in the event, but this record also does not go into the books.

The team is undoubtedly one of the best in the circuit and is a hot favorite to give N. C. State's championship Wolfpack a run for the ACC title. Nine lettermen are returning to the club, along with a host of outstanding swimmers from last year's freshman club.

Carolina was second in ACC competition to State last season, having a 4-2 mark.

Football Has Drop In Gate

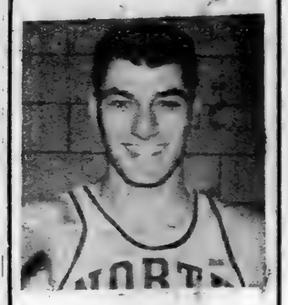
By HAROLD CLASSEN

The Associated Press

Approximately 83 less persons crowded their way into the stadiums for every major college football game in 1954 than in 1953, The Associated Press' annual attendance survey showed today.

Spectacular gains in the Midlands were offset by drastic drops in the Southern areas and minor slides in both East and Pacific Coast sectors with the result that the national figures are down three-tenths of a point. This wiped out an identical rise of a year ago over 1952.

The sprawling and interlocking major conferences of the Midlands —the big 10, Big Seven, Southwest, Missouri Valley and Skyline Eight—kept the decline from being more severe. The Skyline Eight led the advances with an increase of 12.1 while Big Seven crowds were 11.8 per cent larger.



Those in the Big 10 were 6 per cent larger while the Missouri Valley was 6.3 per cent more prosperous and the Southwest 6.1.

Except for a huge increase at Wichita University, home of the Missouri Valley champions, the rise through the Midlands was general. The average attendance at each of Wichita's six home games was 5,000 greater in 1954 over 1953.

This was in sharp contrast in the East and South. The Ivy League's 7.2 drop was almost entirely accounted for by the whopping 120,000 decrease at the University of Pennsylvania, whose Quakers also failed to win a game. The Penn attendance dwindled from 397,000 in 1953 to 272,000. Each year the Quakers played eight games before the homefolk.

In the Atlantic Coast Conference it was Maryland with a drop of 33,500 that brought down the average and the Southeastern Conference, whose drop of 18.9 was the most severe of any major circuit, showed Kentucky, Louisiana State, Mississippi State, Tulane and Alabama failing to equal their 1953 turnstile appeal.

Dolphins Shape Up As Strongest In Years

UNC Hot Contender For Track Title

By RAY LINKER

North Carolina will be among the top contenders for the Atlantic Coast Conference indoor track crown when the ACC meet is held in Woollen gym on February 26.

As in the past it will be a contest among UNC, Maryland, and Duke for the top spot. Maryland has been the strongest in recent years, but the other teams are building.

The record book showing the year-by-year results since the Indoor Games were founded (in 1930 by former Director of Athletics Coach Bob Fetzer) indicates that the Tar Heels have established a great tradition in track through 1952. The list has Duke as winners only three times and Maryland once, but the Terps have captured the last two championships, which are not shown. The only other teams that finished first were William and Mary in 1930 (when the conference included the present Southern, Southeastern, and ACC) and Navy and N. C. Preflight teams during the war years of 1944 and 1945 when the games had no conference division play was by invitation.

In running up their long string of team victories, the Tar Heels have carried away many individual trophies, too. The record book shows that out of 281 individual awards over the 23-year period, North Carolina has had 88 champions, to lead in this area, also. Duke has had two and Maryland 47.

The Tar Heels have proven strongest in the high jump, winning 11 of the 23 crowns. They have taken 10 individual championships in both the pole valut and the 70-yard low hurdles, and have captured nine titles in both the mile and the 70-yard high hurdles.

Through 1952 the two top individual scorers for a single game have been Tar Heels. They are Bill Albans and Bill Corpening. Albans won five first places in 1949—the high jump, low hurdles, high hurdles, broad jump, and the 60-yard dash. His high jump of 6 feet 4⅛ inches was for a meet record, as was his low hurdle run of 7.6 seconds.

Corpening ran in 1940 what was then two world record times—a 8.5 in the high hurdles and a 7.8 in the lows. He captured four first places as he also set a since-erased 6'3" record for the high jump and won the broad jump.

The North Carolina team will mill the services of sprinter Jeff Newton, who set a new meet record last year with a 6.2 in the 60-yard dash, but this year's team will have several who stood out as frosh in last years met. The Tar Heels will use these men to help them field a stronger team, which is hoping to make it win number 17 for Carolina in the Twenty-Sixth annual Indoor Games.

Wrestlers Strong On Offense, Lack Defense

By AL KORSCHUN

The 1954-'55 ediditon of the Carolina wrestling team goes into its second match with Duke at Durham on Friday. According to wrestling coach Sam Barnes, "this year's team is stronger offensively than last year's but defense is our question mark. We have a strong first string but lack depth and an injury at most any position will hurt our chances for a sucessful season."

Co-Captains Miles Gregory and Pete McGhee will lead the highly spirited grapplers into Friday's meet. Gregory will wrestle in the 177 lb. class. Last year after recovering from a pre-season ankle injury, Miles went on to win five matches while losing only one and led the team in the won and lost column. Perhaps two of Gregory's greatest wrestling assets are his fine competitive spirit and his consistency to come through with important victories when the chips are down As a junior, Miles was runnerup for the Southern Conference 177 lb. crown and as a senior he won the Patterson trophy for excellence in scholarship and athletics. He is a first year med student. Co-Captain Mc Ghee, a four year wrestler at Carolina and also a crosscountry letterman. will wrestle at 147 lb. for the Tar Heels. Like Gregory, McGhee is also a fine competitor and showed this quality in last year's Davidson match when he pinned Johnny Buxton in one of the most hard fought matches of the year.

In the 123 and 130 lb. classes, Coach Barnes has Willie Gray and Bob Thornton, respectively, both of whom are up from last years freshmen team. Neither Gray nor Thornton had had previous experience prior to coming to UNC and both have shown considerable improvement over last year.

In the 137 lb. class either Hugh Cowan or Gene Thompson will wrestle. Cowan was Co-Captain of last year's freshman team and was undefeated, while Thompson, though having had no previous experience prior to last year, was on the Varsity squad.

In the middleweight classes Arthur Gregory, Miles' cousin, will wrestle at 157 and newcomer Hugh Barwick will be at 167. Arthur was Co-Captain of the team last year and in 1953 took third place in the Southern Conference tournament. Barwick impressed the coaches with the potential he showed in the Intramural tournament and this potential has blossomed forth in early practice.

Two promising heavyweight contenders are letterman Karl Bargely and ex-Marine Roger Dalehite. The return of sophomore Quincy Ayscue, who has been out with a bad knee, and both Bob Wagner and Broadus Thompson, who are ineligible until next semester, will greatly strengthen the team's depth in February.

The team has been greatly aided by the help of 1954 AAU wrestling champion and former Cherry Point Marine wrestling coach Earl Hoffman, who has given invaluable pointers.

Harriers Seek Many Awards

When the grand finale of the indoor track season rolls around in the form of the Indoor Games on February 26, many individuals and teams will be trying for the numerous awards that are given each year.

The first four men finishing in each event will pick up medals; the winner will receive a gold one, the second placer silver, the third man bronze, and the fourth man a gold-bronze medal. Plaques are awarded to the team champions in each of the four divisions, which are Conference, Non-Conference, All Freshman, and the Scholastic Division.

The Weil Mile award and the Robert A. Fetzer Trophy are the most sought after awards in the conference group. The Weil Mile was begun in 1939 when the late Lionel Weil of Goldsboro established a trophy for the Conference mile winner. Lionel Weil, Jr., who was a fine quarter-miler in his student days continued the award, and it is now perpetuated by Mrs. Courtney Mitchell, Jr. of Kinston. Some of the Games most thrilling races have been in the Weil Mile.

Eleven Lettermen, Plus Three Ex-Frosh Stars Bolster Squad

Krepp, Drake, McInnis Graduate To Varsity; Shannon, Heeman, Baker Back From Last Year

By BOB COLBERT

The Blue Dolphins face a tough schedule this year, as in past years, but this looks to be one of the best teams since All-American Jimmy Thomas graduated.

Featuring three members of last year's undefeated freshman team and 11 returning lettermen, Coach Ralph Casey is looking forward to an excellent season.

Charlie Krepp from Baltimore, Md., Phil Drake from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and Dave McInnis from Sumpter, S. C., are the three outstanding men from the frosh team who are being heavily counted upon this season.

Krepp swims the backstroke and distance events equally well. He placed in the top ten backstrokers at last year's Nationals. In practice, he has already bettered the ACC 200-yard backstroke record.

Drake, an outstanding swimmer in high school, has continued his feats at Carolina. He also placed in the Nationals last year. He is mainly a breast stroker but also swims the individual medley.

McInnis has become the team's number one diver this year, overshadowing ACC John Hussey in practice.

Returning lettermen include Co-captains Warren Meeman and Larry Sahnnon, Dick Baker, Bob Linker, Tom Gill, Charles Perry, John Hussey, Pete Higgins, Lee Holmes, Pete Dannenbaum and Smith Jewell.

Heemann, a senior from Baltimore, Md., has improved over last year. He swims the individual medley, as well as freestyle, backstroke, and breaststroke events.

Shannon, from Birmingham, Alabama, is the stop-gap member of the team. His freshman and sophomore years, Larry swam distance. Last year the team needed a breaststroker, so Larry swam breaststroke. This year, he is alternating between distance and sprints.

Baker, a junior from Greensboro, has turned in some good times in sprints this year and is expected by Coach Casey to give the 50 and 100 yard records a "run for their money."

Linker and Jewell are the returning backstrokers, however, Smitty is in dental school and finds it hard to practice, while Bobby has been sidelined with virus pneumonia. Both are expected to see more action next semester.

The distance men on the team are Holmes, Tommy Gill, and Pete Higgins. They have been fighting for the best times, and have turned in some of the best races in practice.

This year's team faces a tough schedule which includes two meets with nemesis N.C. State and a newcomer, Michigan. Other opponents include Clemson, Duke, Virginia and Bainbridge, defeated 45-39 in this season's opener.

The freshmen are also very strong. Termed by Ralph Casey as "the best we've had in a long time," it features Walt Rose who set three new records last week against High Point High School. Also outstanding on the team are Bill Roth in the sprints, Ned Meekins, diving, Parker Ward and Ed Shawley in the backstroke, Jake Smith in the distant events, and Mac Mahaffey and Tom Maury in the breastroke.

Mural Office Unsung, Laboring Organization

By BOB DILLARD

The section of the Department of Physical Education known as Intramurals is one of the unsung, and hardest working organizations for students' benefit to be found on the UNC campus.

Headed by Walter Rabb, the department, with an office staff of two able Carolina students, George McGinty and Bill Williams, puts many hours of work into formulating a plan which will enable Carolina students to take part in an athletic program without devoting hours to practice.

Under the direction of these three men, tournaments in almost every sport that can be played at the University are arranged. These tournaments offer any organization on the campus a chance to glean honor and recognition of outstanding athletic ability. An example of this is the All-Campus Tag Football team, recently selected from the ranks of players who took part in the fall sport. In addition to these honors, trophies, cups, and awards are presented annually to the best organizations and individuals in the various sports offered by the department.

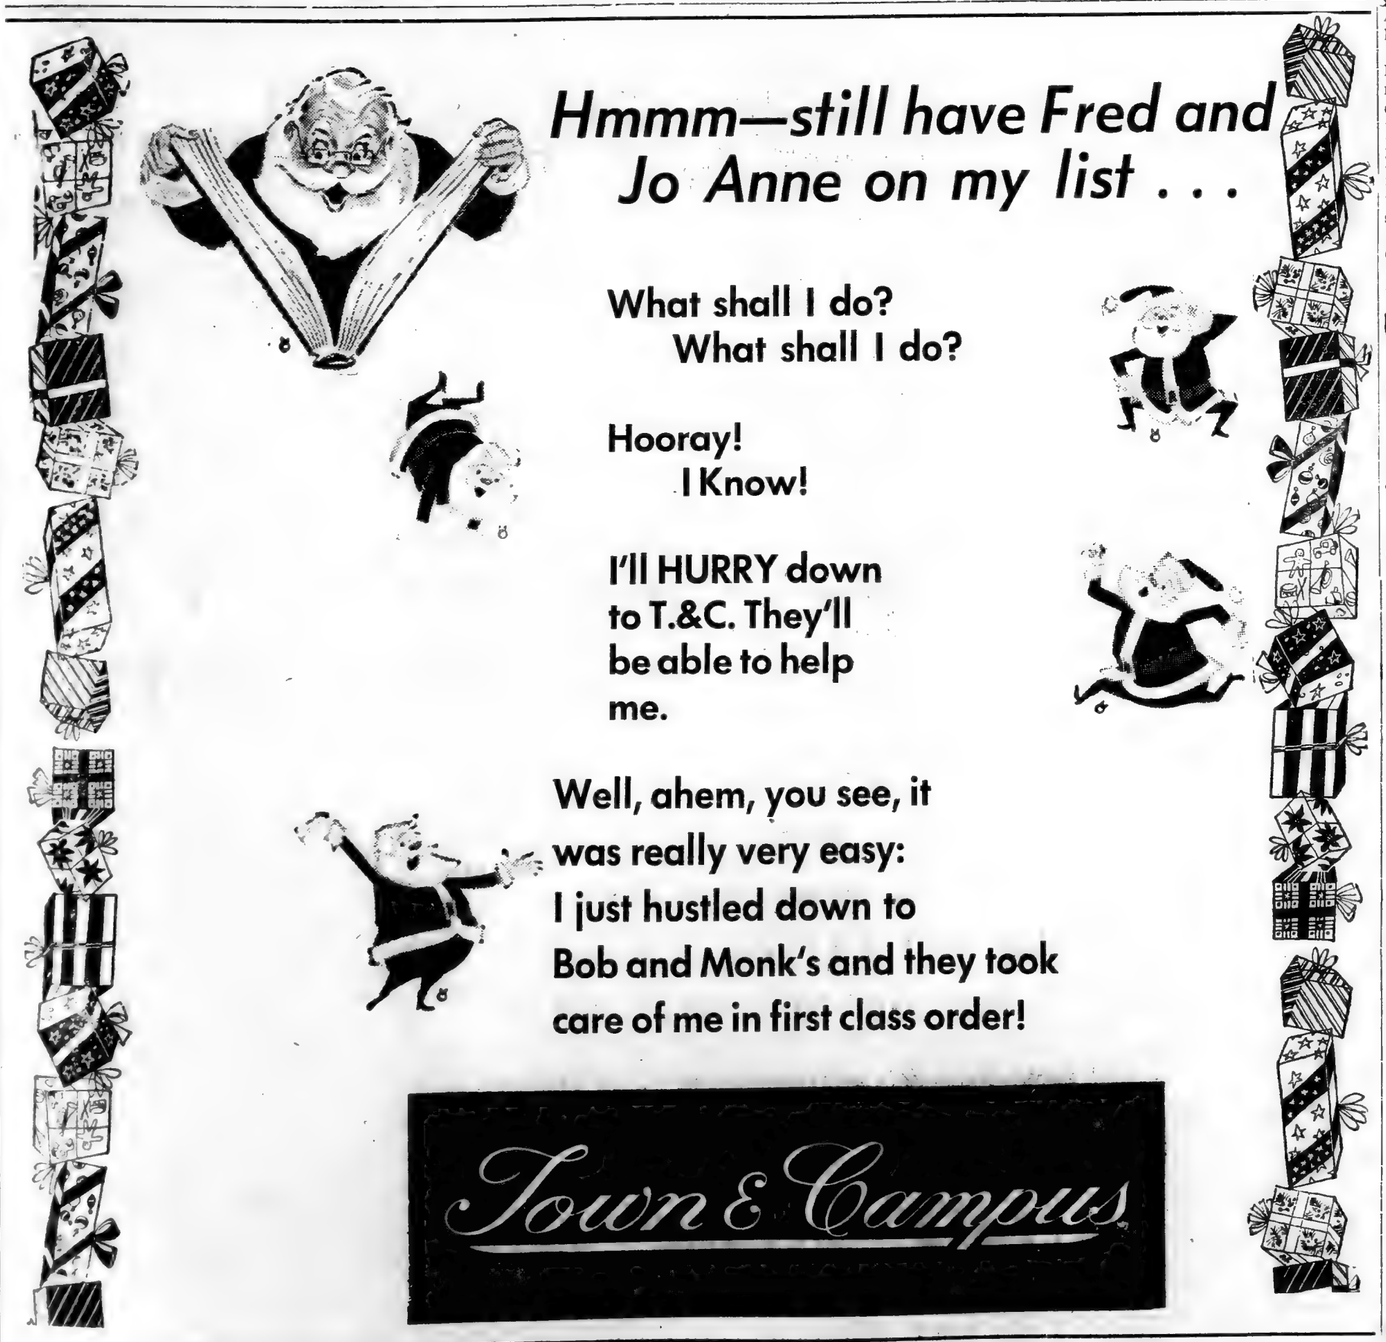
Even such forms of recreation as chess are included in the department's plan for giving the Carolina student an opportunity to take part in some form of competition.

At present, the major emphasis in the department is placed upon basketball. Preceding the present sport, highly successful tournaments in tag football, volleyball, wrestling, and badminton have been conducted for the University students. Much time and effort has gone into producing the plans for these tournaments. Hours of work are necessary to draw up the schedule of contests and to tabulate the results for the final standings. Competent officials must be trained for each sport. Along with these major items, many other details which arise on a moment's notice, such as problems coming from postponed games, are ably handled by Rabb and his assistants.

Also tied in with the department's regular staff are the members of the coaching staffs of the various varsity sports. Many of these coaches give up their own time to make themselves available for consultation and advice.

Largely through the efforts of the aforementioned men and students, a well balanced program of Intramural athletics is placed bebore the male and coed students at Carolina.

Duke Drills For Miami Bowl



DURHAM, N. C., Dec. 14 (AP)—Duke University's Blue Devils returned to the practice field after a two-day lay-off today and were greeted—as usual—with bad weather.

While the sun came out late this afternoon, the practice fields were soggy and wet due to heavy rains which fell last night and continued this morning.

But the Blue Devils are used to it by now. Since they started drills for the Orange Bowl clash with Nebraska they have had to contend with snow, ice and rain which has left the regular practice fields in a quagmire. They have been doing most of their work on the freshman football field which adjoins the west side parking area of Duke Stadium.

Coach Bill Murray planned to use the nine days of drill before the Christmas holidays for conditioning exercises and it is just as well for the weather has made it impossible to do little else.

The Blue Devils have just three more practices before leaving for their homes on Saturday. They work tomorrow, Thursday and Friday and then resume drills at the University of Miami on December 27.

'Sound & Fury' Tomorrow Night

MISS ELLEN OZON

'Fury' Not Too Raunchy, But Good, Says Sherman

"We hope people will come with a light hearted attitude and be out for a good night of entertainment," said Lew Sherman, co-chairman of the Graham Memorial Activities Board dance committee, yesterday concerning the coming production of the newly reorganized Sound and Fury.

The reorganization of the stock company is being sponsored by the dance committee.

The show, which will be given tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall, is a satire on Broadway and Hollywood productions according to Sherman.

In explaining the purpose of reorganization of Sound and Fury, Sherman said, "During the war there was a Sound and Fury group. These people were originally Playmakers who broke from them due to dissatisfaction, and formed Sound and Fury. The shows they gave were on the type we have now except they were more raunchy than this one. As a result they were asked to disband. We are attempting to revive Sound and Fury.

"If this show is a success, which we feel it will be, Sound and Fury will again be an organization to stay. All we need is a little enthusiasm from the students on campus.

"By reviving it we are following their theme as far as locale, which is campus life," continued Sherman. "We are being a little suggestive, but at the same time we are keeping in mind what happened to the other Sound and Fury."

In describing the coming show, Sherman said, "Although we think we have a great show here, done in a professional manner, we are not professional. We are just students who are very much interested in giving this campus something which we feel is very worthwhile. The cast is working very hard on the show and is having a hell of a lot of fun doing it. We hope that people coming will have a hell of a lot of fun watching it."

The first part of the show entitled Can Can, puts Chapel Hill in Paris by way of student exchange, said Sherman. The second part concerns the daughter of a pajama factory magnate and is titled Pajama Dame.

Although the songs which are used in the show are from the Broadway productions, Can Can and Pajama Game, the scripe is original and pertains to campus life, according to Sherman.

"I feel we have the type of material in this show that the body would go for. The lines are quick, clever and get to the point. The songs and dances are very colorful, Sound and Fury will add color to Carolina."

Sherman urged that people in dormitories, sororities and fraternities be at Memorial Hall tomorrow night to support the people that represent their dorms, sororities and fraternities.

"They have worked hard and long and deserve a packed theater," he concluded.

Dr. Richardson said the two courses, offering a well-balanced series of six meetings, were planned in cooperation with the doctors from the two sections. Credits earned in a course can be apice toward the fulfillment of the plied by doctors in general practrequirements of the American Academy of General Practice, he added.

The two postgraduate courses are a part of the Continuation Education medical program sponsored by the Medical School here and Extension Division. "Similar courses, held in many parts of the state during the past few years, have proved quited successful," Dr. Richardson asserted.

—New Cut System—

The new ruling will mean one more cut per semester as far as physical education classes are concerned. Allowed only two cuts under the present system, students will be able to take three cuts in physical education per semester. Said Marvin Allen of the Physical Education Department: "We're like any other department in the University, and will abide by any rule the Faculty Council passes."

IDC Wants Coke Machine Profits Returned To Dorms

By NEIL BASS

The Interdormitory Council, in a stormy session last evening, approved a resolution submitted by its Vending Machine Committee which, if approved by University officials, will return the profits made by vending machines in the dorms to the individual social funds of the designated student residences. The present profits amount, accordingly to the committees' chairman, Sam Wells, "to a sum approaching the $8,000 figure," and are being used to finance tuition scholarships.

The resolution reportedly has the sanction of Dean Fred Weaver and a number of other influential University administrators. The profits distribution proposal states in part that "it has long been evident that the present dorm funds are very inadequate. In order to provide a suitable program 40% of the profits should be returned to the dorm's funds and divided out on a per capita basis.

TAYLOR ASSERTS DORM EXPRESSION RIGHTS

"Whereas residents of the men's dormitories of the University of North Carolina have the right to discuss and take stands on issues of pertinence, be it resolved by the IDC that residents of men's dorms be reminded of this right and urged to make use of it." So read a resolution introduced at the session by Raymond Taylor, president of Old West Dormitory.

The resolution evolved from a statement by Jack Horner, Durham Morning Herald sports editor, that "the administration should issue a statement and throw cold water on groups like Old West."

Horner's statement was in reply to a defeated resolution by Old West that "the dorm go on record as favoring the employment of Jim Tatum to succeed present grid mentor Barclay."

Santa, I Want A 20-Year-Old, Blonde Doll!

WILMINGTON (AP) — The Wilmington Morning Star has opened its news columns to letters to Santa Claus from children in the Cape Fear area.

Yesterday, The Star received the following letter:

Dear Santa,

I am a little boy 24 years old. I have been a good little boy all year. For Christmas I want a little doll about five feet two inches tall, blonde hair, blue eyes and about 20 years old.

I also want a discharge from the Marine Corps.

Love,
Smoky.

P.S. The doll may look like Marilyn Monroe.

The letter was postmarked "U. S. Marine Corps, Camp Lejeune, N. C."

FRANK WARREN JR.
. . . society's speaker

Warren Named To Lead Phi

The Phi has made its mark up on my life. . . and though I live to be the oldest man, this mark shall never be erased," said Frank Warren Jr., who was elected speaker of the Philanthropic Literary Society this week.

Warren is a junior from Snow Hill. He is a member of the Student Party and was elected sergeant-at-arms in their recent elections.

Others who were elected are: Lawrence Matthews, speaker pro em. Harold Downing, parliamentarian; John Curtis, critic; Dick Albert, clerk; Hill Johnston, sergeant-at-arms.

Bill Porterfield, treasurer, and Louis Brumfield, representative to the debate council.

After the elections were over, Brumfield, outgoing speaker, expressed his hope that the Phi would have a better year under the new leadership. He added that the Phi longer "has to worry" considering the quality, though not necessarily the quantity of its now members.

Clausen Speaks

"Recent Developments and Tendencies In Political Science" will be discussed by Professor Sven Clausen tonight at 8:30 in the Assembly Room of the Library.

Clausen, Witney-Fullbright visiting lecturer, is here for just the semester, after which time he is to return to the University of Copenhagen, where he is a professor of jurisprudence.

The program is being presented by Pi Sigma Alpha, national political science fraternity.

The meeting is open to students and townspeople.

About Fee Raise, Says Creasy

Talk To Legislators

UNC's student body President Tom Creasy, in a statement released to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday, urged all Consolidated University students to "ask their local state legislators to oppose the proposed cut in the University's budget."

The budget will come up in the state legislature on Jan. 5 as a part of the whole state budget, and rumors from some quarter throughout the state have indicated a $50,000 cut in the University's apportionment for the 1955-56 period.

Creasy said "the Christmas holidays offer the perfect opportunity for students to contact their respective legislators and ask them to oppose the cut, which will probably mean a raise in tuition."

Some legislators and member of the Budget Commission have suggested that a raise in dormitory rent fees would be in order as they think that "these fees are too low."

This suggestion has been opposed by University officials, however, as only 60 percent of the students live in dorms and this percentage would be making up the deficit for the whole student body.

Creasy continued that, "nobody seems to want a tuition raise and now is the time for the students themselves (who probably want it least of all) to fight the cut in the University budget."

Charlotte Club

The Charlotte-Carolina Club will present its Christmas dance on Dec. 27 in the Radio Center Auditorium on Charlotte.

Bids may be obtained from Billy Knaff at the Sigma Chi house, Earl Daniel in Vance Dormitory and Miss Nancy Whisnant in McIver.

Student Legislature

The UNC student legislature will not convene for its weekly session this evening.

By laws of the student representative group state that legislators are to meet every week throughout the fall and spring semesters, excluding the week prior to and after duly set forth holidays.

'Caine Mutiny' Coming Here

The road company of "The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial," which will star Paul Douglas, Wendell Corey and Steve Brodie, will play here in Memorial Hall on the nights of Jan. 14 and 15.

Directed by Charles Laughton, who directed the Broadway cast of the play, the company is now on cross-country tour and has won reviews which "indicate it is fully as good if not better, than the original cast," say the Carolina Playmakers management.

Wendell Corey has recently finished a West Coast tour of the play, "Sabrina Fair." Douglas won his Broadway success in the play, "Born Yesterday."

Tickets for the show are on sale to the public at 214 Abernathy Hall.

Wallace Has Formula

Said Genial Jimmy Wallace, long-time student and present instructor and director of Graham Memorial, yesterday:

"Every guy and gal on the cmapus has a quiz on Friday. But Sound and Fury is on Thursday night.

"So what you-all ought to do is go to Sound and Fury from 8 to 10 p.m., study like hell from 10 to 2, sleep a while, get up and take your quiz and go home.

"We wish you a merry Christmas," said Wallace, "But to make it merrier, and to make the merriment meaningful, see Sound and Fury—even if you don't study from 10 to 2."

'Scandals' At 8 p.m., Memorial Hall Tonight

"The Return of Sound and Fury" will take place tonight in Memorial Hall with the opening of the "Scandals of '55" at 8 o'clock.

With a cast of 45 students, including semi-clad girls, boisterous baritones, a special background of "topnotch scenery and music furnished by a "red hot jazz combo," the show will be made up of take-offs on two currently popular Broadway musicals.

"Can Can," the first part of the show, and taken from the muscial of the same name, will star Bo Bernardin (also the show's director), Ken Lowry, Carl Williams, Pat Seitz, Al Issac, Geri Turner, Blynn Derning, Jake Goforth and chorus.

"Pajama Dame" (from "Pajama Game") will star Ellen Ozon, John Whitty, Ulysse Lancaster, Tom Davis and chorus.

Lew Sherman, the show's producer, has described it as "suggestive but not raunchy." The script was written by the director, Miss Bernardin, and Joe Raff.

Max Warner (piano) is in charge of the music for the show and his combo is made up of Wyatt Dixon (electric guitar) Jake Phelps (bass viol) and Ted Simmons (drums).

Choreography is by Billy Barnes nad Blynn Derning and Jim Buyer is in charge of scenery with Hartwell Conklin head artist.

Both shows bring in a college background although "Can Can" is set in Paris. Some of the songs from the show are "Never, Never, Be An Artist," "Hernando's Hideaway." "I Am In Love" and "Can Can."

Henry Van Order is in charge of props and Chal Schley is doing lighting and special effects.

Tickets for the show will be on sale all day today at the Y and Graham Memorial. Admission price is 50 cents.

At Least One Killed In 1st 'Safety Day'

RALEIGH (AP) — Despite pleas from state and local officials and apparent cooperation from many motorists and pedestrians, North Carolina failed to make it through safe driving day yesterday without a traffic fatality.

The special highway safety promotion was marred after 14 apparently death free hours when Manuel Randall, 67, was struck and killed near Charlotte early yesterday afternoon.

At mid-afternoon, the State Highway Patrol reported it had received reports of 16 accidents with nine persons injured and one killed.

Col. James R. Smith, patrol commander, said most Tar Heels appeared "aware of the program and trying to cooperate." The patrol's more than 500 men were on duty in the mass safety campaign.

S-D Day marked the end of a perfect driving record for "Uncle Joe" Allman, 80, of Morganton. He had his first accident.

Patrolman M. A. Moines said Allman's car ran into the rear of another vehicle. Only minor damage resulted and no charges were filed. Allman said he had been driving since the first automobile came to Morganton.

Enrollment Is Climbing On U.S. Campuses

A continuing upward trend in enrollment on American campuses, including UNC, has been revealed in the 35th annual "School and Society" collegiate enrollment survey.

Prepared for the biweekly educational journal by Dr. Raymond Walter, president of the University of Cincinnati, the survey shows that the University here has a grand total enrollment this fall of 6,107, which is an increase of 6.6 per cent compared to the 1953 figure of 5,727.

Three To Get Moreheads:

Grants, Study Plans Announced

It has been announced by Dean D. D. Carroll, chairman of the faculty committee on scholarships, that three University seniors will be chosen by the University's nominating committee as candidates for the 1955-56 Morehead scholarships.

The scholarships, valued at $1,500 yearly, will be for study in the graduate or professional schools here. Candidtaes must have received or expect to receive their bachelors' degrees during the period from July 1, 1954 to Aug. 31, 1955. Only men are eligible for consideration. There is no age limitation.

Applications must be filed with the University committee by Jan. 7, 1955. Forms are available at the scholarship office, 1 Hanes Hall.

The three young men nominated from here will be in competition with students from other North Carolina colleges. The final selection for the awards will be made by the Central Committee and Board of Trustees of the John Motley Morehead Foundation.

The basis of selection is a list of qualities laid down by Morehead in creating the Foundation: scholastic ability and attainments; qualities of manhood, truthfulness, courage, devotion to duty, sympathy, kindliness, unselfishness and fellowship; evidence of moral force of character and of capacities to lead and to take an interest in his schoolmates, and physical vigor as shown by interest in competitive sports or in other ways.

According to Dean Carroll, some definite quality of distinction, whether in intellect, character or personality, or in any combination of these, is the most important requirement for a Morehead Scholarship, and it is upon this that committees will insist.

According to a statement from the Institute, males under the age of 35 are preferred. Other eligibility requirements are: United States citizenship; good academic record: good moral character, personality and adaptability; broad knowledge of the culture of the United States. and good health.

Applications for the scholarships are taken by the United States Student Department of the Institute of International Education, 1 East 67 Street, New York City.

British Summer Study

Summer study at British universities is open to American students in 1955, according to an announcement made by Kenneth Holland, president of the Institute of Internation.

Six-week courses will be offered at Oxford, Stratford on Avon and at the capital cities of London and Edinburgh, according to a statement made by the Institute.

A limited number of scholarships is available. Award and application forms can be secured from the Institute in New York or any of its regional offices. The deadline for applications to be returned is March 28, 1955.

According to the Institute, British Universities have combined annually since 1948 to organize a special program of summer schools. Courses are planned to serve the needs of well qualified undergraduates in their junior or senior years or of post-graduate students. In the past, participants have come from 15 to 25 different countries.

Ford Fellowship

The Behavioral Sciences Division of The Ford Foundation has announced a third annual competition for first year graduate fellowships in the behavioral sciences.

Under the terms of the program, stipends of $1,800 each are awarded to successful applicants who wish to study such behavior-

Industrial Workers' Earnings Are Down

"Although North Carolina has made splendid progress in the establishment of new industries and the expansion of old ones, the earnings of industrial workers in the state have fallen far behind those of the nation," said State Commissioner of Labor Frank Crane in an address to a dinner session of the University chapter of Delta Sigmas Pi last night.

The meeting was held at the Ranch House with George Douglas, president of the fraternity, presiding.

Crane explained that "The principal reason for the continued exxistence of these low average hourly and weekly earnings has been known for a long time." Some 75 per cent of North Carolina's factory employees are concentrated in the highly competitive textile industry and other non-durable goods industries in which wages traditionally are much lower than in such 'heavy' industries the coal, steel, automobile, machinery, chemical and electrical industries."

COMMISSIONER CRANE
. . . safety's up, though Carolina factory workers averaged increased very little in spite of the earnings of state workers as compared with those of workers throughout the United States, Commissioner Crane cited the state's average weekly earnings from 1948-54.

"The earnings of our manufacturing employees reached an all-time high of 80 per cent of national average in 1948; it decreased to 75 per cent in 1950 and just prior to the end of the 1950-52 biennium, fell to less than 70 per cent of the national average," he said. "In June, 1954, North $47.25 per yeek which amounted to only 65 per cent of the national average of $71.68 for that month."

The speaker pointed out that "Hourly earnings of the state's factory workers averaging $1.20 in June, 1952, had climbed to $1.25 by the same month in 1954. Because the average work week dropped from 39 to 37.8 hours in a number of industries, the average weekly earnings of workers increased very littl in spit of the five cents gain in average hourly earnings," he explained.

"In June, 1954, statistics showed that average weekly wages in manufacturing here had increased only 33 cents, sharply contrasting the experience of the previous biennial period, when the average weekly earnings of the state's factory workers increased 12 per cent," he said.

On the brighter side, Commissioner Crane said, "Substantial improvements were made in working conditions and safety practices. North Carolina's excellent record of productive and peaceful labor-management relations continued to be one of the most outstanding in the nation.

Jobs remained generally available too, he said, "despite the spotted curtailments her and there in some lines of production."

The certification of some 50,000 minors under 18 years of age, either for part time or full time employment, indicates that job opportunities remained comparatively abundant in the state, he pointed out.

GASTONIA (AP)—Paul Bryant was being tried in city court on a charge of selling liquor. Police testified he had a bad reputation for bootlegging.

"That's not right," Bryant told Recorder P. C. Froneberger. "I never sold any liquor in my life. I drink every drop I can get my hands on."

Judge Froneberger gave Bryant six months in jail.

The Word From The Chancellor

Chancellor House's statement read this way:

"The contract between the University of North Carolina and its head football coach, Mr. George Barclay, is a three-year contract with another year to run. There has never been any issue between Mr. Barclay and the University over the terms of the contract in any way. . ."

Translated. Mr. House's announcement served notice to win-happy alumni and everybody else who listened that the University is not going to be pressured into cancelling employees' contracts. Nobody—not even football coaches—gets thrown to the lions before his time is up.

A glance at next year's football schedule suggests Barclay's time may be up soon. But the Chancellor, as the leading actor in this annual drama, has acquitted himself and the University well. We probably stand to lose some alumni contributions, but that shouldn't have made Mr. House bat an eye. And it didn't.

Mr. Hoover & Academic Freedom

A letter from FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover has assured the editor of the student paper at the University of New Mexico that the FBI "would never engage in any activity which might result in stifling academic freedom."

This sane note may help silence the trumpets blasting against collegiate debate of the Red China admission issue. Hoover, who lost the faith of many people by what seemed to be a partisan attitude toward the Harry Dexter White episode, has done by this letter a good turn both to his agency and to the colleges.

It adds up, we'd say, to a stinging smack at Representative Robeson of Virginia and others like him. Mr. Robeson has written a Duke debater that what he said in debate might be used against him in later life.

This is the last measure of thought policing. The mode of the second Big Red Scare is to hold one responsible today for what he said and thought 20 years ago.

"A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little men," Emerson wrote, and that's still true. The right to change one's mind and to hold unpopular opinions seems self-evident, but it is being threatened. It is good to see Mr. Hoover affirm that it still exists.

Ode On A Grecian Riot

An ambiguity of American foreign policy has now resulted in a burst of anti-Americanism in Athens. Students at Athens University, marching through the streets about 4,000 strong, raised havoc over American support of British control of Cyprus.

Cyprus is vital; it is the focal point of British command in the Middle East. Has Greece gone downhill since she rose under the Truman Doctrine to slap Communistic agression in the face? We doubt that the Grecian attitude results as much from a change of face toward Russia as from a change of face toward American foreign policy.

The U. S. State Department knew it had to support British control of Cyprus several months ago. But from one corner of its mouth it uttered imposing talk about "liberation" behind the iron curtain. If we advocate liberation in the iron curtain countries, we must naturally support national determination in all European countries. Otherwise we are guilty of what Adlai Stevenson called "hollow moral pretentions."

Determination on one side of the curtain plus support of colonialism on the other adds up to inconsistency. That, we suppose, is what disturbs the Athenian students.

The problems of resurging nationalism and anti-Americanism in Europe are volcanoes. Unless our foreign policy shows to a consistent line (as it has not on the question of colonialism and self-determination) the volcanoes will spit with frequency and damage.

The Dean May Be A Good Fellow, But...

Louis Kraar

DEAN FRED Weaver, who for years has been listening to students tell what's wrong with the administration, told Student Party members the other night what was wrong with student government.

There was nothing pessimistic about the dean picking that topc. The students who invited him to their meeting chose it for him, and Dean Weaver admitted that "I'm here because I was faseinated by the title suggested."

After a half hour of qualifying statements, including a warning that "the dean's word is not to be taken as gospel," Dean Weaver got down to the ills of student government.

"FIND OUT the justification for the Honor System," the dean told some 20 students who attended. He cited the lack of understanding the Honor System among students.

"There s a jurisdictional confusion on campus in enforcing the Honor System and Campus Code," Weaver said, referring to the cluttered court system.

The "jurisdictional confusion," according to the dean, delays handling of "many important matters" as well as "paralyzing initiative."

"Let's get a real Student Council," Weaver suggested. "If it (the Student Council) is not going to manage the Honor System, let it be something great. Forget that it ever had anything to do with trying cases. . .and let it be a general, overriding executive group."

Exactly what Dean Weaver meant by making the Student Council an "overriding executive group," I'm not sure. But apparently, like many student leaders, he thinks that the Student Council should do more than hear appeal cases from other courts and rule on the constitutionality of laws.

Right now the Student Council is a group of student leaders who rarely meet and whose talents could be much more fully untilized.

"WE DON'T give enough attention to foreign students here," the dean said. "Student government ought to support foreign students."

Weaver suggested that several industrial and educational groups would probably be willing to foot the bill, or part of it, if student government took the initiative.

This reporter is reminded of Weaver's remarks on foreign students last spring at the All-Campus Conference. He suggested then that fraternities might take in foreign students as a campus service.

CONSERVATIVELY dressed, but acting less conservative, Dean Weaver appeared candid and at ease as he spoke.

Perhaps his classroom experience this term teaching social science accounts for that. At any rate, one felt that Dean Weaver was enjoying the talk, and his humor at many points was refreshing.

"The dean is not a student," Weaver said in one of his many qualifying remarks. "The dean may be a good fellow, slap you on the back, drink with you in fraternity court—drink coffee, that is—but he can't be a student."

Before he said what was wrong with student government, Dean Weaver said that there were several "spedific rights about it." They included the preservation of student freedom, the work of the Carolina Forum and Inter Dormitory Council, and the activities of the political parties.

Despite Weaver's warning that the dean's word should "not be taken as gospel," this reporter feels that his suggestions on the courts, Student Council and Honor System will keep the campus politicians busy for the rest of the year.

The Knowland-Nixon Break

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower has made one important concession to military advisers who have been pushing him to take strong steps in China. These military men are chiefly Adm. Arthur Radford, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Gen. James Van Fleet, the Korea commander whose letter on troop-training contributed to Ike's election.

What the Presdent has agreed to is the use of the U. S. Navy to seize Red Chinese merchant vessels...if the United Nations fails in its attempt to free the 11 American airmen and two American civilians.

Eisenhower's concession on this point came only after a long series of debates inside the Nat-Security Council and the White House. During most of these debates the President leaned over backward against his military advisers.

The man who chiefly backed him up was General Matt Ridgway, Army Chief of Staff, who has so emphatically disagreed with Eisenhower on reducing the strength of the Armed Forces that he will probably be retired on his birthday in March. But, on the question of getting bogged down in a possible war in China, the two spoke the same language.

Admiral Radford, however, is one of the most charming and persuasive military men in the Pentagon. Very much in the doghouse with the Truman Administration because of his open battle against the Air Force, Radford sweet-talked himself in to Ike's good graces during one short hour when Ike's plane refueled at Iwo Jima during the December, 1952, trip to Korea.

Ike then took Radford on the rest of the trip and he's been with him ever since.

Easy To Seize Reds

Radford, therfore, was able to talk Eisenhower into a promise that the U. S. Navy would be used to seize communist China shipping if the U. N. negotiations break down. He did this in part by showing how easy it has been for Chiang Kai-Shek's navy, reinforced by N. S. observation planes and using former U. S. warships, to capture Red Chinese shipping in the Formosa straits.

Red shipping has to pass through the relatively narrow waters between the Chinese mainland and Chiang's Formosa, where it is easy for Chiang to lay in wait and pick off ships almost at will.

Thus, without a blockade, Red China would not be able to communicate between the vitally important seaports of the South and those of the North, about the same thing as cutting New York—Philadelphia—Boston off from Baltimere—Norfolk—Miami—New Orleans.

NOTE...Ike was of the opinion that the U. N. mission would succeed and that a showdown with the Red China navy would not be necessary.

Washington Pipeline

The State Department has drawn up a secret list of 526 missing Americans...472 servicemen, 54 civlians...who have disappeared behind the bamboo curtain. The State Department is morally certain many are alive in communist prisons, has asked Central Intelligence to locate them...If our agents in China can find proof these men are alive, Uncle Sam will make a vigorous protest in the United Nations, then follow up with military pressure if necessary... The French are mssing 20,000 troops that the Reds were supposed to repatriate under the armistice agreement in Indo-China...The recent East German elections revealed that the number of voters has dropped by 238,181 in the last four years. Most are refugees who fled to the West...The administration is quietly tryng to arrange for Chief Justice Earl Warren to address a joint session of Congress. The Federal courts are in such urgent need of increased appropriations that a personal appeal from the Chef Justice is considered necessary to dramatize the need... For example, the Chief Justice... second most important official in the land...doesn't even have a limousine. He must either rent one or hail a cab to attend formal functions. Yet minor assistant secretares, attending the same functions, drive up in offical government limousnes...Ike and Mamie have four plush Presidential limousines between seven. Maybe they could loan one to the Chief Justice.

SEN. KNOWLAND
. . . out for the top job

Mr. Nix Vs. Mr. No

The inside story hasn't been told, but Bill Knowland's break with the administration isn't a personal split with President Eisenhower. It's resentment against Vice President Nixon.

Those who know Knowland know he's so bitter against his fellow Californian that he will automatically oppose anything Nixon favors. Since the Vice President is the "Voice—of—Ike" on Capitol Hill, this has the psychological effect of putting Knowland at odds with the administration on almost every issue.

Also at the back of Knowland's mind, his friends say, is an ambition to succeed the late Sen. Robert Taft as spokesman for the GOP conservative wing. If Ike declines to run again, Knowland is convinced the Republican Party will give its next Presidential nomination to the most promising conservative candidate. This explains why Knowland declined comment recently as to whether Ike should be drafted.

Or, if Ike does try for a second term, he may be forced to choose a conservative running mate for the sake of party harmony. In either case, Knowland would like to be the most available choice.

Vice President Nixon, as the tail to the Eisenhower kite, is obliged to go in the same direction as the President. Nixon does his best to determine the direction and guide the President. Frequently he has. It was he who for months laid down the appease-Joe policy. But, once the policy is laid down, Nixon faithfully follows the Eisenhower line. And once the White House lined up positively against McCarthy, no one worked harder behind the scenes against McCarthy than Nixon.

Knowland's friends swear this is the main reason the big, obstinate majority leader voted for McCarthy. It was Nixon, for example, who appointed the Censure Committee, including its Senate Chairman, Utah Sen. Arthur Watkins. Afterward, it was Nixon who persuaded Ike to congratulate Watkins.

This public endorsement of Watkins, plus Ike's press-confer ence remarks opposing Knowland's views on China, was interpreted by Knowland as a double—barreled public rebuke, engineered by Nixon.

Knowland has always resented the fact that Ike's chief liaison with the Senate has been through Nixon, rather than him. In the uast the Vice President has been more of a figurehead, with the Senate majority leader the chief contact with the White House.

Battle On 'The Rim Of Hell': President Vs. War Hawks

Chalmers M. Roberts

In The Reporter

Changes in foreign policy are sometimes heralded in major pronouncements by a President or a Secretary of State. More often they come gradually, almost unnoticed. The second kind of change has been taking place in Washington in recent weeks.

The shift has been from the top down rather than from the bottom up, and that has made assessment of the change more difficult. There has been no cranking out policy papers, which then work their tortuous way up through the bureaucratic levels to the National Security Council and finally to the President.

The change, to be precise, has taken place in Dwight D. Eisenhower. But because of the way the change has come about, the result has been uncertainty within the Government, especially at the two key operational departments, State and Defense. And if there has been uncertainty in Washington, there has been confusion throughout the nation.

What has happened is that the era of "instant retaliation" and "more bang for a buck" has been giving way to the "good partners" concept with our allies and to an intensive search by the President for what he has called a modus vivendi with the Communist world.

There is not going to be any dismantling of the Strategic Air Command, of course, nor will we stop putting our major dependence on the ever-growing "family" of atomic weapons. The President has not stopped believing that the long-range Soviet goal is world revolution and world domination, as he told a recent press conference.

The 'Middle Road'

What the President says about peace or atomic war at his press conferences may sound platitudinous in print, but if you are actually there the words take on an intensity that can only come from the deepest personal conviction. He seems to be thinking out loud, and in the process he reveals a lot about himself. That was certainly the case in his remarkably eloquent talk at the December 2 press conference, when he gave his clearest exposition thus far on his determination not to be swayed from that "middle road" between appeasement and belligerency in the search for peace.

One has occasionally the feeling—meaning no disrespect—that the President's reactions are almost visceral. He is groping for a way out of the dilemma of our times, he is convinced there must be a way out, but no one has shown him just what it is. Considering the hysteria over Communism of the past two years it is a tribute to Mr. Eisenhower that he has somehow thrown off those who would drive him into a dead end from which war would be the only escape. This is also a reflection of his innate caution, of his feeling against extremes, of his ability to gauge the temper of the mass of Americans and the masses elsewhere in the world on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

But it is not enough merely to say that he is seeking a way out of the dilemma of our times, for he has sought that from the day he took office. The difference is that he has now begun to act—and that he has come to some conclusions about the nature of nuclear war.

But Will He Keep It Up?

The issue today to many in high places in Washington is put in the form of a question: Given a nuclearweapons standoff, is the United States willing to fight nonatomic "small wars" if necessary? That the question has been in Senator Knowland's mind too is clear from his statement on the Senate floor: "We might have the desired (military) strength; but it as a matter of national policy the American people were not prepared to support the use of that strength. . . that strength on our part would not necessarily constitute a restraining influence upon the Soviets."

This was a polite way of asking whether the President was "prepared" to use that strength. There is divided opinion on this matter in Washington today. One official bitterly tells a reporter that "The golf club has replaced the umbrella" as the symbol of appeasement, while another official says confidently, "I think we will make the decision to fight the little wars."

But nobody really knows. For the President, in the last analysis, has to weigh all the conflicting claims and make the decision himself.

Some months ago a friend said to Mr. Dulles, "The President certainly leaves foreign affairs pretty much up to you." "Yes, I suppose he does." The President, vastly impressed by Mr. Dulles's detailed knowledge of diplomacy and of the intricacies of the world's problems, has given his Secretary of State perhaps more power than has been exercised by any other man who ever held that office. But in the Quemoy crisis, Mr. Dulles discovered himself on the wrong side.

And yet there are very few men to whom Mr. Eisenhower can turn for advice and support. Mr. Dulles has a direct telephone line to the White House from both his office and his home, and he is in and out of the Executive Mansion almost constantly. But it is "all business," the President's associates say, between the two men. They do not play bridge together—Mr. Eisenhower seeks relaxation with men of lesser intellectual capacity than Mr. Dulles.

The President appears to have handed down at Denver only a rather generalized statement: Nothing shall be done to involve the United States in nuclear war, though we must remain strong enough to fight one if it is forced upon us. Meanwhile, the problem is to find a way to deal with "coexistence" over what looks like a long period of peace ahead.

Secretary Dulles and others who have now caught the spirit of the President's new outlook see the "long-haul" program this way: continued advance in weapons, continued improvement in continental defense, a search for a way out of the Indo-China morass, a leash on Chiang, and—this last is new—a massive economic program for the underdeveloped nations to convince them that Communism is neither the only nor the best way to raise their standard of living.

The Change

Among the seemingly logical outcomes of what Mr. Eisenhower has set in motion would be an eventual "two Chinas" policy. And yet Mr. Eisenhower is still moving slowly and cautiously. He is fully aware of the opposition at the Capitol, especially within the Republican Party but by no means absent among Democrats. He is fully aware of the attraction of the Radford doctrine that the Communists must not be allowed to consolidate their hold on the mainland.

The President has a tendency to play things by ear. What Moscow and Peking do—as in the prisoner-of-war issue—will greatly affect what he does. Quemoy and the other Nationalist-held islands off the mainland could still set off an explosion if the Communists go too far.

There is change under way in Washington. But it is not occurring in the traditional manner of policy changes, often the work of some anonymous expert deep in the ladyrinth of government framing an idea that finally works its way to the top. Rather, it is Mr. Eisenhower at the summit of government who is generating the change. This in itself is a contradiction both to the normal ways of government and of the Eisenhower staff-work approach, the product of his long military career. Yet this is what is happening, as is clear to all who take the trouble to look behind the platitudes.

One Washington official has likened Mr. Eisenhower's actions to "the awakening of Gulliver, who is now sitting up, rubbing his eyes, and breaking the strings the war hawks had tied around him.

The President, it seems to me, is seeking to pull away from the bellicose spirit of the first eighteen months of his Administration, to get away from the hysteria and negativism of anti-Communism, and to find some positive way to express and to advance the American conviction that mankind, given a decent choice and a helping hand, will choose freedom.

So far it has been pretty much of a one-man show. But that one man happens to be the President of the United States

The Year It Happened

Will future generations (weird, stunted little creatures that survive) remember 1955 as the year the automobile was invented? And the race started its long downhill glide back into the primeval ooze?

To judge from the ecstatic moans, sighs and gasps of the advertising men, 1955 will indeed be remembered as the year the automobile was invented. All that has gone before was as nothing. Everything is new, new, new. New concepts. New dimensions. New even the metal is in motion when the car is standing still. The gear-shift is on the dashboard, the trunk is large enough to install air-conditioning and a crew's quarters, and the power of 250 horses is under the long, long, long hood.

Windshields are wrapped around. Bumpers are wrapped around. Some windshields are more wrapped around than others. And tail-lights? Until this year of grace there never really were tail-lights. Twin jet tail lights. Twin column tail-lights. Fish-tail tail-lights and gun-sight tail-lights.

And low! So low a body can see right over top of them. See what? Why the other side of the universe, the sight that has hitherto been blocked by the roof which was so high that a body might sit upright with ease and comfort beneath it. Not any more, though.

How sad, too, it is to think of all the poor people, the sadly misguided people, the stubbornly old-fashioned people who still own last year's models. These ungainly old things with their unwrapped windshields, their dully smouldering tail-lights, their feeble 245 horsepower. Why not even the metal is in motion in those antiques. Automobiles? Not they. For the automobile was really and truly invented in 1955, the year the advertising men stopped breathing air and took up pure oxygen.

Dolphins Set Two Marks In Swamping Duke, 61-23

UNC Wrestlers Invade Duke Friday Night

Coach Sam Barnes' North Carolina wrestling team makes its second try for a win Friday night as it takes on the Duke University grapplers at Duke.

The Tar Heel matmen dropped a 28-10 decision to the Davidson squad at Greensboro last week in an exhibition for the North Carolina high school wrestling clinic.

Wrestling coaches from Duke and N. C. State, and Carolina's Barnes took part in the clinic, along with high school coaches and wrestlers from around the state.

Co-captains Pete McGhee and Miles Gregory scored the only pins for the Tar Heels in the opening match with Davidson. McGhee, fighting in the 147-pound class, his opponent in 2.55 of the second period, while Gregory disposed of his foe in 1.56 of the second period in a 177-pound battle.

McGhee, Gregory and Arthur Gregory are the only seniors on this year's young Tar Heel squad. The final roster for the varsity season, announced this week by Barnes, shows ten sophomores and three juniors. Seven of the sophomores won numerals on the Frosh wrestling squad last season.

The Duke match will end the pre-Christmas schedule for Coach Barnes' club. The team's next match is January 8 with Washington & Lee here.

Demon Deacons Depart For Birmingham Classic

WAKE FOREST, N. C., Dec. 15 (AP)—Wake Forest's basketball team left tonight for Alabama where it will play in the first annual Birmingham Classic starting Friday.

In the opening round the Deacons tangle with West Virginia, the winner will play the victor of the Alabama-Texas tilt in the finals Saturday night.

Dick Hemric, Deacon center, needs five points to go over the 2,000 mark. He scored 1,841 points his first three years and has 154 points in six games this year.

Tar Heels, Gamecocks In '55 Oyster Bowl

Carolina's football Tar Heels will meet South Carolina in the ninth annual Oyster Bowl game in Norfolk, Va. next November 5, according to an Associated Press wire report.

The announcement of the game was mde by South Carolina officials Tuesday.

The traditional battle between the two rivals was originlly scheduled for play on SC territory, but was changed by agreement with the Norfolk Khedive Temple of the Shrine, which sponsors the game.

The game, held each year in Norfolk, is for the benefit of crippled children. Navy smashed Duke, 40-7, in this year's Oyster Bowl.

This will be North Carolina's first appearance in the Bowl.

Though no contracts have been signed, South Carolina Athletic Director Rex Enright has said that he would release the story as soon as he had ironed out details. Mel Blassingham, chairman of the Oyster Bowl committee in Norfolk, reported Tuesday that most of the conflicting particulars are now settled. Apparently, only the formal signing of contracts remains.

The Tar Heels upset South Carolina this year in Chapel Hill, 21-19, with a brilliant last minute score.

Moegle, Luppino Leaders In Punt, Kick Returns For '54

Navy Fans Pay Coach Tribute

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 15 (AP)—Coach Eddie Erdelatz of Navy's Sugar Bowl-bound football team got a surprise reception when he strolled into a downtown confectionery this morning for a customary cup of coffee.

City and county officials and Annapolis businessmen presented him with a chamber pot, painted blue and gold, hailing him as "Coach of the Year."

Police Commissioner George W. Rawlings presented the decorated pot to the amused coach while Mayor Arthur G. Ellington, Basketball Coach Ben Carnevale and others looked on.

They also presented him with a scroll commending his coaching Navy to a 7-2 season record, a large cake decorated with a football field, a toy Navy goat which plays "Anchors Aweigh," a toy Army mule and a miniature football bearing the 27-20 score of Navy's victory over Army this year.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15 (AP)—Kick runback leaders in major college football this season were Arizona's Art Luppino, Rice's Dick Moegle, and the Arizona, Wichita and Miami Fla. team's final NCAA Service Bureau statistics showed today.

Moegle was the punt-return leaded with 293 yards. Luppino made 632 yards on kickoff returns and 700 on kickoffs and punts combined, leading the country in these two categories just as he did in scoring and ball carrying.

Miami averaged 19.7 yards per punt return for team honors in that department, Arizona averaged 26.1 yards on kickoff runbacks and Wichita set an all-time record for the two combined, averaging 22.6 yards a crack to break a mark it set itself in 1948.

In pass interceptions, three men shared individual honors with seven apiece—Cornell's Dick Jackson, Denver's Rusty Fairly and Miami's Whitey Rouviere. Virginia Tech had most interception yardage and UCLA the greatest number.

Frosh Matmen Tangle With Duke Today

Coach Harry Pawlik's freshman wrestling team opens it's 1954-55 season against Duke there today at 3:30 P. M.

According to Coach Pawlik, "the team is potentially very good although it lacks depth. The boys have shown much spirit and are up for the Duke meet. However, the team would be strengthened moreso if we had one more man in each weight class."

As this is Duke's first match also, little is known as to how strong the Blue Devils are. The Tar Heels next match will be with the Washing and Lee Jayvees on January 8

The starting lineup for Carolina will be:

123 lb. — David Wall
130 lb. — Sterling Haig
137 lb. — Jim Toland
147 lb. — Jack Gray
157 lb. — Ken Hoke
167 lb. — Charlie Thompkins
177 lb. — Tommy West
HW. — John Haywood

PASADENA, Calif., Dec. 15 (AP)—He waited at the ticket window 19 hours ,but figured it was worth it as he bought the first pair of Rose Bowl tickets at today's public sale.

"I have a date for the game," said the Pasadena College student, "and I just had to get the tickets."

Although a crowd of more than 100,000 is expected for the New Year's Day game between Ohio State and Southern California, most of the tickets were allocated before today's public sale.

Redskins Sign Kimmel, Thomas For '55 Season

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15 (AP)—The Washington Redskins today signed a pair of tackles on whom the club is counting heavily for the 1955 season. They are J. D. Kimmel of the University of Houston and Vic Thomas of the University of Colorado.

Kimmel, who was expelled from West Point during the cribbing scandals, played varsity football for Army and Houston. He has spent the past two seasons in the Army, playing football at Fort Lee, Va.

Thoma also spent two years in the service, joining the Redskins last fall. He suffered a torn knee cartilage in preseason practice, however, and was side-lined for the season.

Kimmel and Thomas become the sixth and seventh players signed for season. The others are backs Eddie LeBaron, Dale Atkeson and Vic Janowicz, guard Slug Witucki and tackle Volney Peters.

Frosh Quint Is Loaded With Sparkling Individual Talent

By BERNIE WEISS

To any fans who have had the pleasure of watching this season's freshman basketball team in action, not much doubt remains that it is comprised of some of the most talented frosh cagers ever to play here.

The team is certainly one of the school's greatest when viewed from the standpoint of individuals. Coach Buck Freeman still has his work cut out for him in tryin gto mold these individuals into a unit of precision-like machinery, but the pieces are there, ready to be put together into operating order.

Already the quint has won five games and has not eperienced too much difficulty in any of them. The Tar Babies have vanquished the Atlantic Fleet (service) representatiues, Atlantic Christian College, Duke freshmen and the Wake Forest freshmen.

The starting five men, four of whom call metropolitan New York their homes, represent the finest basketball talent which could be gleaned from high schools. Among them are all-Staters, all-New York City players, most valuable players in tournaments, and other similar honors. A few have been presirents of the classes in high school and one was a vice-president of the student body.

The "Big Five" are Bob Cunningham, Pete Brennan, Joe Quigg, Tommy Kearns and Roy Searcy. The first four are from New York; Searcy is a native Carolinian.

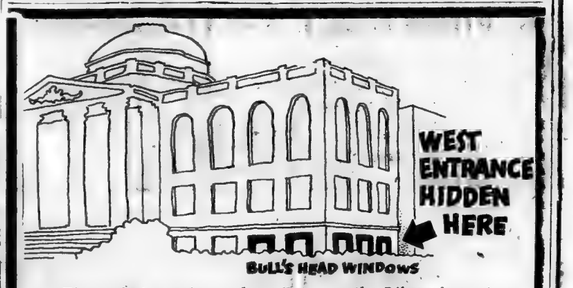
ROBERT J. CUNNINGHAM—New York, New York . . . Attended All-Hallows Catholic High School in the Bronx, where he was captain of the varsity five in his junior and senior years. During these two years his team won the Eastern States Catholic Invitation High School Tournament at Newport, R. I. . . Bob made the all-tournament team and was the second Most Valuable Player. . . He carried a 19-point average for his last two years of high school ball. He made the second-string All-City team twice, and only a severe wrist injury in his senior year kept him from making the first team . . . President of his senior class. . . Received offers to play college basketball from Holy Cross, Fordham, Boston College, St. Johns, Niagra, Georgetown, Syracuse and many others. Eighteen years old, 190 pounds, stands 6'3".

PETER J. BRENNAN—Brooklyn, New York. . . Attended St. Augustine High School, and was president of his freshman, sophomore, junior and senior classes, plus vice-president of the student body in his senior year. . . . Averaged 29 points per game as a senior and made the All-City teams of the following newspapers: Brooklyn Eagle, N. Y. Journal American, N. Y. Post, N. Y. Herald-Tribune and the N. Y. News. . . In a Knights of Columbus tournament he set a new record by scoring 45 points in one game. He was the starting center in the Herald-Tribune's Fresh Air Fund All-Star game for Brooklyn, scoring 21 points in that contest. His high school team had a 23-5 record in his senior year. . . In his first four games as a Carolina freshman he scored 100 points. He is 18 years old, 6'4½" and weighs 194.

JOSEPH F. QUIGG—Brooklyn New York. . . Attended St. Francis Prep, which won the city title in Quigg's senior year while he was captain. Made All-City teams of the Post, Telegram, Eagle and Herald-Tribune. . .Averaged 25 points per game in high school. . . President of his high school's senior class. His team played in the Eastern States High School Tournament at Glenn Falls, N. Y. He came to Carolina last spring and played half a year of freshman ball, averaging 20 points per game. In one tilt he scored 32. He will play freshman ball this season until the end of the semester, when he will drop from the squad in order to have three years of varsity eligibility. His best shot is a jump or hook from within the immediate area of the basket, and in the first four games this season he scored 97 points. He is 18, 6'7" tall and weighs 195.

ROY A. SEARCY—Spray, N. C. . . . . Attended Tri-City High School, where he made all-state teams of the Greensboro Daily News and the Raleigh News and Observer as a center. Averaged 20 points per game in his senior year and hit a high of 33 points. He was captain of the Tri-City team which won the State AA tournament two consecutive years and in the second year he was selected as the tournament's Most Valuable Player. He's been switched to a forward at Carolina. He is 6'4". weighs 190 and is 18 years old. Regarded by Coach Freeman as the steadiest player on the team.



THOMAS F. KEARNS—Bergenfield, N. J. — Attended St. Ann's Academy in New York City and averaged 20 points per game for a team which lost only one game in 34. He set a record for the most field goals in a season — 82. He made the all-city teams of the Post, Daily News and Herald Tribune's Fresh Air Fund game which his team won in two overtimes and a sudden death period. He was chosen the Most Valuable Player in the National Catholic Invitational Tournament at the University of Maryland, and also in the Marist Brothers Invitational Tournament in New York. . . . He was president of his senior class. . . Before choosing Carolina, he contemplated offers from Notre Dame, Holy Cross, N. C. State, Michigan St., Fordham, Villanova, St. John's, Georgetown and St. Louis. . . . He is 5'11", weighs 190 and is 18 years old.

Kearns, Quigg, Cunningham and Brennan picked up much valuable experience this past summer, playing ball in the Catskills.

Kearns, who is thought by some as a better defensive player than offensive, remembers back to one particular game where he held Vic Molodet, N. C. State's whiz, to an eight-point total while he (Kearns) scored 30. Kearns averaged 30 points per game in the mountain circuit.

Varsity players Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda also were in the mountains. They played together against such nationally known stars as Elliot Carver and Joe Holup of GW, State's Cliff Dwyer, Seton Hall's Harry Brooks, Virginia's Buzd Wilkinson, Fordham's Tommy Bredlin and Colgate's Bob Dodd.

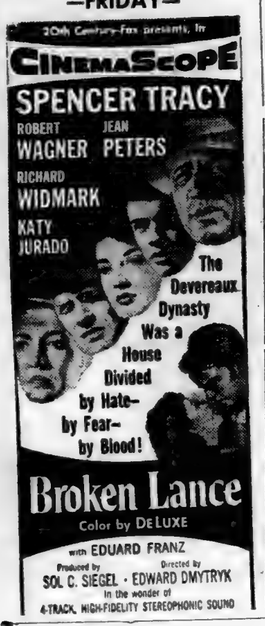
Author Wellman Is Writer In 'Arsenic'

Manly Wade Wellman, Chapel Hill author, is portraying a role usually unfamiliar to him, that of an unpublished writer, in the Carolina Playmaker's production of "Arsenic and Old Lace," which will be presented through Saturday at the Playmakers' Theatre here.

Wellman's interest in the theatre as well as his literary career began when he was a student at Wichita University, with dramatics later becoming more or less a hobby.

MANLY WELLMAN
. . . not in character



Several of his short stories were published during his college days, and after receiving his degree, he devoted his time to writing as a career. His first novel to be published in book form was "Find My Killer" in 1947, but for many years previously he had published several serialized novels and numerous short stories in magazines.

Books for boys are a pet interest, and he has written a series of eight books of that type, the first of which was "The Raiders of Drowning Creek." A new story for boys is to be published early next year. Also scheduled for publication in 1955 are "Fort Sundown," a novel of the Indian wars, and "Dead and Gone," a collection of true stories about North Carolina murders, the latter to be published by the University Press.

Among the roles which Wellman has taken due to his theatre interests include Feste in "Twelfth Night," Demetrius in "Midsummer Night's Dream," Antipholus in "Comedy of Errors" and Mercutio in "Romeo and Juliet," for the Wichita Universty Players. For the Columbia University's Morningside Players, he acted the title role in "The Bad Man."

He also acted in "Enter Madame," "Is Zat So?" and "Wapping Warf" for the Prairie Players of Wichita, Kan.

Fireworks In Village: Nursery Teacher Fired

By DAN WALLACE

VERBAL FIREWORKS over the dismissal of a nursery teacher charged the air at the meeting of the Village board of directors last Friday night.

TWENTY visitors were present as Mrs. Marjorie Beshers, who was dismissed at the beginning of the month, was given the floor to speak about her dismissal and the nursery program.

AT the beginning of the meeting, chairman of the board Ed Best tendered his resignation, having recently moved from the Village. The board then nominated Sam Barnard to serve as chairman. There were no other nominations so Barnard automatically received the chairmanship. Barnard then requested Ed Best to serve as acting chairman for the remainder of the meeting.

THE MINUTES of the last board meeting were read before Mrs. Beshers spoke which included the reasons for the board's action in dismissing Mrs. Beshers:

"The teacher was careless about her personal appearance, and the appearance of her schoolroom was generally untidy. She was often tardy to work. She was unorganized in her schoolroom procedure Hasn't fully assumed responsibility for the position she holds. Since the teacher has failed to cooperate with the director and complaints from parents have been received, the board feels that it is necessary to terminate the contract with her as of January 1, 1955."

MRS. BESHERS, whose husband is a sociology student, began her speech, "I speak not only about my dismissal but for the good of the nursery," and she went on to say that she was surprised when Ed Best and Mildred Phillips, director of the nursery, came to her and informed her of the dismissal. She said their reasons were vague and that she couldn't understand them. Mrs. Beshers listed the complaints made to her by Ed Best:

"Ed said that the board was inconvenienced and disturbed" when after making her job application to the board at the beginning of the summer, she accepted another job without notifying the board.

MRS. BESHERS replied to this that she received acceptance notice of the other job but a day before the Village board notified her that her application had been approved.

"Ed said my classroom was littered." She said that she didn't think it was, that she tried to let the kids help clean up, they would go get a broom and use it and she thought that this was educational.

"Ed said that my system of education was not satisfactory, that my program was lacking. His criticisms were vague and not specific." Mrs. Beshers said she asked him why did a board member not come to observe her program. "He said that the board did not want to mingle in the administrative affairs of the nursery."

Mrs. Beshers said that if a board member had called her to make an appointment that she would have been happy to have that person observe.

AN EXHIBIT made by her class of "greenies," the five year old group, was then presented to the board by Mrs. Beshers as an example of her class program. It contained numerous crayon drawings, paste ups of cut out pictures, some water color paintings, acorn bracelets, empty thread spools dipped in colors and threaded to form a crown, woven pot holders and small rugs.

THE CHILDREN enjoyed this work and even kids from other classes wanted to participate she said. Her children liked her and their parents complimented her program she stated. To back this up she said that eight parents from her class of 11 children had been contacted by her and had no complaints about her teaching. She said the other three parents had not yet been contacted.

SHOPWORK for the boys was set up in her class when she purchased a saw and brought her own hammer to class. She bought burlap, also at her own expense, so that the girls could sew rugs. On a trip to Raleigh, she bought fresh clay for the children to use. She mentioned her reading program and how well the kids enjoyed it.

BOARD member Chuck Lewis interrupted Mrs. Beshers, "What is the meaning of this discourse and this exhibit?"

ACTING Chairman Best answered, "In true democratic form, Mrs. Beshers is exercising her right for redress of grievances."

"Ed mentioned the fact that two children decided to walk home one day at lunch time and one was found by the Glen Lennox highway and the other near the airport road." She said that other kids in this nursery as well as other nurseries in town have also had this tendency to go home. "This is not unusual," she stated

"When dismissed I was asked not to come back the next day The children do not have a teacher and I was concerned about their future welfare."

THE BOARD informed Mrs Beshers that the director had taken over her former class the next day until a new teacher was hired from the list of applicants.

DR. RUEBEN HILL, who was attending the meeting as a visitor, arose, and with a flash of anger in his eyes declared," I have had five children in as many nurseries —and in no one has a teacher been treated as a mere grocery clerk!"

OTHERS arose to Mrs. Beshers defense, indicating that she had been done an injustice by the board.

ED BEST, speaking for the board, asserted that the charges of the board speak for themselves, that the board, since its formation two years ago, has had full faith and confidence in Director Mildred Phillips operation of the nursery during these years. He stated that a teacher had never been dismissed before and that Mrs. Phillips had the best of relations with the other teachers. Three other nursery teachers were present at the meeting who indicated their faith in the director and the decision of the board in the dismissal.

PRESSED by Mrs. Beshers and most of the visitors for specific charges, the board, being unsure of the grounds of slander that could lead to court suit, was hesitant about making more specific charges, and finally agreed to make these chrges known to Mrs. Beshers only in a closed session. The board voted to go into a closed session and the visitors left the room. Mrs. Beshers was informed by the board that if she wished the results of the closed session to be made public in the Daily Tar Heel, that she would have this privilege. After the closed meeting ended, Mrs. Beshers refused to have the proceedings of the closed session made public.

'Sound And Fury' Big Smash With Students

By NEIL BASS

The massive curtain unfolded and out poured one of the most colosial arrays of student talent that has ever echoed from the gallant walls of Memorial Hall. It even appeared as the action became more "heated" that the faithful old structure might lift its dome in tribute.

The scene opened at 8 o'clock with a group of supposedly characteristic Carolina students, performing under the assumed name of "Goofus" University, streaming down the aisles and assailing th stage with the lyrics "Sex is a wonderful habit." From the darkened audience came shouts of approv both in high-pitched feminine tones and in the husky range afforded to the male group.

Act 1 "THE PAJAMA DAME"

"Hold on to your seats because "Sound and Fury" is about t knock you off your, "so came th appropriate warning from the narrator, Donnell Stone, as the mock ery of the broadway productio "The Pajama Game" with partia lyrics from "Can Can" unfurle its rousing portrayal to a vibrant audience.

From the moment that slinky Helen Chesterton, acted with th appropriate low-cut attire by Ulyss se Lancaster, wiggled her way onto Goofus U. campus and immediately moved into a paralyzing love scene with B. V. Davis, portrayed by Tommy Davis, the students in attendance starred and gulped.

"Sex is not the answer to all problems," persuaded bemuddled professor Joe Johnson (John Whitty) but the insistent pleas of hi energetic students finally tossed him into an administration frowned on affair with coed Jane Jantzen (Ellen Ozon). The story implied that "the same situation was applicable to tender young Carolina coeds and ancient but not dead professors.

Act II, "AH PARIS" CONTINUES

After North Building had announced its approval and Professor Joe had given the oath of allegiance to the Old Well, the "Goofers" went as exchange students to "study" in Paris.

The courses undertaken by the Parisean invaders proved to be many and varied but the "welcoming committee" headed by Lili (Bo Bernardin) saw to it that the studies were of a nature that the Goofus officials were sure to disapprove of. Ken Lowry, Jake Goforth, Pat Sietz, Carl Williams, Al Issac and many others did the plot more than justice.

Planners Needed— Parker

There is currently an unprecedented demand for trained planners, according to John A. Parker Head of the Department of City and Regional Planning of the University. The department receives 10 requests for every person it graduates, Parker said.

Requests for graduates in city planning are received from all parts of the country. Quoting two recent articles, Parker stated that the shortage of trained personnel in the planning field is nationwide The current "Newsletter of the American Society of Planning Officials" reports 110 jobs unfilled in the country today.

During the past two weeks calls for graduates have been received from as far as California. The December issue of "American City" states that the already tight market for trained planners has been given a significant boost by the Housing Act of 1954. This act provides federal funds on a matching basis to stimulate activity in metropolitan area planning, and to assist cities of 2,500 to 25,000 with the cost of operation of their planning programs.

4 Honor System Violators Suspended, Says Councilor

Four students were suspended and four found not guilty in Men's Honor Council trials, according to a spokesman for the council yesterday.

The spokesman, who said he did not want his name used, also said one student was given an official reprimand, four removed from probation and one reinstated in the University.

Said the Men's Honor Council member: "With the purpose of informing the students about the operation of the Honor System and the activities of the Men's Council, this report is issued concerning the action taken by the Men's Council since the beginning of school."

(Campus law on the subject of reporting Honor System trials is found on page 5, "The Campus Law."

(The law states that "publication of the facts, decision and sentence of cases shall be made in The Daily Tar Heel (Generally two weeks after the case has been tried) and the student defendant shall be always treated anonymously."

(This is the first report from either Honor Council this semester.)

The spokesman continued: "This practice of reporting regularly to the student body had been followed up until the past several years, when it was discontinued. By giving brief summaries o fthe cases handled it is hoped that the students will attain a better understanding of the workings of the council, the types of cases brought up and the decisions rendered.

"Recently," went on the spokesman, "two students were suspended from school after being found guilty of cheating in archaeology. In both cases the students had been seen and reported to the council by fellow students in the class.

"Earlier in the year two students were suspended for gaining possession illegally and falsifying their permanent record cards. Four students appearing for possible violations of the Honor Code were found not guilty.

"Other action taken by the council included isuing an official reprimand to one student, removal of four students from probation and reinstatement of one person back into the University."

Herb Browne is chairman of the Men's Honor Council. Miss Nancy Whisnant is chairman of the Women's Honor Council.

Count Basie, Orchestra Coming Here Jan. 12

"Swing, jump and jazz" are the renowned features with which Basie, "America's incomparable rhythmic stylist," will bombard Memorial Hill Jan. 12, from 3:30 to 6 in the afternoon. The musical show will be presented as a part of the agenda of the Inferdormitory Council Social Committee.

The Count and his "All-American rhythm section" mark the completion of a decade and a half of "notorious notemanipulation" this year.

The "bop man" is currently occupying his spare time in writing an authentic history of jazz, boogie-woogie and blues. In this field, Basie can write from true experience, dating back to the days when he was pounding the keyboard in Kansas City in a company with some of America's greatest musicians.

Combining with the "ivory tickler" to supply background data is another jazz great from way back. Freddie Green. Green, guitarist, is recognized as the star of the Basie orchestra.

"The sepia swing king," a discovery of Benny Goodman, first gained the national limelight in 1937, for what Goodman called "terrific jazz." Authorized records show that from that beginning to the present date, Basie has maintained a rating among the nation's top 10 bands.

The "Count" title was awarded to William Basie while the renowned band leader was down and out, without fare for a trip home, back in his earliest musical days. The name came as a result of the royal manner in which Basie conducted himself when his fingers struck the keyboard.

The entertainment is the second in a series for the I.D.C. Jimmy Capps' "Our Best to You" constituted the first program.

Coeds Keep Legs Warm

WHAT WITH THOSE cold winds blowing across The Hill's top these days, a great number of Carolina Coeds turned to wearing contraptions called Bermuda socks, or just plain long socks. They may be seen flashing along the walk-ways of a cold winter morning, or zipping through the Arboretum of a cold winter night. They come in all kinds of colors from bright red to sultry black. Here, three coeds (names unknown) display their socks. . . . Bermuda was never like this. Photo by R. B. Henley

Chivalry Is Dead . . .

NEW YORK (AP)—If a woman slaps a man, he can slap her back.

So ruled Magistrate William E. Ringel Wednesday in dismissing assault charges brought against Willis Van Nosdall, 36, by Mrs. Lee Noble, 26.

She claimed Van Nosdall hit back after she slapped him during an argument a restaurant.

Asserting no one would bring assault charges if a man struck back at another, the magistrate asked if a man had the right to hit back at a woman.

"I suppose the courtiers of the Victorian age would say no," he said. "But as a matter of law, we can say the sexes are equal, with equal treatment for all sexes. I think the same rule has to apply in this case. Charge dismissed."

State Student Gets Grant

The Owens-Corning Fiberglass Scholarship, valued at over $1,500 and covering two years of study, has been awarded to Joyce L. Dutton of Rockingham, a junior in the School of Textiles at North Carolina State College.

Announcement of the selection of Dutton was made yesterday by G. H. Dunlap, director of the placement bureau in the college's School of Textiles and chairman of the school's Scholarship Committee.

Dunlap said that Dutton was chosen as the award recipient on the bases of his scholarship record, leadership achievements, and potential executive ability. Like other contestants, Dutton also was judged on the quality of an essay that he composed on the significance of college training to professional success.

Now Is The Time For All Good Men...

The Daily Tar Heel joins President Creasy in suggesting that you use your Christmas holiday to drop in on your home-town state legislature member and lobby against a cut in the University budget. The equation of the day is plain to see: Budget cut equals tuition raise. And a tuition raise equals no college education for some deserving high school graduates of the state.

The old philosophy was that the school should be "as nearly as possible tuition free." Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their alma mater and keep that worthy principle from dying on the floor of the General Assembly.

'A Looseness About This Here Freedom'

Arthur Garfield Hays made millions as a corporation lawyer on Wall Street. But whenever any man's civil liberties were being threatened, Hays always dropped his big business brief case, grabbed his satchel and caught the next train out of Manhattan.

In the steamy summer of 1925, he showed up with Clarence Darrow and Dudley Field Malone in the restless little town of Dayton, Tennessee, where a high school biology teacher named John Scopes had committed the high crime of teaching the theory of evolution in class. Hays helped out-argue, out-general and out-yell William Jennings Bryan, the prosecution attorney. Scopes was convicted, but the rise of academic freedom in the Tennessee back-country dates from that trial.

Two years later, Hays headed North, to Boston, to defend Nicolo Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti against doubtful charges of murder and robbery. In the trial of the Scottsboro Negroes in Alabama, in almost every important civil rights case in the past 30 years, Arthur Garfield Hays played a vigorous role.

His favorite story was of a liberated slave who met his former master on the street. The master asked, "Are you as well off as before you were free?" The Negro admitted that his clothes were frayed, his house leaked, and his meals were nothing like the food had been back on the old plantation. "Well, wouldn't you rather be a slave again?" "No, massa. There's a sort of looseness about this here freedom that I like."

Hays' death this week in New York takes from our midst a lawyer whose high-income clients always had to wait if somebody, somewhere else, was being denied the looseness of his freedom—an American radical, old-fashioned in his notion of the importance of individual integrity, committed to tolerance, free and fruitful speech and to the radical tradition of protest and reform.

We will have need of such a man as this in years to come. One hopes that Arthur Garfield Hays was not the last of the great, liberal giants of the law court.

What's Wrong With Dean Fred Weaver

Louis Kraar

DEAN WEAVER, at the request of some students, spoke on what was wrong with student government the other night. When he finished, the dean suggested that students might give a talk on what was wrong with the administration.

Taking the good dean's suggestion, I've decided to tell what's wrong with Dean Weaver today.

As Weaver himself said before he told students what was wrong with their government, I'd better mention some of the "specific rights" about Dean Weaver.

The dean is an educator who encourages and defends student freedom. He is, in fact, one of the outstanding proponents of student freedom I've ever heard.

Weaver sees extracurricular activities as an important part of a student's education. He sees student government as "a laboratory dedicated to the idea that students can learn by doing."

The dean seems to be a sincere man, and his actions have always been highly motivated, although sometimes controversial.

As Dean Weaver himself told the students, if I may paraphrase a bit, the student's word "is not to be taken as gospel."

To further paraphrase Weaver: "The student cannot be a dean ... He may be a good fellow, come up to the office to visit you, drink coffee with you in Y Court, but he can't be the dean."

NOW THAT I've qualified myself, as the good dean did the other night, I can tell some of the things wrong with Dean Weaver.

Dean Weaver—and the rest of his office—is not in close enough contact with the student body to know how it feels on student matters.

Although student government people see Dean Weaver and his assistants, the other students on campus frequently hold altogether different opinions than their so-called leaders.

If the dean and his office are going to deal with student affairs, both should first make an effort, a much greater effort than is now being made, to find out what the students think.

My second big "wrong" is that the dean doesn't make clear to students what the various problems are; he doesn't share his problems with the students that they concern.

Take, for instance, the drinking problem. For weeks, a group of students met with Weaver last spring, thinking they were negotiating, Later they learned they were just "discussing the problem" and not negotiating.

Now Dean Weaver didn't mislead or trick the students. He just failed to make it clear to them what was going on.

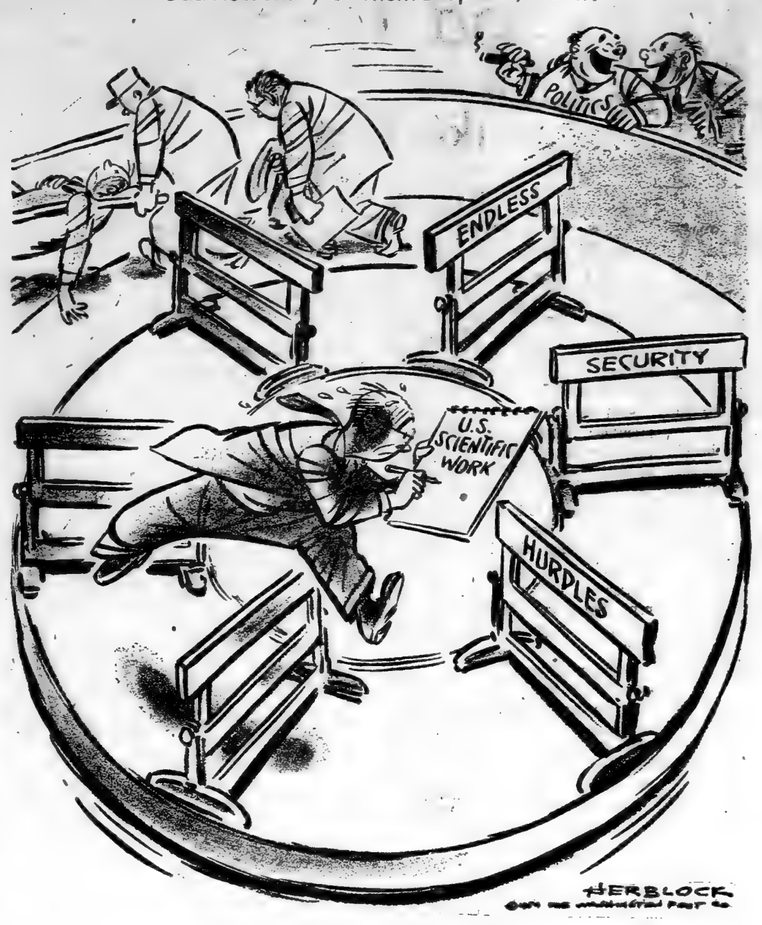
I WOULD like to invite Dean Weaver to spend an evening in one of the dorms in campus, say in the lower quad, no(t that it's much different than any other part of campus.



I'm not suggesting that the dean talk to a dorm meeting, but just sit in one of the rooms and try to read or do some other work that requires concentration.

The truth of the dorm matter is it's almost impossible to study in many dorms on many nights. This, I know, the dean will say is something for student government to handle. But apparently the dean doesn't know about it, or he wuold urge the student leaders he knows to do something.

I could go on, as Dean Weaver said the other night, but he knows what the problems are.

As Weaver said about student government, "The dean must take an outside seat;" it is also apparently true that in administration matters the student "must take an outside seat."

'Odd How Many Of Them Drop Out, Isn't It?'

Ike's New Bomb Shelter

Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON—Civil Defense has now decided the President's airraid shelter, built for FDR during World War II, is not completely safe. It is no secret to anyone that this is buried on the White House grounds; so it's feared that a direct H-bomb hit would scoop the vaultlike shelter right out fo the earth.

As a result President Eisenhower has been assigned a secrea, out-of-town cave, where he will be whisked, along with his top aides and Cabinet officers, in case of an air raid. This gigantic, bombproof cave is equipped with tons of supplies and rations, special electronics and radio gear, air filters and water purifiers—everything necessary to run the nation from an emergency headquarters.

The President's exodus from Washington, of course, depends on adequate warning. The Air Force hope our radar screen in Northern Canada will give Washington four hours' notice of an enemy attack, if the warning is too short, Ike will have to take his chances in the White House shelter.

This is a small, compact, sub terranean shelter, encased in four feet of solid concrete, reinforced with steel. It is equipped with its own heating system, power plant, communications network and water supply—all independent of the city overhead.

Chief problem is that the White House shelter will accommodate only 20 to 25 persons. No list has yet been drawn up as to who in the White House would go with the President and who would have to take their chances with the outside populace.

Civil Defense has held several practice "dry runs" to determine how long it would take to evacuate the President and his Cabinet to their secret hideaway, together with 3,000 other top officials to scattered relocation ceners.

During one rehearsal, it was discovered that a master file containing essential data was still back in Washington. As a result, photostatic copies were made of all important working files and stored in the emergency headquarters.

Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, also discovered that high-heel shoes weren't the best fashion for air raids. The rough cement floors of the Presidential hideout scraped up her heels, gave her trouble with her feet.

Friendly Rivals

Genia I George Bender, newly elected senator from Ohio, tells friends: "I was the only senator who had to win three times. I had to win the unofficial count, then the official count, then the recount."

George says this a little ruefully, because he went through months of campaigning, and then several weeks of watching the recounting. However, sitting in the Waldorf's Norse Grill in New York the other day with Dave Jones of the Cleveland Browns, he was approached by Charley Taft.

Charley, brother of the late Senator Taft has not always been strong for Bender. He belongs to the Reform Republicans of Hamilton County, which is Cincinnati. But coming up to Bender's table he said:

"Bob, the election in Hamilton County was as clean as any in the country."

Vigorous as the Bender-Burke Campaign was, it ended on a happy note when defeated Sen. Tom Burke, Democrat, called Bender on the phone to congratulate him and say he wanted to turn over his files on West Point appointments.

GEN. VAN FLEET
... ingratitude?

The two rivals talked briefly and pleasantly.

"It's just too bad," said Bender, "that both of us couldn't have won."

Washington Pipeline

Correction: The Public Accounts Subcommittee of the Hou committee which planned a stu se Government Operations Sub dy of European merchant marine costs did not take its planned trip to Europe as previously reported in this column. Staff members state that the commit tee has received a report from the general accounting office that European shipbuilding costs are estimated at too low a figure, because of which the U. S. gover nment is paying U. S. shipping concerns too high a subsidy, and the House Subcommittee had planned to send seven members abroad to study the matter: Bender of Ohio, Osmers of N. J., McDonough, Calif., Hillelson, Mo., Republicans; with Karsten, Mo., Mollohan, W. Va., and Fountain, N. C. Though the committee still plans to make the subsidy study, the trip has been called off. Senator Watkins of Utah got the second biggest hand at the Gridiron Club dinner. The man who probably has the longest recollection of Gridiron dinners is Eugene Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post and Times—Herald. He recalls a Gridiron speech by Secretary of State Elihu Root in 1908 which made a big hit. William Jennings Bryan was invited to answer Root for the Democrats. He arrived one hour late with rumped shirt, not in formal evening dress. Despite this, he out rooted Root. His speech brought down the House.

Who Promoted Van Fleet?

Gen. George Marshall, who was given a long overdue testimonial dinner the other day, tells friends privately how Queen Frederika of Greece came to see him secretly in London some years ago and asked him to do something to save Greece.

Marshall told her she was very naughty to approach him direct, since it is improper for the head of a government to make a formal request of a U. S. military man. However, he acted anyway, and later sent Gen. James Van Fleet to reorganize the then demoralized Greek army.

Van Flet had been the victim of an Army red-tape snafu. Just as someone went wrong and promoted Peress, someone also went wrong and got Van Fleet confused with another Van Fleet, considered too unstable for high rank. General Marshall finally got the two Van Fleets straightened out and sent the right Van Fleet to Greece, where he did a fine job, later went to Korea.

More recently, Van Fleet, retired from Korea by Eisnhower, joined the ten million Americans for McCarthy. But when McCarthy blasted Ike, Van Fleet publicly withdrew.

However, what old military comrades noted was that Van Fleet said nothing about McCarthy's charge against General Marshall, the man who promoted him, gave him his big opportunity in Greece and whom McCarthy charged with "A conspracy so immense and an infamy so black as to dwarf any previous such venture in the history of man."

Mundy Joins Candy Crusade With Kraar

David Mundy

One or two friends have requested that I join Columnist Kraar's "Candy Bar Crusade."

Kraar, as you may have noted, has twice tilted his well-sharpened lance against the six—cent candy bars as sold in the uptown movie (cinema to you) emporiums. I have two more cases of flagrant, well, flagrant flagrancy. One friend has complained that Lenoir has the habit of not having his favorite, a little dab of chocolate called a "Heath Bar." Another, with a more serious case, tells me that he found a spider web inside the wrapping of a bar. The spider, apparently, had escaped. Therefore, Louis, let us leap into our shining white armor, straighten our long white plumes, and be off!

My new political party, the Mundane Socialists, is off to a pretty good beginning. Already two people have requested membership and another has expressed interest. Since I desire a united front I haven't yet admitted anyone. There are too many inconsistencies with just me as a member.

I have written the party's song, though. It is to be called "The Fifth Internationale." The first, and only verse as yet, goes as follows:

"God bless state plannng system divine.
Stand beside her, and guide her,
Just as long as the ballots are mine."

Notes from History 71:
(1.) Among other things, the bar sinister crossed Alexander Hamilton's name ... His mother had powerful friends.
(2.) During those days an able bodied man got five dollars a week. What would an able-bodied young girl get? (Lughs, blushes, from class.)

I just can't extend the season of jollity and merriment to the Carolina Forum. After each occasion upon which I have complained about its biased presentations I have suffered a strong, if not violent, reaction from three columns to the left.

Crusader Kraar begins each reply by calling me a "reaction ary." Reactionaries, accordng to one definition, are people who feel that in the several thousand years preceeding the New Deal something happened which benefied mankind. The implicaion of the crusadng Mr. Kraar is that I am something nasty, at least a slightly mentally decomposed dinosaur.

The next "defense" is the statement that my charges are "wrong and much too hasty." (Quote from last Wednesday's Kraar Column.)

The contrary is true. (Which isn't exactly calling Kraar a liar, mind you.) I have checked the Forum finances. I have looked over the list of people to whom the Forum sent letters inviting them to speak on campus. I have even read some of the letters. How thorough must I be?

The Forum has thus far presented three left-wing Democrats and an actual socialist. Since the Forum is supported entirely by student Funds, it has an obligation to give the students a less biased ticket. Columnist Kraar reports: "According to Forum head Joel Fleishman, this spring Republicans Homer Capehart, Indiana Senator, Leverett Saltonstall, Massachusetts Senator, and perhaps Everett Dirksen, Illinois senator, will come to campus." A representative to the Forum has since informed me that it just isn't so. He says that the Forum is fairly sure of only one speaker next spring, and that is Sen. Humphrey of Minnesota.

(Norman Thomas refers to that Senator as a "Socialist who wears the label of a Democrat.) I remain for a new year, convinced of Forum bias. Happy New Year to everyone else!

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . ... Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was puffing along in the environs of Woollen Gym when I saw him. Was he going to exercise. . .?

"Am I going to exercise?" The Horse echoed. "I am exercising! Once a week, I walk in the direction of Woollen, period."

Speaking of Woollen Gym, and all that it stood for—

"— and that, me bhoy, is covering lotsa territory," The Horse put in caustically. "Not that they have a monopoly on being told by non-experts how experts should expert, if I make myself clear, and I trust I am expert at that."

The Horse referred to the hue (yellow) and cry (babyish) over Coach G. O'Barclay, from friend and foe alike?

"Well, I'm sorta verbally sneaking up on the topic," The Horse confirmed. "I fair shook my ribs down around my withers, I laughed so hard over the idea of Coach B. being replaced as Coach!"

Why the laughter? It had been mentioned, no?

"By dopes," The Horse shrugged. "In the first place, casting aside all thought of fair play and permitting Coach B. to work out his hired term—whaddya think this is, a Rockefeller Foundation? Our appropriations here at this seat of Southern Cultoor are carefully arrived at and even more carefully, ugh, enforced! Brer Wilco, there would be a howl to the heavens indeed, were we to coolly jettison whatever it is Coach B. is paid — say, for example, Ten Thousand Fish — and go pay it to another coach, and perhaps more into the bargain!"

Well, not if some big-hearted alumnus were to donate the money to buy Coach B's contract up without damage to our appropriation schedules!

"Yeah?" The Horse snorted. "Well, next time we sat up and begged for Athletic moneys, the money-handlers would say, 'Go get it where you got the last donation.' I'm not even considering the ethics of the situation, see? But, gratia Dei, someone is! Suh, other collitches may regard their lawfully contracted employees as flotsam to be jettisoned at the snap of an alumnus' false teeth, but we do not operate that way here. Not in Football, anyway. Besides, we should have had a winning season — vide: the Tulane fiasco — and besides again, Coach B. has a durned good Frosh team coming up this next outing."

es, but—well. . .

"All of this has a familiar ring," The Horse said. "I seem to have heard the tune before. Am I in error when I believe Coach Snavely got a barrage of the same disloyalty?"

And from the same source: loyal, interested alumni. Didn't The Horse think they were interested? Wasn't this good, that they were? Wasn't it?

"I would be more impressed," The Horse deponed, if some of these great and good friends would toss in a few fish-heads for things like improving dorms and student-facilities. And I would be stunned if the do-gooders should concern themselves about up-grading our courses, where needed, or something in line with improvement of a university, and not with infallibility of a football club. These guys have us confoosed with the Washngton Redskins."

'Arsenic And Old Lace' In 'Enjoyable' Opening

Ted Rosenthal

The Carolina Playmakers did an effective, workmanlike job in their opening-night presentation of Joseph Kesselring's "Arsenic and Old Lace."

They had a sound vehicle to work with. This story of two saintly old Brooklyn ladies, and their favorite charity—freeing lonely bachelors from our vale of tears, with poison-spiked elderberry wine—has become a comedy classic of the modern American theatre, a consistently "box-office play."

As such it was a good choice for the annual tour-show. Unfortunately the Playmaker's staff saw fit to Bowlderize the script, and some of the funniest, of more resque lines were cut. At the same time several contemporary touches were added, including a reference to the junior Senator from Wisconsin. We were sorry to see this done.

It is unfair to a playwright to emasculate parts of his happier dialogue, and then pass off the diluted product as his work, to say nothing of arbitrarily adding-material.

The staff was aware of the contents of the play when it was chosen, and if they felt it might be offensive to some of the audiences on the tour-itinerary, they were free to select some other piece, instead of blunting Mr. Kesselring's pen. (Besides since the performance in High Point, scheduled for February 19th, is to be sponsored by the American legion post there, the Playmakers' Girl-Scout gentility may not be appreciated.)

The production as directed by Harry E. Davis, was just a little ragged in spots. In particular, the pacing of the comedy wasn't as smooth as it might have been; but during the course of the run here, which extends through Saturday night, the timing of the humor should sharpen and the cast will very likely acquire ad-ditional polish where needed.

Eva McKensie was sparkling as Aunt Abbly Brewster. She cavorted through her aberrated menage and the representation of the aunts' macabre hobby with adept grace. Marion Fitz-Simons too, as Martha, the other murderess, was quite good.

William Trotman gave a riotous protrayal of Teddy Brewster, the nephew who believes himself to be Theodore Roosevelt. In the play he makes several "charges" up a staircase which he thinks is San Juan hill; aside from this being funny, the stair-prop has to bear considerable stress, and yet be portable for the tour. James Riley, whose sets always are good, deserves special credit for his property-design here.

Mary McGuire and Len Bullock performed capably in the romantic leads, and David Patton was entertaining as the alcoholic plastic-surgeon. Baxter Sasses, however, playing the criminal nephew, made a rather leaden "heavy;" we felt his characterization too stiff and somber, lacking in spontaneity. Both Donald Treat's lighting, and Irene Smart's costuming were excellent.

Despite a few divots in the greens, "Arsenic and Old Lace" was relaxing, enjoyable, and scored better than par.

Frosh Cagers Run Roughshod Over Campbell's JV's, 105-79

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

Individual scoring figures released last night by the NCAA shaw that Carolina's Lennie Rosenbluth is second in the nation in scoring. Robin Freeman, 5'10" Ohio State cager, is the only player in the nation with a higher average than Rosenbluth. Freeman has scored 117 points in three games for a 39 point average. Rosenbluth has tallied 106 in three games for a 35.3 average.

Larry Parker, senior left halfback on last season's football team, will play one more game gefore hanging up his cleats for good. Parker leaves today for Miami, where he will begin practice for the Shrine North-South All-Star game there Christmas night. Parker is the only Big Four representative on the 25-man South squad.

Quite a few years ago the Fordham Rams and the Pittsburgh Panthers were two of the mightiest college grid teams in the nation. For the past few seasons they have both been door mats for the new grid powers to casually scrape their feet on.

Once accustomed to glory and prestige, it is doubly humiliating for a king to accept the role of a pawn. Both Fordham and Pitt have recently taken measures to remove themselves from the football gutter, and therein lies a curious contrast. Pitt has struck out on the path it hopes leads back to national prominence, as in the heyday of their great coach, Jock Sutherland. The Panthers have had formidable playing schedules lined up for them for the coming seasons, and their bosses are generally expending the cash to secure the additional talent necssary to meet the challenge.

On the other hand, Fordham announced Wednesday that it was dropping football because of "the continuing financial loss." Fordham first competed in football back in 1833 and gained nation-wide fame under Coach Sleepy Jim Crowley, one of Notre Dame's Four Horsemen. The Rams appeared in the Cotton Bowl in 1941 and the Sugar Bowl in 1942. Their 63-year record shows 254 wins, 159 losses, and 35 ties. Just two weeks ago Coach Ed Danowski resigned after one of the worst seasons in the school's history. The Rams won only one game against seven losses and a tie. Danowski, an all-time Fordham great, had piloted the team since 1946.

Fordham is the 25th school to drop the sport since the end of the 1946 season, and the only one to quit since the past season ended. Seven schools dropped football after the 1953 season.

All this talk of Fordham and Pitt may strike the Carolina grid fan as uninteresting. But one might draw an interesting comparison between Carolina and Fordham. When a school once as great in football as Fordham was drops the sport entirely, it may well be time for a critical analysis of our own situation here.

It was only too obvious that Carolina was out of its class last season against Notre Dame, Maryland, and even Duke. (admitted begrudgingly) As if things weren't bad enough, UNC opens up against Oklahoma next year. The Tar Heels stand to lose against all four of those opponents next season, plus Tennessee and Georgia. They will be lucky to beat South Carolina and Wake Forest. It's a good thing we play State and Virginia.

Having such national powers as Notre Dame and Maryland play here affords residents of the Raleigh-Durham area excellent entertainment. The Romans got a big kick out of seeing the Christians tossed to the lions, too. But after awhile the Christians became tired of being lion's food.

The alumni want big time football, and so do I. But one of these days we should either get all the way in, or get out.

I wonder if the alumni expects the Christians to eat the lions next year.

Maryland's Terrapins Invade Duke Tonight For Return Tilt

Durham, N. C., Dec. 17 — Maryland's once—beaten, possession-minded Terrapins, the only team to defeat Coach Harold Bradley's Duke cagers this season, invade Duke Indoor Stadum tonight at 8:15 for a return Atlantic Coast Conference battle with the Blue Devils.

In a preliminary to the varsity contest the Duke freshmen will meet the Special Service Forces from Fort Bragg, starting at 6:30.

The two—game serie with Maryland is the highlight of the pre—Christmas schedule for the Blue Devils. Having already dropped the first game 49—47 in College Park, the Dukes would like nothing better than to revenge that defeat with a victory before the home crowd tonight.

Ronnie Mayer and Joe Belmont, both of whom are averaging close to 20 points per contest, are certain starters at a forward and guard post respectively. Junior Morgan will be center and Don Tobin will be at one of the other two spot depending on whether Coach Harold Bradley elects to start guard Harold Turner or forward Jack Kalbfus.

Kalbfus won the starting assignment in the past two contests, but against Davidson Turner turned in a sterling performance, scoring 21 points.

Bradley's quint boasts a 3—1 overall record to date and a 2—1 mark in conference play. In their first game of the season the Blue Devils set a new ACC single game scoring record when they walloped Clemson 115—54. The high—scoring Dukes have bettered the century mark on one other occasion ths season, their 107—75 triumph over Davidson.

It is very doubtful that the Blue Devils will come anywhere close to the century mark here tonight against th slow—moving Terps, but veteran experts agree that the game shows every sign of being a close, hard—fought contest, just like the first meeting between these same two clubs.

Coach Bud Millikan's Terps bring a 2—1 record in ACC competiion and a 4—1 season's record into tonight's contest. Maryland's loop victories have been over Duke and their loss was an overtime decision to Wake Forest.

Leading the Terps is veteran center Bob Everett who has been a standout in early season contests. The 6—6 Everett averaged better than ten points pr contest last season. Trailing Everett by a narrow margin was Keesler with 14.

Rams Virtual Cinch To Cop Pro Offense Title

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16 (AP)—Unless the Cleveland Browns or the Detroit Lions go completely wild in their regular season finale Sunday, the Los Angeles Rams will wind up as the National Football League's top offensive team of 1954.

The Browns and the Lions would have to run up more than 1,000 yards each in their warmup for the NFL championship to catch the leading Rams. This is highly improbable since both temas are expected to take it easy in this game that's played in anticipation of the big one the following Sunday.

Ios Angeles has gained a total of 5,187 yards, 2,140 rushing and 3,047 in the air. Last year the Philadelphia Eagles won the total offense title with 4,811 yards.

The San Francisco 49ers trail the Rams in total offense but are out in front of the rushing statistics released today by the league headquarters. The 49ers have a total of 4,704 yards with 2,498 rushing and 2,206 passing. Third plac is held by the Chicago Bears with 4,246 yards on 1,142 rushing and 3,104 passing.

Detroit, in fourth place with 4,160 and Cleveland, fifth with 4,011 have a chance to move up on the leaders in their extra game postponed from last October.

Frosh Wrestling: Duke Tops UNC; Varsity Seeks Revenge Tonight

By AL KORSHUN

The University of North Carolina varsty wrestling team tackles Duke at 3:30 today in the Blue Devil arena. The Tar Heel matmen will be in quest of their first victory, having droppd a decision to Davidson College in Greensboro last week in their first match of the season, an exhibition for the North Carolina high school wrestling clinic.

Co—captains Miles Gregory and Pete McGhee scored the only pins for the Tar Heels in the Davidson tiff. McGhee fights in the 147-pound class, while Gregory is a 177—pounder.

Coach Sam Barnes' aggregation is comparatively young and inexperienced. Only Gregory, McGhee, and Arthur Gregory are seniors. The remainder of the squad is composed of ten sophomores and three juniors. Seven of these sophomores won numerals on the frosh wrestling team last year.

Tonight's encounter winds up the UNC outfit's pre—Christmas schedule. Their next match is against Washington & Lee here January 8.

The Carolina freshman wrestling team lost it's first match of the season to Duke yesterday, 19—13. The outcome of the meet wasn't decided until the last four individual matches when Duke rallied to win two decisions and two falls and thus erase an early Carolina lead.

UNC jumped to an early lead on a forfeit, a decision, and a pin. At 123 lb. David Wall got a forfeit and five points for Carolina, and in one of the best perrormances of the afternoon Stirling Haig won a very decisive 9—4 decision over Duke's Hollenfield. In the 147 lb. class Jack Gray scored a pin in 2:40 over Don Stout, one of Duke's top wrestlers, to put the Frosh out in front by the widest margin they held all afternoon. In two other close matches, UNC's Ken Hoke and Charlie Thompkins were decisioned by the Blue Devils' Bill Meffort and Sam Meneffe, 6—2 and 4—2, respectively.

Summary of the match:

123 lb. — David Wall (UNC) defeated White (D) 5—0

130 lb. — Sterling Haig (UNC) decisioned Holly Holenfeld 9—4

137 lb. — John Gregg (D) pinned Jim Toland (UNC) 1:53

147 lb. — Jack Gray (UNC) pinned Don Stout (D) 2:40

157 lb. — Bill Meffort decisioned Ken Hoke (UNC) 6—2

167 lb. — Sam Meneffe (D) decisioned Charlie Thompkins (UNC) 4—2

177 lb. — Sal Bendayan (D) pinned Tommy West (UNC) 1:30

HW. — Amos Kearns (D) decisioned John Haywood (UNC) 5—0

Baker Picked Over Wallace

NEW YORK, Dec. 16 (AP)—Bob Baker and Coley Wallace, two old rivals from the amateur days, meet tomorrow at Madison Square Garden in a rematch of their Oct. 1 bout at Cleveland wth Baker a 3 to 1 favorite to repeat.

Big Bob, hulking Pittsburgh Negro, dropped Wallace for a count of nine in the fourth round at Cleveland and battered him around the ring in the ninth and tenth to win a unanimous decison. Nobody pad much attention because the fight took place during the World Series when Cleveland was plunged in deep mourning over the plight of its Indians.

For years Baker has been touted as a man with a future in the heavyweight ranks. Bad hands and slipshod training habits resulted in a series of dsappontment after by a knockout at the hands of Clarence Henry in 1951.

Baker has a modest five—fight winning streak going now and holds a decision over Nino Valdes, the No. 1 challenger, scored at Huntington, W. Va., May 21, 1953. As an amateur he whipped Wallace in the 1949 Golden Gloves.

"Down" to 210 pounds, Baker has moved up to No.4 ranking among the contenders and is anxious to meet Valdes in a rematch, or any other heavy in the business.

Wallace's career also has been disappointng. Boomed as "the new Joe Louis" when he came out of the amateurs, largely because he bore an amazing facial resemblance to the Bomber, Coley never settled down to work on his career Although he's finishing his fifth year as a pro, he had had only 24 fights, winning 20. However, three of his four defeats have been by knockouts to Elkins Brothers, Jimmy Bivins and Ezzard Charles.

The 10—round match, scheduled for 10 p.m. EST will be carried on network radio and television NBC with about 4,000 expected to attend. It will be the last of the Friday night series until Jan. 7.

Mays Selected Most Valuable

NEW YORK, Dec. 16 (AP)—Willie Mays, the acrobatic centerfielder who won the National League batting championship and helped the New York Giants sweep the pennant and World Series, today was voted most valuable player in the league.

Down in San Juan, where Mays is leadng the Puerto Rican winter league with a .428 average with the Santurce club, Willie's comment was a characteristic, "That's good."

Mays took the award in stride, commenting that he thought Johnny Antonelli, his Giants teammate, had a good chance of winning it.

Antonelli, however, didn't receive as much support as some thought he would get. The final totals of the vote by the 24—man committee three from each league city of the Baseball Writers Assn. of America rated Mays, Cincinnati's Ted Kluszewski, Antonelli, Brooklyn's Duke Snider and New York's Alvin Dark in that order.

Mays received 16 of the 24 firsts and Kluszewski, who led both leagues wth 49 homers and 141 runs batted n, drew seven firsts. The other first place vote went to Dark.

On the basis of points, 14 for first and then 9—8—7—6—5—4—3—2—1, Mays had 283, Kluszewski 217, Antonelli 154, Snider 135 and Dark 110.

Stan Musial of St. Louis, winner in 1943—46—48, finished sixth with 97 points, followed by Philadelphia's Robin Roberts, 70, Milwaukee's Joe Adcock 60, Brooklyn's Pee Wee Reese 53, and Gil Hodges, 40.

Roy Campanell, winner in 1951 and 1953 but handicapped by a hand injury during '54, didn't get a single point. Neither did teammate Jackie Rboinson of Brooklyn who won in 1949. Hank Sauer of Chicago, who won in 1952, received only one point.

PEAHEAD GETS RAISE

MONTREAL, Dec. 16 (AP)—Douglas "Peahead" Walker today signed a two-year contract to coach the Montreal Alouettes of the Big Four Football League.

The signing was announced by Vic Obeck, vice president of the Alouettes, who said that Walker was given a salary increase. The amount of the salary and increase were not disclosed but it had been predicted theformer Wake Forest coach would receive at least $15,000 a year.

Raschi Expects Sale of Yanks

RANSVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 16 (AP)—Sale of the New York Yankee was predicted by Vic Raschi, former Yankee pitcher, as he addressed the Dansville Rotary Club.

Raschi said "The Yankees are disposing of all their minor league franchises and have already sold Yankee Stadium. I look for the sale of the club one of these days,"

Raschi, sold by the Yankees to the St. Louis Cardinals last spring, said he was pleased with the report of Cardinal Manager Eddie Stanky that next season he would be a "once—a—week" pitcher. "This means," he said, "that I'll purobably work mostly against the League's top clubs."

Raschi labeled Brooklyn as the team to beat in 1955.

Collapsible Defense For Terps

By BERNIE WEISS

Basketball coach Frank McGuire plans to use a collapsible man-to-man defense against Maryland tomorrow night when the Terps invade Woollen Gym to do battle with the Tar Heels in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

The encounter is scheduled for 8 o'clock, following a 6:15 preliminary between the freshman and Charlotte High School.

The Terrapins, who lost All-American Gene Shue via graduation, have resorted to a control-type of offense to win their games. So far, they have defeated Georgetown, Duke and Virginia and lost only to Wake Forest in an overtime period.

According to freshman coach Buck Freeman, Maryland plays the ball very tight on offense, shooting only when the way is clear, and the Terps' rebounding prowess takes care of any lost shots. "Their rebounding and defense is terrific," said Freeman.

The team is missing Shue, who holds every individual record in the school's books, but a starting five which averages 6'5" looks imposing. Bob Kessler, 6'5" forward, is rated as Shue's successor. "He is the best man on the team," Freeman continued.

Bob Everett and Frank Fuqua, 6'6" and 6'8", respectively, comprise the Terrapin rebound power. Fuqua is only a sophomore, but he was just discharged from the Marines after three years of cage experience. Everett and Fuqua are expected by Carolina big-wigs to operate out of a double-pivot, with Kessler working a one-hand push shot from outside.

Freeman frankly says that Maryland is one of the best teams in the conference.

The Terrapin starting line-up will consist of Kessler and Everett at forwards, Fuqua at center, and Bob O'Brien (6'3") and Bob Dillworth (6'4") at guards. John Sandbower, Mark Vodovia and Dave Webster make up the bulk of the Maryland reserve strength.

STATE PLAYS TEXAS TECH

N. C. State's Wolfpack puts its national cage reputation squarely on the line Saturday night at 8:15 p. m. in the Reynolds Coliseum when Coach Everett Case's squad tangles with Texas Tech's defending Border Conference champions.

Tar Babies Lead All The Way, Hitting Century Mark For First Time This Year

UNC's freshman cagers racked up their sixth victory in as many starts by rolling roughshod over the Campbell College Junior Varsity last night in Buie's Creek, 105-79. It was the first time this season Coach Buck Freeman's Tar Babies reached the century mark in scoring.

Jumping off to an early 7-0 lead, the Chapel Hill lads were never seriously threatened. They led at halftime, 55-36.

Tommy Kearns, speedy UNC guard, led the scoring with 27 points. Joe Quigg had 24; Pete Brennan and Bob Cunningham garnered 19 and 17, respectively.

SAWYERS COLLINS BROWN (RIGHT) AND MAC JOHNSON—HALFWAY DOWN
. . . "nothin' but makin' time here" . . .

Mighty Oak Is Going But Not Gone

The big fivefoot thick post oak downed on West Rosemary Street by the October hurricane started on the final leg of its trip to the graveyard yesterday. But it looked like it'd be a mighty long and tough haul.

Railing to find a five-foot power saw, two town workmen began the job of cutting through the huge tre with a hand crosscut saw. Maintenance employees Mac Johnson and Collins Brown started cutting into the log 10 a.m., and at quitting time late in the afternoon they were scarely half way through it on on the same cut.

The town's responsible for disposing of the tree which crushed two cars when it fell alongside the Colonial House, because it stood in the right of way by the street. Considerable money has been spent in recent years in pruning and maintaining the ancient oak.

When the workmen get it sawed up in small enough pieces, bull-dozer operator Ben Best will move in with his loader to try to load the sections onto a truck to be hauled away. Several naturalists have asked Town Manager Thomas D. Rose if they could have a thin section of the big tree. But at present the town is more concerned on getting the tree cut into sections, than as tow who'll get 'em.

On through the day the laborious job moved yesterday, as a spindly stream of sawdust spewed from the wedge at each 10-inch stroke. It was hard work and the workers had to rest frequently. Johnson stretched his arms to relav a moment and surveyed the stalwart bulk of the trunk.

"We ain't doin' nothin' but makin' time here. —When I works I likes to be able to see I's doin' somethin'."

WUNC Announces Schedule

WUNC, the University's FM radio station, has announced its plans for operation during the Christmas holidays.

The station will schedule a number of holiday programs beginning this week and continuing through next Wednesday.

Both music and dramatic programs with Christmas themes will be included in the brodacasts each evenihg, according to WUNC John Young, manager of the station.

The final program of the current year will be a broadcast of a complete version of Handel's "Messiah" on Wednesday night.

The station will go off the air from next Wednesday until the evening of Jan. 2. Young explained that the interruption in WUNC's broadcasts was necessary because the entire operating staff is composed of University students.

"A skeleton staff will stay here through the 22 to keep us on the air," he said, "and we are most appreciative of their willingness to keep us on the air that long."

Four To Get Grants

Dean D. D. Carroll, chairman of the University Scholarship Committee, and Dean C. P. Spruill, chairman of the Braswell Scholarship Committee, announced yesterday that four freshmen here have been awarded the Braswell Scholarships for the 1954-55 academic year.

The winners are Donald Coleman Eudy, Concord; Harry McCarley Giles Jr., Gastonia; Thomas Hoke Huss, Oxford, and Robert Washington Long Jr., Conway.

The Braswell Scholarships are provided by a fund of $21,000 set up in memory of Dr. Mark R. Braswell of Rocky Mount, class of 1888. The income from the endowment is designated for four scholarships of $200 each annually.

Recipients are judged on character, scholastic attainment, financial need and general all-round worthiness. The four winners for the 1954-55 year were selected from a group of 45 freshmen.

BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS

Helped Save Lives in Our Hospitals During the Last 6 Months!

In treating the ill and the injured, there is no substitute for blood. Even in these days of "wonder drugs," blood is one thing that cannot be mined or manufactured. It must be given. And you and your fellow Americans are the only ones who can give it!

In addition to the blood needs of our community — blood is needed to build a national reserve of blood derivatives. This reserve is a form of "life insurance" for hundreds of thousands in time of disaster. Yes, your priceless, painless gift will some day help save an American life! So give blood — now!

Yes, You Can Get WUNC-TV On Regular Sets—Schenkkan

"There's no problem at all," said Robert F. Schenkkan, director of television for the three universities of North Carolina, yesterday in answer to inquiries from people throughout the state who want to know if they can receive WUNC-TV on their regular sets.

"WUNC-TV can be received on any set within the reception area, he said. "No adapter is needed.

"We're very fortunate," he added, "in that WUNC-TV is a VHF (very high frequency) station. This means that our viewers will be able to get the clearest picture possible without the extra expense of altering their seas in any way."

WUNC-TV, channel 4 is to open on Jan. 4. Televising hours have been scheduled on Monday through Friday from 3:30 to 10 p.m. and on Saturday and Sunday nights from 6 to 10 o'clock. Reception is expected to be possible within a 100 mile radius of here.

Story's Twisted, —Teacher

Says She Requested Reasons Made Public

"The last sentence of the Victory Village News article entitled 'Fireworks in Village Nursery Teacher Fired,' written by Dan Wallace, is a misrepresentation of fact," said Mrs. Marjorie Beshers, nursery teacher who was dismissed by the Village board of directors at the beginning of the month.

The sentence which Mrs. Beshers was referring to read, "After the closed meeting ended, Mrs. Beshers refused to have the proceeding of the closed session made public."

Mrs. Beshers said that she "requested that specific reasons for my dismissal be given in open meeting. In reply, the Victory Village board of directors voted to go into closed session."

Mrs. Beshers said that during the session she "declined to sign a statement releasing the board from suit for libel and told the board that if their charges were true. I would have no grounds for suit."

"The board then refused to list specific reasons for my dismissal, which pertained to parent complaints. Neither parent names nor complaints were revealed to me," said the former nursery teacher.

The board then offered to list specifics for publication in The Daily Tar Heel and asked her if she would sign such a list, according to Mrs. Beshers, and she said the she would not.

"No written list was presented to me," added Mrs. Beshers.

"Mr. Wallace, the author of the column, is a reporter on The Daily Tar Heel and a member of the Victory Village board of directors," concluded Mrs. Beshers.

1919 Yack Was Right:

Hodges Made Good

LUTHER H. HODGES
...as a senior at UNC

By ROBERT W. MADRY
Director, UNC News Bureau

"Luke will make good in a big way."

That's one of the things the Yackey-Yack write—up, given every departing senior, said about Luther Hartwell Hodges, North Carolina's new Governor, when he was graduated from UNC with the Class of 1919.

Looking back upon those yesteryears Hodges' professors, classmate and other contemporaries are not surprised that the Rockingham County boy eventually was elevated to the highest political office in the state.

CAME UP THE HARD WAY

Luther Hodges came up the hard way. His father was a hard working Leaksville merchant and did fairly well, but he had a large family, and when it came Luther's turn to enter college, the youngster realized he would have to make his own way. And he did.

His first student aid came in the form of a $70 loan from the late Rev. P. H. Gwynn of Leaksville. With that young Luther was able to pay tuition and other registration fees to enter the University.

His first self-help job and the one he held for several years along with other assorted jobs was as dish wiper in Swain Hall, where the majority of the students took their meals.

FIRST SELF-HELP JOB

"He was the fastest dish wiper I ever saw, and I was thrown with many of them in those days," says Leary W. Adams of The Charlotte Observer staff, one of Hodges' fellow students here.

"Even in kitchens you learn a lot about men. You learn who is going to stick to the job, do his part and a little bit more, and

Graham Issues Reprimand:

WC Magazine Staff Quits Over Nude Male's Picture

GREENSBORO—The entire student staff of Woman's College's "Coraddi," undergraduate literary magazine, resigned this week after Chancellor E. K. Graham issued a sharp reprimand for exceeding "the limits of good taste."

The controversy arose over a page-length drawing of a nude male and a short story entitled "Humans, Blades and Faith."

Before the Chancellor's censure, the student Legislature considered a resolution for reprimanding the "Coraddi." However, on the advice of a faculty councilor, the legislature turned down the reprimand motion.

In his verbal whack at the standards of the magazine, Chancellor Graham pointed out that "A wide range of opportunity for the self-expression of the artist is not only recognized but insisted upon by the Woman's College. Nevertheless, art galleries, exhibitions to which people may go on this campus, booklets designed for people who are (or should be) interested in art and comparable places are the right setting for uninhibited realism."

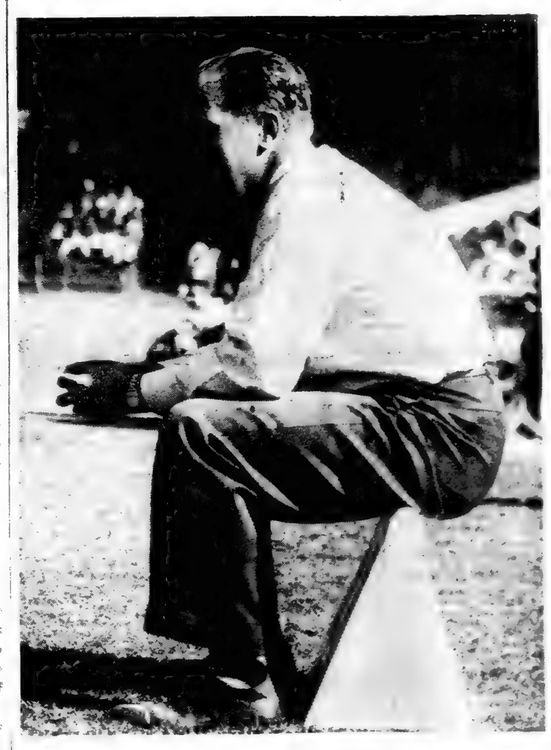
On the other hand the editor of the magazine, Debora Marcus of New York, N. Y. said in her statement of resignation that "good taste in a fne arts magazine is the same as good taste in art, and that anything that is suitble for drawing and writing is suitable for printing or exbiting."

About Football:

Barclay Has A Philosophy

By ARCHER NEAL

George Barclay is a man who has a philosophy about football which isn't particularly unique, but which is certainly refreshing, coming from a coach. He says it's fine for a boy to play football as long as he comes to school for an education, and not just to play football. He's thankful that the University of North Carolina feels that way about it.



Barclay, who has just completed his second season as head football coach at UNC, has been under fire recently for not having a better season. His record this year has been four wins, five losses and one tie. His first UNC team, in 1953 won four and lost six. Barclay's contract with the University has another year to run. There have been rumors recently to the effect that the contractual relationship between the coach and the University should be severed. As far as Barclay knows, he says that "as far as I'm concerned, nobody said anything to me about the fact that I wasn't the coach. The only thing I heard was what I read in the newspapers and heard over the radio." Nothing has changed in respect to him and the University.

UNC Chancellor Robert B. House issued a statement to the fact that "The University desires to disassociate itself emphatically from certain rumors launched in the public press to the effect that the University was seeking to dismiss Mr. Barclay. We have never had a coach more cooperative with the University purposes than Mr. Barclay."

THERE'S PRESSURE

Barclay says "there's pressure on any coach to win, or else: It's one of the evils of coaching. When there's a winner, there has to be a loser. It's the cause of a lot of headaches. When Carolina plays the best teams, as it does, it takes time to build up a team. Games such as Carolina plays are a 50-50 chance. A lot depends on the breaks—football is a game of

Shake Hands With Simon Savapolsk

The sun sets early in December and it was going down, over behind the Methodist Church steeple, before we finished the mechanical business of arranging the words on this page yesterday and settled down to write about Christmas.

There was a somber red in the West and our thoughts of Christmas trees and presents got mixed up with thoughts about the setting sun and the one great sky that goes for all places and all people.

The sun we watched go down, someone, on some shore, saw rising. Since Christmas implies brotherhood and does not rule out such a thing as love, we direct your week-before-Christmas thoughts to him, a Pole, perhaps, or a Netherlander. Or a Russian or a Japanese. We are not sure of our solar timetable.

In years to come, as the range of our bombers increases, the range of our thoughts will have to increase to include the man. It will be necessary some day to make a choice: Whether it is best to kill him (and risk his killing us) or to shake his hand. The choice implicit in Christmas is not the one the world has made a precedent, for the most conspicuous activity of nations these days is the blowing of each other up.

E. B. White wasn't thinking of Christmas when he wrote these words eight years ago, but they apply:

"Whether we wish it or not, we may soon have to make a clear choice between the special nation to which we pledge our allegiance and the broad humanity of which we were born a part. We have a little time in which we can make the choice intelligently. Failing that, the choice will be made for us in the confusion of war, from which the world will emerge unified—the unity of total destruction.

"We must accept the curious burden of taking the entire globe to our bosoms. The special feeling of an Englishman for a stream in Devonshire or a lane in Kent will have to run parallel to his pride in Athens and his insane love of Jersey City. The special feeling on a Dutchman for a dike in Holland will have to extend onward and outward until it finds the Norris Dam and the terraces of Egypt. . ."

And someone who watches the sun go down in Chapel Hill will have to see, not only the immediate beauty of the Western sky, but the immense proportion and essential unity of the whole world into which Christ was born.

Surely, if Christmas does not mean this, it has no meaning.

An Old Story About Nick & The KA's

Louis Kraar

THE SIX children tramped into the Delta Delta Delta sorority house just ahead of me. By the time I got inside, they were all sitting around the big green and white living room singing.

"What'll we do now?" one of the Tri Delts asked her sorority sisters when the song was over.

"I've almost forgotten what we used to play when we were this age," another said.

"Oh, you'd better watch out. . ." began the children, deciding that another song apparently was in order."

"WHAT DO you want Santa to bring you, a Hopalong Cassidy?" one of the girls asked the child nearest her.

"No, I want a Gene Autry."

I asked someone what the difference was, but another group of kids roared into the room, and I couldn't hear the answer.

Someone lit a fire in the fireplace, next to which stood a white Christmas tree. The piles of coats filled chairs, and the children sat on the floor.

Soon Don Geiger came in with another herd of children, and within a few minutes three more groups arrive. The room began to fill up with Kappa Alpha fraternity men looking for their dates, Tri Delts looking after the children, and children looking at the crackling fire and Christmas tree.

"WE'VE HAD this party with the Tri Delts for as long as anyone can remember," Layton McCurdy, one of the KA's told me as I found a seat on the carpet.

"Ho, ho, ho!" came a big voice from the other room at just that point. And Santa Claus came in.

"Have ya'll been smart in school, children?" the fat man in the red suit asked.

The KA's and Tri Delts laughed, probably thinking about all the quizzes that this week has brought.

The children began singing "Santa Claus Is Coming To Town," and someone told me the story of what happened to "Santa Claus" three years ago.

Santa for this annual party for underprivileged Negro children has always been Hargraves, the KA houseboy. Christmas before last, when the party was at the KA house, Hargraves began coming down the steps to meet the kids.

About half way down the steps, Santa (Hargraves) lost his trousers.

"Scuse Santa Claus, children," Hargraves said on that fateful day three years ago, and the KA's have been repeating it with a chuckle ever since.

THIS WAS Christmas in Chapel Hill for some children, a fraternity, and a sorority.

Like Hargraves' now-legendary "Scuse Santa Claus, children," doing something for others seems part of what we call Christmas. The kids at this party, one of many this week here in Chapel Hill, probably won't have much more Christmas .

The fraternity and sorority members at this party, like the rest of us, will have much more. They'll have something that couldn't be obtained any other way than with Santa Claus and children who might not have had a Santa.

Santa Enters Chapel Hill (Abetted By Horace & Bill)

Ed Yoder

SCENE: The void. In the misty distance stands the Golden Gate. St. Peter is seen reclining against a cloud pillow. In the foreground is a pink cloud. William Richardson Davie and Horace Williams are seated on the cloud. From time to time, they take handfuls of snowflakes out of red and green baskets and toss them over their shoulders.

Williams: (as he pats his pet goat) What time is it, Bill?

Davie: (With a yawn) Getting on toward midnight, Horace. I really don't like this job. It's a boring way to spend Christmas Eve.

Williams: Well, St. Nick's got to get around down there among the mortals tonight. What would he do without snow?

Davie: (Brushing a cobweb from his Revolutionary War uniform) I guess you're right Horace. You usually are, in fact. Say, pass me another basket of snowflakes. I'm almost out. —And watch out, old goatie's eating another basketful.

Williams (shooing a goat out of the way and almost stepping on his pet chicken.) Shoo! Here you go, Bill. (Hands another basket of snowflakes to Williams.)

(Out of the swirling nebulae comes a merry but distant and disturbed voice)

Wi—l—li—ams! Da—vie!

Davie: Why that's St. Nick now—and calling us.

Williams: Sure enough, it's Santa all right. I can hear his sleigh-bells and I can see Donder's nose glimmering over there towards Jupiter. Here Santa! Here we are!

(In a few seconds Santa's sleigh rises out of the distance and comes to rest on the pink cloud. Santa shakes the snow out of his white beard.)

Santa: Boy! You're really pouring it on thick and fast. Sleigh's never had such smooth going before.

Williams: Glad to hear that, Nick. How're things going?

Santa: That's what I wanted to see you about. I'm fine. But do you know what? I couldn't get into Chapel Hill tonight.

What? Couldn't get into Chapel Hill?

Santa: That's what I said. This is the way it happened: I had just taken off from the Duke campus (where, incidentally, I left many a stockingful of switches) and was headed up the Durham highway on the way into Chapel Hill. The snow was coming down all right and the sleigh was gliding along when all of a sudden I found a blockade in the road. A whole mob of students were standing on the road; I stopped the reindeer and got out.

"You can't go into Chapel Hill, old man," they told me.

"Why?" I asked.

"It's obvious," they said. "You can't enter because you have a red suit on—and furthermore your lead reindeer's got a nose that gets pinker by the minute."

"But I don't understand," I protested. "I don't see what red suits have to do with it. I'm the spirit of Christmas. I'm Santa Claus!"

The minute I said that they all laughed, sounding like a chorus of your goats, Horace.

"We don't believe in Santa Claus any more," they said. "As a matter of fact, we've all studied geology and zoology and if you ask us, most of these myths are the grossest kind of rubbish."

Well, Horace, I don't need to tell you and Bill that this made my big bulbous nose light up higher than Donder's.

Williams: Nick, this is outrageous.

Santa: The irony of it was that I had all sorts of presents for the students in my bag. I'm sure Chancellor House will be disgusted if I don't get into Chapel Hill. I have a new car for him; I hear his got banged up when Hazel came through Chapel Hill. I know South Building will be a sea of tears if I don't get in: I've got a new harmonica for the Chancellor, too. For Dean Weaver I've got a new leatherbound copy of the Cantos of Ezra Pound and a new set of golf clubs for President Gray. What can I do?

Davie: Don't worry Nick. We'll work it all out. I'm disappointed, though, that Chapel Hill has fallen into the snare of this antipathy to anything that's red. It's the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard of. Why, we ought to send Tom Jefferson down there tonight to preach a sermon. But he and Alexander Hamilton have been having a running debate for lo these many years and even Christmas Eve doesn't stop that. What can we do, Horace?

William: I'll get the Chancellor on the interstellar phone right now. (Picks up phone slightly dented from gnawings by his goat) Shoo! Hello. Long distance, give me Chancellor House right away; Christmas priority. Hello, hello, Bob. Yes, fine. Listen: Santa's having trouble getting into Chapel Hill. Yes, yes, and he was going to bring you a new car and a new harmonica. Wouldn't let Santa in because of his red suit. Ridiculous? Yes, that's what I told him. What? I suspected that! Thanks, Bob. I'll tell him. Thanks. Merry Christmas to you, too. (Hangs up telephone.)

Davie and Santa: (in unisen) What about it?

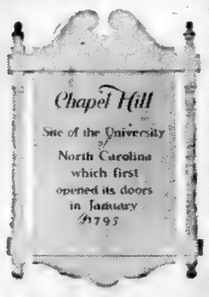
Williams: I'm so mad I could toot Gabriel's horn. Do you know what? Those weren't Carolina students. They had come over from Duke. I suspected as much. The Chancellor's sending a detail headed by Ray Jefferies out to drive them away.

Davie and Santa: (inunison) What about pel Hill hasn't changed so much after all.

Santa: Well, I'm much obliged to you, Morace and Bill. I knew I could count on old Chapel Hillians. Right now I've got to go in a big hurry to make Chapel Hill by midnight. (Into the sleigh) Up Comet, up Cupid, up Donder and Blitzen!

Williams and Davie: (calling after him) Merry Christmas, Nick.

(Out of the swirling nebulae comes a distant cry:)



Merry Christmas to all, to all a good night!

Williams: (Settling down again on the pink cloud) Fine old man, that Nick. Pass me another basket of snowflakes, Bill.

Christmas Time Is Love, Inc.

It doesn't matter that Christmas seems awfully commercialized in these modern times; it only seems that way. You can't commercialize a human being and we don't know a single person this Christmas who feels commercialized. A peasant carving a wooden doll before his fireplace isn't different from the Wall Street broker selecting a Cadillac for his wife. They're both trying, in their stumbling way, to tell somebody that they like them.

It's legal every day in the year to tell others you like them, but our relations with noters are so institutionalized in this world that we need another like Christmas to make it easy for us — even if we are so uncertain about it that we pick one of the shortest days of the year in which to do it. A former grade-school teacher of ours, now an old lady of imperishable quality, sent us a Christmas card today.

She isn't uneasy about saying it.

The card read: "Love alone diminishes not, but shines with its own light; makes an end of discord, softens the fires of hate, restores peace in the world, brings together the sundered, redresses wrong, aids all and injures none; and who so invokes its aid will find peace and safety and have no fear of future ill."

YOU Said It

Alma Mater, Soccer, Choo-Choo I Go Pogo

Editor:

No need to point out that Christmas is nearing and we shall all be exchanging gifts shortly. I have a lot of friends and I would like to give them a largess to them. My material means are small, but I can give them nearly four years. You are a classmate of mine and I think the idea would be particularly valued by you. We are seniors now and when we talk to freshmen we often tell them how it was when we were the greenhorns. Let's take a minute to reflect upon those years.

Remember when we first came to this rain-washed campus we were herded into Memorial Hall? We did not know the name of it during orientation, but during those first days we did a great deal of listening.

Perhaps some of the best listening we ever did or ever will do was to Dean Fred Weaver. He spoke to us about our University and then and there we slowly began to take possession. He advised us and told us the meaning of Alma Mater—nourishing mother. . .

Once we managed to live through rushing we still had to live through that intellectual limbo known familiarly as "Hygiene." My hands frankly are just as dirty (not to mention my mind on occasion). At that same time we joined the liniment brigade and fulfilled endless hours of fundamentals —that freshman plaque. Many of us took as many fundamentals as they could dish out, but by George we learned to play soccer.

I'll never forget the remorse we felt for missing by a year two hallowed names on the Carolina campus. Both Charlie "Choo-Choo" Justice and Dr. Frank Graham were a living part of the past . . .

In our college career we lived through an election year and campus politics went hell bent into the campaigns. None of us could cast a vote for Ike or Adlai, but one ballot was x'ed by each of us. "I go Pogo" and so do you and so did the entire campus. I look at the campus politics today and I still go Pogo.

In our day we got everything from a hurricane to a pool table. We have noted the unsung devotees of the university win chess meets and debate tournaments. We have gone from quarter to semester system, leisurely weekends to Saturday classes and now we have another semester ahead of us. For adopted sons, our mother has nourished us well. In our our years we have become brothers of a sort and to you and my classmates I want to wish a very pleasant holiday season. It's been wonderful being a part of the 1955 graduating class.

The Eye Of The Horse

A Couplet From The Mantelpiece At Spero's

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . — Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.

THE HORSE was busily nailing up four can-can length stockings on Spero's Bar, when I saw him.

"It's the only mantelpiece I can rest my elbow on," he said defensively, when I expressed my amazement. "So what?"

No, no, it was the four stockings I questioned.

"Well, gee, I have four hooves, ain't I?" The Horse argued. "I play no favorites That's me. Let Santa treat hoof and hoof alike when he fills the stockings."

I thought if The Horse stayed leaning his elbow on Spero's Mantelpiece long enough, more than just the stockings would be full-

'I never saw a merry party gathered about a pumphandle yet," The Horse shrugged, and Christmas is a time to make merry."

Also, it was a time for wishing, no...? For wishing Merry Christmases and Happy New Years, for wishing folks got what they wanted.

"Instead of getting what is coming to them, huh. Roger?" The Horse grinned wickedly. "Did I tell you I have composed an original Christmas Pome for this year's DTH Christmas issoo?"

He hadn't; but didn't he mean issue, and not issoo? What did issoo mean?

"Issue sounds like you are sneezing," The Horse said. "Say it a few times fast, and see what I mean. Everytime I hear the word, I absently say, Gesundheit. You wanna hear my original Christmas Pome?"

I would rather hear what The Horse wished for people, first.

"Well," The Horse, welding four extra lengths of can-can hosiery to the already king-size stockings he had nailed to Spero's Mantelpiece, "I wish Coach O'Barclay more power to his good right arm . . and for his team, into the bargain."

That was nice. What else?

"I wish Dramatic Arts the most dramatic and artistic Semester ahead, ever, and I wish Playmakers will play around with the idea of even bigger and better shows than Three For To-Night."

And . . bigger and better prices, hunh . . .?

"Well," The Horse chittered (I hate him when he chitters!) "we are trying to be dulicate Breadway, are we not, even unto $4.40 seats clearly indicated from the rear, so we could stare in wonder at collegiate faculties and stooges who can scare up the price for such stratospheric sitting down!"

Okay, next?

"For all the great and good Departments of our great and good University, I wish all the easy things in life," The Horse tossed off another wish. "And if they feel a like easiness assailing them when it comes time to make up the Final Quizzes, it will not held against them."

Good, and good. And for Departments other than the good ones?

"There are none such in this seat of Dixie Cultoor, sirrah!" The Horse snapped impressively with piano-keyboard dentures flashing menacingly. "We have naught but good Departments, and sterling teachers! Er . . . at Christmas time, anyway."

Was this all?

"Nope," The Horse noped. "Especially to our new and hardworking Television set-up, I wish them the best in everything . . . and would that the inexpert experts, who spend their busybody time criticising TV, could be tagged with the burden of whipping up programs (activating them, and sending them out on our Consolidated TV Network—Channel Four, beginning January 4, 1955—so that the haried experts could then sit and haw haw at the inexpert experts. But they wouldn't laugh, these our unsung heroes: for they are profoundly educated men, and well do they know the truth of what Poor Richard said in his Almamack for the year 1756: Love your enemies, for they tell you your faults."

Yeah? Well, who was it said: Bleassed be those who go about in circles, for they shall become Big Wheels?

"Sounds like Poor Richard," The Horse hoped. "Or was it Shakespeare? Those two guys said most everything, it seems to me."

And Confucius, don't forget!

"Roger!" The Horse reproved me sepulchrdally. "Do you not know Confucius was a Red? Do you not know all Chinese are Reds, retroactively, just as are all Rooshians and their aiders and abettors?"

Watch out! American Naval Hero John Paul Jones had helped Empress of All The Russias Catherine the Great! Watch out, now! Remember Battling Nell Lewis!

'Exactly," The Horse agreed with himself with typical equine aplomb. "A born revolutionary;; and a furriner, into the bargain. —ones, I mean . . ."

Scotch, I confirmed.

"I perfer Bourbon," The Horse misunderstood me. "But I am not one to stand on trivial issooes. And you have not heard my original Christmas Pome, yet."

I groaned, but manfully stood my ground. (The Horse still had my flagon of Scotch.)

" 'Twas the night before Christmas, 'And all o'er our campus' " The Horse baldly plagiarized, " 'not a creature was stirring not even a grampus.' "

A grampus! How could a grampus—a killer whale—stir on our campus?

"Ummmmmm, you see strange fish indeed on college campi these days," The Horse said. "But that is as far as my Pome has gone."

Gratia Dei, as Doc Ullman and Suskin put it-

"A Merry Christmas and the happiest of New Years," The Horse screamed enthusiastically, all but deafening me. 'to all you all Tar Heel guys and dolls, and to—and to —heck, let's shoot th' works: Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to you all, ugh Dooks. Woo! And may Nebraska join the seeds in the bottom of the Orange Bowl!"

Have fun, kids . . . and—DRIVE SAFELY so you can come back for a happy, Happy New Year!

Tar Heel Quint Out To Avenge Terp Football Defeat

Carolina Host To Maryland At 8 Tonight

"Revenge!" will be the word of the Tar Heels tonight.

Carolina meets Maryland's Terrapins in an Atlantic Coast Conference fray scheduled for 8 o'clock at the Woollen Gym, and Tar Heel coach Frank McGuire had only one thing to say about the game yesterday.

"We're out to get revenge for what they did to us in football."

In October, the football Tar Heels followed a hurricane to College Park, getting only four hours sleep on a late train, and were humbled on the grid by a band of red-shirted Terps, 33-0.

The score is expected to be much closer tonight, and the local following is hoping it will be "worm-turning time.

However profuse the "hoping" may be, the game will not be any push-over. Maryland, given an outside chance to cop honors in the conference this season, has shown up very well in early games and presents a definite threat to any of the Big Four teams. The Terps have already whipped Duke, and they lost to Wake Forest only after an over-time period.

Possession Offense

Maryland, which lost All-American Gene Shue last season via graduation, has changed this season to a possession type of offense which is something different in the high-scoring ACC. Most games thus far have been characterized by scores of 100 points or better but the first Terp-Blue Devil game, for example, was a 49-47 win for Maryland.

To combat the slow-moving offense, McGuire plans to use a collapsible man-to-man defense, which should contain some of the expert shooting of forwards Bob Kessler, Frank Fuqua, and center Bob Everett. The coaching staff here easily admits that these three players are helping to make up one of the ACC's best quints.

Furthermore, the Terrapin defense and rebounding is "terrific," according to freshman coach Buck Freeman. Everett and Fuqua, 6'6" and 6'8", respectively, comprise the Maryland rebounding power. They will probably work out of a double pivot on offense.

Scouting

Carolina yesterday wen through brief but spirited drills in the gym and last night the team was at Duke Indoor Stadium getting an advance view of Maryland. Coach McGuire says his team is in top shape and ready to get revenge.

The probable starting lineups:

Carolina		Maryland
Rosenbluth	F	Kessler
Vayda	F	Everett
Likins	C	Fuqua
Lifson	G	O'Brian
Radovich	G	Dillworth

Freshmen Meet Charlotte In 6:15 O'Clock Prelim

The game will be preceded by a freshman game, commencing at 6:15 o'clock.

The Tar Babies will take on Charlotte High School in the preliminary.

Undefeated, the frosh will be seeking their seventh victory of the year, and with the return of Bob Cunningham to the starting line-up, appear to be a safe bet. Cunningham, 6'3" forward from New York City, injured his ankle two weeks ago, aggravated the injury last week, but said after Thursday's victory over Campbell College that the ankle felt fine.

Coeds End Season

By JACKIE McCARTHY

The women's hockey club recently downed Guilford College 3-1 to finish the season with a 2—1—1 record. Playing their best game of the season, the Carolina lassies displayed some beautiful passing on the forward line, and some sterling defensive play. Trailing 1-0 at halftime, The Carolina coeds stormed from behind to down a fighting Guilford team. Wing Chappie Chapman, playing her last game for Carolina, scored in the second half, as did inner Joan Haley. Joan played perhaps her best game of the season, scoring twice.

Playing their final game for Carolina were senior momogram winners Sara Cashwell, inner; Charlotte Clement, halfback; Linda Clement, fullback; and Jackie McCarthy, center halfback.

Miss Marilyn Crawford, coach of the team, was very pleased with the showing of the team. She said that the girls improved consistently with each game they played. The opening game with Meredith College ended in a 0-0 tie. The team then lost a game to powerful Women's College 3-1, and then bounced back to trounce Duke 2-0 and Guilford 3—1.

It was a good season for the Carolina girls. It is hoped that more coeds will turn out for hockey club next season. With most of this years team returning, Carolina should have a winning hockey club next year.

Yanks Ready For Aussies

BRISBANE, Dec. 18 Saturday (AP)—"Bring on the Australians" was the confident cry of the American Davis Cup forces today as they prepared the final mopup of Sweden in the interzone finals.

The exuberant highriding Yanks clinched a berth in the challenge round yesterday when Vic Seixas and Tony Trabert scored a smashing 58-minute doubles triumph over Sven Davidson and Lennart Bergelin 6—3, 6—4, 6—3.

Following the first day singles victories, this gave Uncle Sam a 3-0 lead in the best—of—five match series and turned today's final two singles tests into a meaningles anti—climax.

Ham Richardson, young Rhodes Scholarship winner from Braton Rouge, La., was ubstituted for veteran Seixas with consent of the Swedes and will make his first Davis Cup appearance in Australia against Davidson. The other match sends Trabert, straight set conquereor of Davidson on the first day, against the wily 29—year—old Bergelin who carried Seixas to five hard sets.

U. S. Capt. Bill Talbert explained he desired to make the Richardson switch in order not to take chances with Seivas, who apparently is at the very peak of his form.

"Suppose Vic went out and hurt his leg as he did last year or had some other misfortune which might hurt his morale. We want to keep him hungry.

"We are now ready for the Australians. Bring them on. We came out of the Swedish matches at a physical and mental high and things look mighty good."

The team leaves Sunday for Sydney and a week of practices before the challenge round Dec. 27-29 on the White City Courts.

Bell, Millner Quit Redskins

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (AP)—Herman Ball and Wayne Millner, veterans of professional football, quit today as assistant coaches of the Washington Redskins.

Announcing their resignations, the club said head coach Joe Kuharich will choose replacements shortly.

General Manager Dick McCann said Ball "has several offers to remain in pro football but may take a business offer intead."

McCann said Millner, who spent 1951 as head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles, stepped out in order to devote all his time as assistant general manager of an automobile sales firm in Washington.

Their departures left Kuharich temporarily with only one coaching aide, Mike Nixon. The Redskins finished one of their worst seasons lat Sunday with a record of three victoric againt nine losses.

Ball, former assistant coach at the University of Maryland, has been with the Washington club 11 seasons. He took over as head coach in the middle of the 1949 season and lasted as top man until part way through the 1951 schedule.

He wound up as director of personnel, offensive and backfield coach.

Millner, one of Notre Dame's all-time great ends, served 16 of his 19 years in pro football with the Redskins. The first several were as a player. Laterly he has coached the ends.

Carter Gets Hickock Honor

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (AP)—Jimmy Carter, first fighter ever to regain a world championship twice, today was named the winner of the November award in the Hickok pro athlete of the year poll for his spectacular 15th technical knockout of Paddy De Marco.

The lightweight champion lost his crown to De Marco by decision on March 5. In their return in San Francisco, Nov. 17, Carter handed De Marco a sound trouncing, stopping him in the last round.

Carter received 29 first place votes and a total of 122 points on a 3—2—1 basis from a panel of sports writers and sportscasters. Frank Selvy, the high scoring pro basketballer was second with 78 points.

CONSENT, NOT CONTROL

The test of democracy is not control but consent. Moreover, real consent does not mean voting once every four years and then ignoring some mysterious ("they" as being "the Government." Consent must be a conemplify this ourselves, and it is tinuous process. We must explain that we must explain it more clearly to others. — New York Times.

When police arrived at the college haberdashery, they shook their heads in disbelief. Instead of being gagged and bound, the salesman was actually glued to the floor. They took quick stock of the clues . . . an empty glue pot, several odd-shaped pieces of cloth scattered about, an empty show-case, an empty cash drawer. Ingenious shirt-robbery!

"Ugg glub," said the salesman, still all stuck-up . . . stuck down, rather.

When they finally got him extricated with hot water and chisels, he thanked them nicely and said, "What's the matter with you jerks? I haven't been robbed."

"No," he explained, "I was simply making a demonstration of the Van Heusen Century shirt for some of the boys. Showed them why the revolutionary one-piece Century collar just won't wrinkle ever. Told 'em how regular collars are made of three layers of cloth, "glued" and stitched together. I glued a set, just for emphasis . . . learned to demonstrate in Woolworth's."

"Get on with it," said the detective.

"Well, I showed 'em how these 3-piece jobs wrinkle and wilt quickly even with starch or stays. I said the Van Heusen Century collar would stay neat always—without starch or stays—or their money back. When I told 'em that Van Heusen Centurys gave 'em lots more wear than ordinary shirts, yet cost the same price (just $3.95 for whites and $4.50 for colors) they bought me out. I was so overjoyed, I did a little jig and tripped over the glue pot. Got stuck up."

"Oh, yeah?" yeahed the detective. "Well, where's all the dough?"

"Oh, college men never pay. They just charge everything to Dad."

THIS IS JUST A REMINDER THAT spring, with subsequent turnings of young men's fancies, will arrive at 10:54 p. m., March 20. throw the clever little fast balls..

"In order to put in full time in the dining hall Hodges scrupulously avoided 8:30 classes and all other tricks some students used to get away from work early after breakfast instead of finishing the job .He was sure-handed, fast, eager and he was cheerful," said Adams.

MAN OF GREAT VERSATILITY

"Break into Carolina life anywhere and you will discover "Luke" that's another thing the University yearbook said in its write—up about the future governor back in 1919. .

That statement sums up well the remarkable versatility of Luther Hodges.

Before leaving the University he had achieved excellence in a wide variety of fields—as scholar, debater, orator, religious leader and business manager.

At the end of hs junior year he was elected to Golden Fleece, highest ranking honor society on the campus, and to the presidency of his senior class

Other officers of that class were Walter C. Feimster, now of Wynnewood, Pa., vice president; W. Enoch Price, now of New York, secretary-treasurer; Ed. S. Lindsey, now of University of Chattanooga, historian; W. H. williamson, now a New York banker poet, and th elate Forrest G. Miles, Winston-Salem, orator.

HELD MANY CAMPUS OFFICES

Hodges was also a member of the Student Council, Student Cabinet, Greater Council, Athletic Council, secretary of the YMCA Cabinet, president and treasurer of the Di Society, Commencement marshal, president of the Rockingham County Club, a participant in the Junior Oratorical Contest and member of Epsilon Phi Delta, an international relations group..

He was a three sports man. He played varsity basketball, was on the football scrub team, and played football, baseball and basketball on the class teams.. He was also a pretty fair wrestler and gymnast.

In his senior year he was manager of varsity baseball.

CONSIDERED FOREIGN MISSION

During his University career Hodges seriously considered going into the foreign mission field and for two years he headed the Student Volunteer Movement here, recalls Dr. J. Minor Gwynn of the University's School of Education, who grew up with Hodges and was a contemporary student here.

During the year he served as president of the Rockingham County Club. That group became the first one here to set up a revolving student loan fund.

All of Hodges' associates of his college days, including such Chapel Hill men a Albert Coates, Dean C. P. Spruill, Dr. Burton Linker and Grady Pritchard, recall that the Rockingham County boy was one of the most energetic, hardest working, conscientious and ablest men they have even known.

"I lived in the same dormitory with Luther one year, but he was so busy with his work and studies that I didn't get a chance to see much of him," said Dr. Linker.

VERY AMBITIOUS YOUNGSTER

Pritchard recalls Hodges as a youngster "bubbling over with ambition to gt ahead—there never was any question about him succeeding."

World War II temporarily interrupted Luther Hodges' University career. He joined the campus student volunteer training unit that enjoyed so much success under the colorful Capt. J. Stuart Allen. But it wasn't long before Hodges had entered an officer's training camp, being commissioned as a second lieutenant in the infantry. Upon his discharge he returned to his studies here.

SUPERMAN'S DEFEECT

Let us dare to face the situation. Man has become a superman. He is a superman because he not only disposes of innate physical forces, but because he is in command, thanks to the conquests of science and technique, of latent forces in nature and because he can put them to his service . . . .

The superman suffers from a fatal imperfection in his spirit. He is not elevated to that level of superhuman reason which must correspond tothe possession of superhuman force. He lacks the capacity to put his enormous power to work only for reasonable and useful ends instead of to destructive and murderous ends. For this reason the conquest of science and technique becomes deadly rather than profitable — Albert Schweitzer accepting Nobel Peace Prize.

breaks."

Speaking more about his philosophy of football, Barclay says that "football is not round, it's oblong, and takes funny bounces Sometimes it bounces for you, and sometimes against you.

"Work in football starts after the educational work. Scholarships are fine if they are helping a boy get an education. A coach should take boys who are coming to take the work in school that they want to. Too many coaches are interested just in football rather than a boy's education."

Barclay graduated from UNC in 1935 with an A. B. degree in physical education. He was UNC's first All-American, receiving the honor as guard in 1934. He played one year of pro football with Brooklyn, then took a job with a Pennsylvania salt manufacturing company in Philadelphia. Following a serious accident, he returned to UNC to do graduate work in physical education, and coached freshman football for two years.

Following coaching positions at Oberlin, Dartmouth and the University of Maryland, and three years in the service, he went to Washington and Lee University as head coach in 1949. He came back to Carolina as assistant coach under Carl Snavely in 1952, and has been head coach at UNC since 1953.

WUNC-TV Re-Slated For Operation Starting Jan. 8

MISS JAN SAXON & JOEL CARTER
. . . Suzanna and Figaro in the comic opera

WUNC-TV, channel 4, with its formal opening now scheduled for Saturday, Jan. 8, has started running its test pattern every day from noon until 6:30 p. m.

Officials of the educational station say they have been highly pleased with early reports on reception in the state. Post cards and phone calls indicate that channel 4 has a wide and clear reception. One post card from Statesville, almost 100 miles away, congratulated the station on the clear reception.

Robert F. Schenkkan, director of television for Consolidated University, voiced his thanks for the notes the station had received and expressed hope that others would continue to send cards to the station describing the reception.

"We would greatly appreciate hearing from the people in the State concerning the reception of WUNC-TV's test pattern," said Schenkan. "It's our best means of knowing exactly how well WUNC-TV will be received when we open on January 8."

WUNC-TV, channel 4, is one of the choice very high frequency VHF stations, which means that it can be received on regular television sets. No adaptor is needed.

Graduates' Paintings Now On Exhibit

An exhibit of drawings by John Rembert and paintings by Miss Jane Bolmeier and David Buntley, two 1955 graduate students here who are receiving their Master of Arts in creative arts, opened in Person Hall Art Gallery last Sunday and will continue until Jan. 16.

Rembert has taught art here and in Meredith College in Raleigh. He won a first award in the North Carolina State Exhibition in Raleigh in 1948. His work has been acquired by the Beloit College Art Museum, Beloit, Wis., and the North Carolina State Art Gallery in Raleigh.

Miss Bolmeier, who took here A. B. degree at Duke in 1952, is now teaching in the Charlotte City Schools. She is a native of Durham.

Her work has been exhibited in various galleries, including the North Carolina Artists Annuals in 1953 and 1954. One of her pictures was awarded first prizes for oil painting at the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs Exhibition in Asheville in 1954.

Dorm Reservations To Be Filed By Tomorrow

Reservation notices for dormitory rooms for the spring semester must be returned to rooms of respective dormitory managers by tomorrow or students will not be assigned a room next session, according to a statement made by the Housing Office.

J. E. Wadsworth, director of housing for the University, also announced that the rooms on the first three floors for Manly, Mangum, Ruffin and Grimes will be converted to their normal two-occupant status beginning with the spring semester. The rent for the rooms will be $50.75 per occupant for the semester.

Anyone wishing a room change should contact the Housing Office after noon of next Friday, according to the housing director.

Wadsworth also announced that law students will be given preference for the rooms on the first two floors of Grimes.

Ancient Lamps On Exhibition

A collection of lamps commonly used in the old world at the time of the birth of Christ is now on exhibit at the Morehead Planetarium.

Arranged by the department of anthropology and archaeology, the exhibit is a part of the 187 lamp collection made by R. Bogue, a graduate student here.

Bogue, a Mississippi native, is now on leave from the World Health Education division of the United Nations. He is here working on his masters degree in public health.

The lamps on display in the Planetarium are the types used for illumination in Egypt and Jerusalem at the time of Christ's birth. They are, says Bogue, the Roman type lamp which used principally olive oil for fuel.

His collection dates from early Egypt to the time of the Crusades in the year 1186, making all of the lamps on exhibit more than 750 years old and some as old as 2,000 years.

Former UNC Naval Man Assigned To High Post

Lt. Commander Thomas E. Bass, Carolina graduate and former assistant professor of Naval Science here, has been assigned as aide and flag secretary to Vice Admiral Thomas S. Combs, comander of the U. S. Sixth Fleet.

Lt. Commander Bass, a native of New Bern, graduated from the University in 1938, returing to Chapel Hill on assignment with the Navy unit in 1951. He has been attached to the Sixth Fleet since 1953.

His family has joined him at St. Jean, Cap Ferrat, France, where he is currently stationed.

Mademoiselle Art Contest Is Underway

Mademoiselle magazine will award $500 and publication of art work to two young women artists in its new Art Contest, it was announced by Renee Pickel, of the magazine.

The contest, which is underway now and will end midnight, Mar. 1, is open to all women under 26 who are enrolled either in a college or an art school. Competition will be on the grounds of originality and not technicality and should therefore offer equal chance to both college and art school students.

A maximum of five samples may be submitted, either drawn especially for the contests or work previously done. Work drawn for the contest should be illustrations of fiction in issues of Mademoiselle which came out during the past year.

The original work may be sub-

4 Tar Heels At Bible Meet Over Holidays

Don Cox, Challie Iralu, Wayne Thompson, Clyde Smith and Miss Marjorie Waynic were delegates from UNC to the recent Fourth Student Missionary Convention at Urbana, Ill. The convention lasted from Dec. 27 to Jan. 1.

The Carolina students were among more than 1,800 collegians who crowded all available facilities of the University of Illinois campus to get a closer look at world missions. They came during their Christmas holidays from universities, colleges, Bible institutes and seminaries in all parts of the United States and Canada. More than 150 of them were from over 40 foreign countries.

The Missionary convention was the fourth of such student gatherings sponsored by the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship and its affiliated Groups, Student Foreign Missions Fellowship and Nurses' Christian Fellowship.

Students Visit Senator Scott

UNIVERSITY YOUNG DEMOCRATS are shown meeting with North Carolina Senator Kerr Scott, who was recently sworn in as a member of Congress. Left to right, they are Charles Hyatt, Ken Youngblood (both students and Young Democrats), Senator Scott, Student Weymon Stephenson, N. C. Governor Luther Hodges, law Student Al House, Senator Sam Ervin and Students Byron Ransdell and Dub Graham.

But It Won't Last Long. . .

It's Just Like Spring

Anyone who didn't know better would think spring had come to Chapel Hill. Instead of the usual post-holiday slump there's an unseasonal gaiety in the air, and everyone has taken to running around without wraps, and sunning between classes.

Raleigh-Durham Airport Weather Bureau, though, says not to waste your time planning beach parties for the weekend. The present temperature, averaging in the middle 60's, will probably last two or three days, and then the area will be in for a rainy spell, forecasters say.

The cause of this unseasonable warmth, according to the weather bureau, is a high pressure center which is moving slowly castward. The whole southeastern part of the country is being affected.

Incidentally, the plants seem to be t a k i n g it all a lot more sensibly than the humans. Even the Soulang magnolia, which has been known to bloom when snow is on the ground, isn't showing any signs of life, apparently aware that a winter that started as late as this one did couldn't possibly be over already.

The Big Time

Now that the Tournament of Roses is safely behind us, Duke has won the Orange Bowl title, the Ice Bowl and the Rice Bowl are over and the last toe has booted the last pigs in, it seems pertinent to bring up that explosive subject—big time football.

The name Robert Maynard Hutchins has become a malediction among football fans because of that educator's war against the big money game in colleges. Last year's editor of this newspaper was very nearly pilloried by indignant alumni who objected to his reiterated suggestions that Carolina retire from the business of football and get back to the game.

The end of this football season, however, has produced a new crop of critics, and they are neither college presidents nor college editors. They are coaches.

Carl Snavely who got the gate here after a few losing seasons, is still pointing out the advantages of little-time football. A recent Saturday Evening Post article by Bert LaBrucherie, former head coach at UCLA, skinned the hide off the alumni grandstand quarterbacks who contribute to the "prostitution" of the college game.

Who's next? Why, none other than Carolina's well respected Coach Dick Jamerson. Jamerson may have had in mind the ugly efforts of some alumni to fire Coach Bar clay before his contract expired when he said on WUNC the other day—

I would like for everyone to realize that athletics is not business—it is a contest between two groups of young men. When athletics becomes a business we are in trouble. Educational authorities agree that athletics is a justifiable part of the total experience of young men in college. As such, sports should be supported through regular channels just as any other phase of the curriculum.

All too often the support of college athletic programs is dependent upon gate receipts and alumni contributions. The results of such support for athletic programs are inevitable—demands for winning teams to draw more spectators to pay the bills for having a winning team—a never ending accumulation of headaches. . . .

College games should be played for the pleasures the players get from athletic competition and the pleasures the spectators may receive from watching skilled performers in action. . . .

One wishes such a speech might be made to the National Collegiate Athletic Association at its meeting later this month and that the NCAA, for once, might cease its platitudinous conversations and lend a serious ear.

A Silence Of Age & Wisdom

Chapel Hill, while you were home for the holidays, everted back to its old owners—those whose roots in the town are firmer and deeper than those of any transient generation of students can be. The town belonged for two weeks to the Houses and the Grummans and the Russells, to the empty, quiet Playmaker's Theatre, to the pigeons and squirrels on the Library lawn and to the shades of Joseph Caldwell, Horace Williams and Howard Odum.

The Chapel Hill Weekley's lead head line noted that you could find a parking place right on Franklin Street. It was the biggest news in town. The Rev. Charlie Jones preached two sermons to the kids, an English professor took his family for a walk in Battle Park. One lonely student, book in hand, strolled along past the law building thoughtfully kicking an acorn until it rolled into the gutter.

There was a silence foreign to the campus except for the hours when the students are asleep and for the days when they are gone—"a silence of age, too full of wisdom for the tongue to utter it. . ."

Carolina Front

One Thing Missing From The World

Louis Kraar

IT'S NEVER a long way home from the Hill.

But once there, you realize that your trip couldn't have taken you any further from the campus than a sortie to Siberia.

First there's sleep, deep and lasting through what would be class hours in the morning. It's a holiday, and the Carolina student is only a casual visitor to slumberland except during these vacation periods.

Then, you awake and begin to look around you. Chances are you'll see little more than television and people watching television. If you're smart, you'll head for your contemporaries and make like Saturday night at UNC for the two weeks.

Now, I'm no enemy to the world outside this sometimes quiet campus. But after all the talk you hear about college preparing you for life, what you find off campus is not exactly the life you prepared for. Let me illustrate.

"MOTHER, I'D better wear old clothes to my club meeting today," advised the 13-year-old at my house that first morning home. "I'm on the debate team and might get into a fight."

Before I could explain to my brother about the gentlemanly virtues of debating (as opposed to scrapping), he demanded to know whether the Senate should have censured McCarthy.

"My teacher told us to find the answer to that before we came back to school," he explained.

I told him my answer, hoping his teacher wasn't a McCarthy fan. If she is my brother has probably flunked by now. But that was a tough assignment.

Having survived my first mission in the outside world, I proceeded to the next holiday task —working the week before Christmas.

FEELING ABOUT as out of place as a zoot suit at a Germans dance, I found myself selling clothes.

All I learned at Carolina about clothes is to wear a dark suit, a striped tie. Shoes, I learned, should be dirty during the week, but clean on weekends.

Remembering this Carolina background to being well-dressed, I tried it in the clothes-selling world—and it didn't work.

Women shoppers don't want rep ties; they want pink creations with black backgrounds—neckwear that you'd guess undertakers would wear to a convention.

After a week of shoving shirts across a glass counter, appeasing cantankerous lady customers, telling everybody that everything looks good, you even begin to wonder about Christmas.

Perhaps it's all a conspiracy among merchants, you begin to think by store closing time Christmas eve. Then you ride home, past the cardboard nativity scenes, the recorded music coming from stores, the Santa Clauses, and you wonder where today's wise men are.

RIDING BACK to school, you're sorry it's all over. The sleep was good. So was making like Saturday night for two weeks.

And as the Bell Tower takes shape over the top of the car window, you realize there's nothing wrong with the outside world. Commercialism isn't ruining Christmas any more than it ever has. And your brother is propably learning something on that tough-guy debate squad.

No, you say to yourself, the world outside this little one is not shot to hell. It's just not Chapel Hill.

'Yaa — We've Got More Security Than You Have'

Bankers, Band-Aids, Beer

E. B. White

In The New Yorker

A few memorable things happened in 1954. A man named Edwards, a radio commentator, was dropped by the American Federation of Labor on the grounds that he was weighting his stuff on the side of labor. Two famous persons turned up dead in 1954 who weren's dead at all—Ernest Hemingway and the Pope. Hemingway had the satisfaction of reading his obituary notices in the papers, and the Pope, after beng gravely ill, had the satisfaction of watching an issue of Life perform a hasty flipflop because of the return of his vital force.

In England a woman named Mrs. Gillian Crowcroft placed radioactive bracelets on the tails of moles, in 1954, and followed their progress underground by the use of a Geiger counter on the end of a fishing rod. She was studying moles, it turned out. A firm dedicated to increasing the effectiveness of direct-mail advertising perfected a device called Tear-Edge. It takes a piece of ordinary printed matter and lacerates the edges to give them an irregular, jagged appearance, so the recipient will think it has just been torn out of a magazine.

We recommend this Tear-Edge technique to the advertising fraternity when they come to send out their next invitation to the annual Honesty-in-Advertising convention. It ought to be a good attention getter.

Subversion took a new turn in 1954 when it became clear that anybody who advocated things that Representative Carroll Reece doesn't believe in is subversive. Global ideas of all sorts subvert, it would appear. Radioactivity advanced a step in 1954. Government scientists produced some atomic fertilizer. It cost twenty-five thousand dollars a ton to make. We never heard how much they managed to make, but we went ahead and bought a ton of the regular barn manure, at a considerable saving. We have the receipted bill, and the manure has been spread.

Nineteen-fifty-four was a year of high wind. Never have so many people wasted so much time on a man who wasn't worth the paper he got written about on. That is what raised the wind probably.

The most interesting message we received in 1954 was from Jackson & Perkins, world's largest (and most secretive) rose growers. They sent us a postcard in code. The giveaway was the letter "g." When decoded, the message read: "The bulbs will be shipped early in the fall at the proper time for planting." They were, too. But we had to leave by plane on an emergency mission just before the bulbs arrived ,and we never got round to sending a code message back to the growers. Spring, in our opinion, will come anyway.

In 1954 the intellect became accepted in some circles as a sign of disloyalty. This was perhaps the most significant development of the year.

Nineteen-fifty-four was one of the biggest years the Supreme Court ever had, with the segregation decision. The decison will reverberate and will jar the country far into 1955, 1956, 1957, and other years. But at any rate the matter has been decided and, thank God, correctly decided.

One of the reasons for our thinking the Court was correct is that we went into a drug store the other day and bought some Band-Aid—"flesh color." And we saw quite clearly that the term "white race" is a misnomer. If you want to see whether the Supreme Court decision is any good or not, we advise you to go into a drugstore and ask for a package of flesh-colored bandages to blend with your so-called white skin. It's quite a revealing experience and well worth the small cost.

In 1954 the Appellate Division ruled that advocating world peace is not a commercial enterprise. This was in the case of Harry Purvis—the man who put the world-government sign on his building, quoting Albert Einstein, the thinker.

In 1954 we added a terrace to our house, which we didn't need, and made one friend, which we did.

In 1954 we bought a television set, and turned it on, and there stood Howard K. Smith on the Cape of Good Hope, his hair tossing in the winds from two oceans. We will have to scrap the set unless we can get "Piel's Is the Beer for Me" out of our head, where it whirls incessantly—a symptom, we are told, of mental fatigue. We tried drinking some beer of another brand, to see if that would rid us of the head noises, but it failed, and we are too stubborn to try Piel's.

In 1954 everybody's mind was somewhere else. The instnace we remember best of somebody's mind being somewhere else was going into a bank to buy a savings bond. The man who waited on us was not thinking about money and banking at all. He was sitting there, he said, thinking about how the light shines at night from a hilltop tower on his college campus. He told us the light could be seen in a village thirteen miles away. He seemed a very happy banker, in a state of beatitude, well housed against the cold of the streets, well insulated against darkness of all sorts. Nineteen-fifty-four was an ideal year for the mind to wander in, and in which to hold fast to a beam of light.

Memo To The Alumni

The Asheville Citizen

Season oughn't to get by without a brief word to you about this year's lettermen—Greek letters, that is.

Chapel Hill chapter of national honorary scholastic fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, has initiated 47 students for fall academic season.

Phi Beta Kappa is what you earn for starring in academic grove, place that's occupied week days, or between football games, by some undergraduates. It's tops in conference.)

University's PBK rosters shows 41 of 47 are North Carolinians. Our high schools evidently sending up good material, real fast native talent able to snare German irregular verbs in open field and run with them.

Five of lettermen from Chapel Hill. (You never know when a flashy chemistry major may pop up in own backyard, tough and conditioned, briefed on all fundamentals.) Raleigh alumni apparently busy, too,sent over a pair of fast, shifty scatbacks for school of commerce. Remember how daddy of one of them turned back William & Mary in '24 in close debate (W. & M. fumbled the rebuttal in last second of play) on independence for Philippines. Next Saturday night at library they ought to be ready to go all the way.

Can't help returning to subject of native talent before closing. Four platoons, almost. Makes recruiting out-of-state easier. Cuts down scholarships from Educational Foundation (or is it Football Foundation?) and makes for well-rounded squad. Well aware that classroom work is only incidental to a university, but suggests results justify renewing Coach Bob House's contract for '55. He had a good season.

Mud Pies Patted Together In The Path Of A Big Flood

Joseph Alsop

PNOMPENH, Cambodia. — Something of the seriousness of the dangers that now lie ahead in Asia was suggested by a little incident in which this reporter was quite accidentally involved.

It began with an early morning appointment with the Prime Minister of this charming little country of Cambodia, which is the remnant of the great Khmer empire that built Angkor Wat. The Khmer empire was destroyed some 600 years ago by the invading Siamese, who were fleeing in their turn from the expanding Chinese. South Asian history has an interesting continuity.

His Excellency Penn Nouth, is a tall, intelligent, quie mannered man, who is Prime Minister of Cambodia because he is consderably tougher than most of his easy going countrymen. He made a lucid analysis of Cambodia's situation and policy.

The country's loyalty to King Norodom Sihanouk and to Buddhism; the hatred of the mass of Cambodians for the Vietnamese who lead the Communist Viet Minh; the relative contentment of the people because of the plenty that reigns in this rich, underpopulated land; the dependence of Cambodia on American aid for its own military defense—these were the chief points stressed. Cambodia, said the Prime Minister, intended to resist the Communist Viet Minh with all its power; and since Cambodia's geographical position makes it a shield for Thailand, this was an important statement.

At the close of the interview, however, the Prime Minister turned the tables on the reporter, asking what principle developments he foresaw in Asia in the next preparing an attack on the offshore islands of Formosa, which the United States had refused to guarantee. Therefore a Communist military victory over Chiang Kai-shek, which would be an even greater propaganda victory, must also be anticipated.

There was only one possible answer. The situation in southern Indo-China plainly forecast the loss of that vital area to the Communists, and quite possibly before the Vietnamese elections. In addition the Chinese Communists were plainly twelve months.

The effect of these rather obvious statements on the Prime Minister appeared to be electric. He detained the reporter. He said he had believed that when Gen. Lawton Sollins was sent to Saigon, it meant that the United States was determined to hold southern Indo-China against Communist pressure. He asked how Cambodia, "this little country," could be expected to retain its independence if southern Indo-China, which encloses Cambodia on two sides, should fall into Communist hands.

He also remarked that a Chinese Communist victory on Formosa's offshore islands, even although militarily unimportant, would lead many people to question the value of American support; and it was only absolute confidence in the firmness of American support that could give Cambodia the courage to resist the heavy Communist pressures to which Cambodia is already exposed.

In the late afternoon, at the close of an intervening meeting of the cabinet, the reporter saw the acting Foreign Minister. He declared that the cabnet agenda had been set aside for a discussion of the terrible news about southern Indo-China and the offshore islands. And he went considerably further in his pessimism about the future than Prime Minister Penn Nouth.

If this is the kind of reaction that is produced by a simple unvarnished statement of future probabliities that are accepted by every serious observer in Asia, what then will be the reaction to the actual, unconcealable, shattering events themselves?

That is the principle problem that now confronts our bastion builders. Bastion building is a favorite new American activity in Asia. It is going on in Thailand. It is going on in Japan, which President Eisenhower has formally declared a bastion despite the recent signs to the contrary. And the able American ambassador to Cambodia, Robert McClintock, would like, quite rightly, to make Cambodia another bastion, to protect the even bigger bastion in Thailand.

Theoretically, the thing can be done. All that Penn Nouth said about his country and his people is true. Prior to the signature of the Geneva accord, when the Viet Minh were trying to get a firm base in Cambodia, the Royal Cambodian Army even gave a sound thrashing to three invading Viet Minh battalions.

Superficially, then, this should be an excellent chance of making the great river of Mekong, which is Cambodia's main border with Indo-China, into the stopping line of the Communist advance in Asia. Even historically, it seems logical, for the Mekong is the ancient dividing line between Chinese cultural influence which predominated in Indo-China, and Indian cultural influence which gave the original stimulus to the civilizations of Cambodia, Thailand and Burma.

Inspired by contemplation of the magnificence of Angkor Wat, that eighth wonder of the world, India's Prime Minister Nehru even told Ho Chi Minh that India would look very much askance on an attempt on Cambodia. But all the bastions will still turn out to be mere mud pies recklessly patted together in the path of a flood, if American policy in Asia does not soon become infinitely firmer and less fraudulent than it is today.

Congress May Take A Look At Its Own Empty Pockets

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON—With pay raises in prospect in 1955 for a million Federal workers and the Army and with dignified but nevertheless urgings in this respect arising from the judiciary, Congress may get up enough nerve to get into the act with a raise of its own.

Although Congress is the only agency of government with power to set its own rate of pay, it has always been notably reluctant to pay itself well. This modesty in dealing with itself has, employees of other branches of the government complain, kept the whole level of Federal salaries low.

In 1946 Congress voted a $2,500 tax-free expense fund in addition to members' regular $12,500 salary. The tax-free provision failed to sit well with taxpayers and in 1953 Congress withdrew it. Now members of both houses receive $15,000, all of it taxable.

This may appear to be substantial in rural or small town America. Yet Washington remains one of the nation's most expensive cities, and running for office is becoming progressively more costly. Especially if he has growing children, a member's salary does no go very far.

Some of the better-known members, especially Senators, eke out additional income by writing or lecturing but these methods are by no means open to all. At times the means have run from the dubious to the outright illegal.

The judiciary also can make out a strong case for both salary increases and more money for general administrative expense. Federal judicial salaries have not been raised in nine years, a period in which living costs have gone up sharply. District judges now receive $15,000 and appeals court judges $17,500. Lawyers point out that a man sufficiently able to serve on the Federal bench could make much more practicing law. They fear that low salaries for judges will dim the ambitions of the ablest men to serve and that the quality of Federal justice will be lowered.

Virtually the entire Federal bench is in agreement that Congress has been niggardly with the judicial branch. Complaints vary in importance from weakness of the Federal probation system enforced through lack of funds, to lack of type writers and law books. Sometimes, as happened in the last session of Congress, judgeships are created without provision for operations of all the new courts.

There is some hope that Congress will consider all the pay raise plans together so as to avoid inequities.

Not much of this is calculated to bring happy thoughts to Treasury Secretary Humphrey as he struggles with the deficit. His hope of keeping it in the neighborhood of three billion dollars may soon seem terribly optimistic.

LSU Tigers Upset Favored Tar Heels; Take 84-77 Victory

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

Once again there is a Big Four in basketball around this neck of the woods. For the past few years it has been the Big Three and Carolina, reading from top to bottom.

Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Heels surprised everyone but themselves in the Dixie Classic. The victory over Duke was McGuire's first. Now serving his third year here, the affable Irishman holds single wins over State, Wake Forest, and Duke. The victory over the Deacons was last year, while the win over State came two years ago when Jerry Vayda, then a freshman, potted a jump shot at the final gun sounded to upset the mighty Wolfpack in their Coliseum.

Although Carolina fared well in the tournament, high-scoring sophomore Lennie Rosenbluth relinquished his individual scoring lead to Wake Forest's All-America Dickie Hemric. Rosenbluth entered the tourney with a 30.2 average, emerging with a 27.6 mark. Hemric's 29.4 points per game is tops.

A good reason for Rosenbluth's falling behind Hemric in the point-making department is the slow-down brand of ball UNC plays. Against State the Tar Heels were under orders to play possession and slow down the 'Pack's devastating fast-break. Consequently, Rosenbluth shot less than usual and scored only 13 points.

Despite Carolina's strong showing in defeating Southern Cal, (at the time ranked 12th in the nation) and Duke, (ranked 18th) and playing second-ranked State down to the wire before losing by three points in the final minutes, the Tar Heels were not placed among the top 20 teams in the Associated Press poll released yesterday. Duke, however, is tied for 17th with Villanova, conquerors of State, which dropped from second to third. Kentucky and Duquesne are one and two, respectively.

Tonight the Tar Heels tackle a strong Alabama quintet in Tuscaloosa, Ala. The Crimson Tide is tied with Notre Dame and Seton Hall for 20th.

This Christmas was an especially good one for ex-Carolina tennis star Vic Seixas, who finally turned the trick down under as America took possession of the Davis Cup from Australia for the first time in five years.

Formal practice for indoor track gets under way today in the Tin Can. The tracksters worked out informally for a couple of weeks prior to the Christmas vacation, but today they go under the careful eye of veteran coach Dale Ranson. Their first meet will be with N. C. State, January 15.

Tickets for Saturday night's basketball game with Wake Forest are being rationed out on a reserve basis. Pass book holders must present their books at the ticket office in Woollen Gym in exchange for a ticket. The operation is being conducted on a first-come, first-serve plan up until noon Saturday.

Tar Heels, With 3rd Place, Surprise Of Dixie Classic

By BERNIE WEISS

Rehashing the Dixie Classic, one is reminded of a statement Carolina basketball coach Frank McGuire came up with early in the season . . . something to the effect that the Tar Heels would produce a basketball team which would be 20 percent improved over last season's quint.

Already his prophesy is holding true, and the proof came during the Classic, in which Carolina won two of its three games and finished third in the eight-team tournament behind N. C. State and Minnesota.

Compared with last year's tourney, when Carolina lost all three contests and finished dead last, the team is far better than 20 percent improved.

Last week the Tar Heels played against three teams all of which were ranked among the top 20 in the nation. Southern California held the No. 12 position, State was No. 2 and Duke was No. 18.

The Tar Heels unranked and with no major victories to their credit, upset the Trojans, lost by three points to State in a possession battle and won from the Blue Devils going away in the finale to capture third place. Everett Case's Wolfpack, after defeating Carolina, went on to edge Minnesota, 85-84, in a thrilling finish to the sixth annual Classic.

Carolina lost its control game to State at the foul line. That game was close all the way, and at one time McGuire was enjoying a five-point lead. His strategy of not running with State, though displeasing to the fanatical Reynolds Coliseum crowd, almost paid off, Lennie Rosenbluth, as usual, drew a large number of foul tosses but was unable to cash in on the breaks. He missed seven of 10 free throws, more than enough to make up the point spread.

Against Duke, however, Rosenbluth set a new Dixie Classic record for foul tosses made good. This brings to mind another statement Coach McGuire made recently, when "Bluth" established a rebounding mark against South Carolina. He said, "Rosenbluth can break any record he wants. He just needs some time."

The Most Valuable Player selection of State's Ron Shavlik by the tournament committee drew much disapproval from the 12,500 fans who witnessed the finals. To many, Minnesota's John Garmaker was more deserving of the award. Garmaker was the outstanding feature of an otherwise mediocre Gopher attack, and his play in the final game was the only thing which kept the Big Ten representative from being snowed by State's crushing power.

Pickng an unofficial all-tournament team would be a chore, but there were five players who stood out above the rest. Fortunately, they fall in at the right positions. Shavlik and Rosenbluth would occupy the forward positions; West Virginia's Rod Hundley and Garmaker the guard posts; Wake Forest's Dickie Hemric is an easy choice at center.

Hemric set a four-year national scoring record during the tournament. Hundley, flashy Mountineer who almost chose a Big Four school, tallied 47 points against Wake Forest to tie another mark.

Hundley was the Classic's bright spot, his play being characteristic of the Harlem Globetrotters. He even had some of the officials laughing at points with his fancy dribbling.

Carolina's Jerry Vayda played well throughout the meet. His defensive play against Duke was one of the big factors in the upset. Vayda rode the backboards for most of the game.

Wake Forest plays here Saturday night. Watch Lefty Lowell Davis. When he gets hot he can be as tough as Hemric.

Sugar Bowl Desegregates Breaking Long Tradition

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 3 (AP)—A 20-year-old tradition fell without a clatter in New Orleans when Negroes and whites sat together to watch Navy beat Mississippi 21-0 in the Sugar Bowl football game Saturday.

Mid-winter Sports Assn. officials, who sponsor the Sugar Bowl, said the whole operation was carried out "perfectly."

B. J. Grenwood, president of the association said he knew of no commotion or disorderliness in the huge Sugar Bowl Stadium at Tulane University during the game.

"The Navy was satisfied and we were satisfied," he said. Nothing "cbarrassing" occurred for either side.

The Sugar Bowl offical said, however, that only Negroes were seated in the section usually reserved for Negroes.

The desegregated Sugar Bowl crowds resulted from the Navy distributing 13,000 tickets without regard for a racial stipulation printed on them.

Earlier, the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People protested because the tickets could be used only by Caucasians.

Secretary of the Navy Charles Thomas ordered the tickets sold to midshipmen, recruits and others without regard to the stipulation.

Grenwood said he had no way of knowing how many Negroes attended the game.

Rosenbluth, LSU's Sigler Tie For Scoring Lead With 23 Points

Tigers Overcome Early Carolina Lead With Set Shots, To Take 36-32 Halftime Lead

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 3 (AP)—Louisiana State University utilized set shots from outside the North Carolina zone defense tonight to upset the Tar Heels 84-77.

LSU overcame an early 10-4 deficit on three straight set shots by sub guard Leslie Jones, and the backboard work of center Ned Clark kept LSU in high gear the rest of the way.

Clark got 26 rebounds, high for the night.

Carolina's Tar Heels continue their swing through the Deep South, as they journey to Tuscaloosa, Alabama tonight, to take on Alabama's Crimson Tide.

LSU took a 36-32 halftime lead after the score had changed hands six times and increased its margin to as high as 18 points until a late North Carolina forecourt press closed it.

Sophs Roger Sigler of LSU and Lennie Rosenbluth of North Carolina tied for scoring honors with 23 points each.

LSU hit for 35.2 per cent of its field goal attempts, while North Carolina hit on 36.5 per cent of its tries.

Tennis Fans At Queen's Park Get Floodlit Game

BOURNEMOUTH, England, Jan. 3 (AP)—A shilling-in-the-slot means floodlit tennis for enthusiasts in this south coast resort.

The Queen's Park Tennis Club has installed floodlighting in one court. Players put a shilling-14 cents-in the slot for the light. That gives them about quarter of an hour's play. If they want more light and more play then all they need is another shilling.

Dr. Frank Advances Peace Program

WINSTON-SALEM, Jan. 3—A two-point program to promote universal permanent peace was advanced here tonight by Dr. Frank P. Graham, special mediator for the United Nations and former president of the University of North Carolina.

Addressing the annual dinner session of the Winston-Salem Junior Chamber of Commerce, Dr. Ghaham advocated:

1. "Universal enforceable disarmament to prevent the suicide of peoples and their civilization, and

2. "Wisely planned and enlarged technical assistance and economic development programs coordinated with the U. N. programs in harnessing technical skills, dynamic enterprise and thermonuclear power toward the more productive, freer, fairer and peaceful life of all people in all lands."

Dr. Graham, who also served in the United States Senate, said that the year 1955 "is highly charged with both peril and hope for the people of the United States and the people of the world."

He called for mass movements of the people "in both hemispheres in their religious communions and their farm, labor, business, educational, professional, civic, women's organizations and all other associations, forums and assemblies of the common life in behalf of national and world-wide concentration of the people on the moral imperatives of peace."

Dr. Graham said that the road ahead for the American people "is not back to self- defeating national isolation, nor down the road to preventive war which would be the third World War but up the difficult road of the United Nations in the desperate struggle and patient work for freedom and peace.

"Though freedom is now crushed by monstrous totalitarian tyrannies in many lands the truth which makes men free will rise again with the organization of the people's demands. The light of liberty will yet shine through the iron curtains of men's minds. The warmth of human brotherhood under God, will yet, we pray melt away the iron curtains of men's hearts.

"In the love of God and man, with all differences and with a sense of Brotherhood with all people across the street and across the oceans, we would work and pray in all lands for the United Nations for universal enforceable disarmament and great humane programs as a part of the difficult pilgrimage of the people for freedom and peace in their eternal adventure toward the Kingdom of God."

Dr. Graham said that the "bipolar world is perilously stuffed with thermonuclear force loaded with either the destruction of peoples or the hope of the cooperation of nations for a better life for all people. With its chemical-biological - radar - atomic - hydrogen parts and with its cobalt mechanism in reserve, the earth's clock is relentlessly ticking away at this late hour toward the ways of doom or the ways of hope."

He pointed out that for the first time in more than a score of years there is no real war anywhere in the world. "On well developed ground,' he said, "the American President's Atoms for Peace" Plan, adopted by the U. N. General Assembly of 60 nations without one dissenting vote, may be implemented in an International Atomic Agency.

"There is wide talk in high and lowly places of the necessity of the people of all nations, colors, races, religions and ideologies to find ways and means to continue to live on man's only home on this earth."

The year 1955, he said, is "the appointed year for the first decennial meeting of the U. N. General Assembly to consider the calling of Charter Review Conference.

"The year 1955 is the year appointed by the World Federation of all the national associations for the United Nations to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations. Many millions of people in their chapels, churches, cathedrals, temples, synagogues and mosques pray for the peace of nations and the brotherhood of people.

"While there is still time to turn the perils and the despair of the engulfing night of our generation into the action of the people and the hope of another morning for all the children of men, the peoples of the world, with hydrogen bombs connected with the earth's time clock, cannot lag in the organization of the yearnings of the people, and mass movements from people to people across boundaries and even curtains in gathering power for freedom and peace."

Solons Gathering

RALEIGH, Jan. 3 (AP)—As lawmakers converged on Raleigh for the start of the 1955 Legislature Wednesday, a group of dry leaders called on Governor Hodges today urging him to throw his weight behind a statewide liquor referendum.

The Governor said he told the group, representing the Allied Church League, that he would tell how he stands on the question of a statewide liquor vote in his bien nial message to the Legislature. He is expected to deliver his message at a joint Senate-House session at 11:30 a.m. Thursday.

Campus Collie Is In Serious Straits Now

George Will Have To Go, Say Police

By JACKIE GOODMAN

George, the campus collie, is in trouble again.

This time, however, it looks like he will have to leave Chapel Hill for good, one way or another.

According to Mrs. A. M. Jordan, treasurer of the Chapel Hill Humane Society, the collie, who is usually seen strolling around the campus or asleep in front of the Intimate Bookshop was taken to the Humane Society's pens Monday. He will be kept there for 14 days, after which he will have to be killed if a home outside of Chapel Hill is not found for him.

The cause of the removal of George from his usual habitat came last Saturday, according to the Humane Society treasurer, when three people reported to the Chapel Hill police that they had been bitten by the dog.

COULDN'T CATCH GEORGE

"The police got the county dog catcher, but he couldn't catch George. I did," said Mrs. Jordan. Mrs. Jordan said that she was able to catch the collie because she has fed him and taken care of him before.

Mrs. Jordan said that Wade Stockard, whose daughter owns George, has refused to pay for George's stay at the Humane Society's pens.

WHO DID IT?

According to Mrs. Jordan, there is no definite proof that George is the dog which bit the three people. She said that the culprit may be another collie which is often seen around the campus and which belongs to one of the fraternities. She is trying now to locate the one person who left his name when reporting the incident to the police to see if he can definitely identify George as the dog that bit him.

"Personally I don't know which of the two dogs is guilty, but George is the one that's going to catch it," she said.

GEORGE
. . . exile?

Mrs. Paul Smith of the Intimate Bookshop, in front of which George spends much of his time sleeping, said, "We think it is some other dog, or either people just have a grudge against George."

A member of the staff of the shop's staff said that it is definitely another collie that bites people. He added that the dog looks very much like George.

George will have to go out of town, according to W. L. Sloan, chief of the Chapel Hill police, because, "We have had so many complaints that he has bitten people."

Faculty Head

D. D. CARROLL, above, of the University School of Business Administration, was yesterday elected chairman of the Carolina faculty members for the next three years. He succeeds William Wells of the English Department.

Gordon Gray Will Speak To Cobb Tonight

University President Gordon Gray will be the featured speaker at a dorm discussion program to be held at Cobb Dormitory tonight at 9 o'clock.

The session is the first of a series promoted under the auspices of the IDC social committee to better acquaint residents of all men's dorms with university officials and faculty.

The guest speakers, selected by the individual dorms, will discuss any topic concerning world affairs, social adjustment or other subjects in which the students are interested.

Exams, Dorms, Honor Talked At SP Meeting

Exam scheduling, the need for more dormitories and the introduction of the Honor System to new faculty members were discussed by the Student Party at its meeting last Monday night.

Miss Pat McBane, a member of the party's advisory board, discussed the problem of exam schedules. She brought up the possibility of initiating a reading day before exam week to ease the heavy schedules which some students have. She said that when she talked with Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver about the problem he advised that students with heavy exam schedules should go to the deans of the schools rather than the ndividual professors to have their schedules changed. Miss McBane added that Dean Weaver said that he did not see how anything could be done about changing the exam scheduling now.

The need for more men's dormitories here was discussed by veteran Student Party Member Jim Turner. Turner said that the University needs a whole new quad and a renovation of the old one. He brought up two means by which it could obtain the dorms, through the state or through benefactors. He proposed that the party start work on the problem now, as it would take a long range program to solve it.

Charlie Wolf suggested that an explanation by an Honor Council or Student Council member of the Honor System should be given to each new faculty member. He also said that the same procedure might be used with old faculty members to make them more aware of the system.

The party voted not to hold the regular meeting next Monday night.

'Figaro' Rehearsals Started In October

Mozart's popular opera The Marriage of Figaro will be presented by the University's Music Dept. on Jan. 17-18. The department, which has been rehearsing the comic opera since early October, will give its full length production in Hill Hall at 8:30 p.m. each night.

All seats are reserved and tickets are available at Hill Hall box office for one dollar. Mail orders will be accepted for tickets which will be held if desired until the night of the performance.

The Marriage of Figaro has 18 th century Europe as the setting for its plot of deception and disguise. The plot is solved with the meeting of the two lovers which receives the approval of all concerned.

Dr. Wilton Mason is the musical director for The Marriage of Figaro and will conduct the 30-piece orchestra participating in its presentation.

Models Needed

Models are needed by Person Hall for the art classes, according to Miss Lynette Warren, curator.

Miss Warren said that the models may be either men or women, and that they would be paid $1 per hour.

The curator said that anyone interested should contact her at 2301.

No More Sunday Papers:

Paper Cuts Schedule To 5 Days Per Week

The Daily Tar Heel will cease publication of its Sunday issue this week, Editor Charles Kuralt announced yesterday. The student Legislature of last spring appropriated only enough money for a five-day newspaper after Christmas.

Kuralt, in announcing the cutback, noted that advertising income is higher than expected and that the newspaper might resume six-day operation later in the year. "But for the time being," his statement said, "it seems best to comply with the dictates of the Legislature's appropriation. If we continued publishing on Sunday, it would be at the expense of features and pictures for all the newspapers in the week, and at the risk of having to curtail publication entirely late in the spring for lack of funds."

The Legislature, short on money itself, is not evpected to come to the newspaper's aid. But Kuralt said he would ask, through the Publications Board, for an appropriation large enough to put The Daily Tar Heel back on its six-day schedule.

"We are sorry to have to deprive the campus of the Sunday issue," Kuralt said "We intend to resume its publication as soon as we are financially able."

'Rampagers'—Duke's Men— To Play Here Next Wednesday

"The Rhythmic Rampagers," one of the many titles given to the jazz and swing specialists of the renowned Count Basic Orchestra, have not only been given "rave notices" by critics for their Carnegie Hall concerts but in addition are the expressed favorites of numerous universities and colleges.

As proof, "America's incomparable rhythmic stylists," to appear here in concert Jan. 12, boast the announcement by Harvard University that Count Basic "was its top choice among dance hands."

Basie and his "All American Rhythm Section" have also played for a number of the smartest college proms throughout the country, including the University of Pennsylvania, University of Virginia, Amherst, Princeton, Yale, Michigan and many others.

"The sepia Swing King," who has been at the reins of his jazz outfit since 1936, affords performances which are distinctly unique in that they consist of three variations: blues, boogie woogie and jump.

Undoubtedly, the high spot of the "jazzy presentation," to be offered in Memorial Hall from 3:30 to 6 in the afternoon, will be "The Royal Suite" in three movements and featuring Basie and various soloists of the band at their "steamy and rocking" best.

Basie's appearance will be sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board in conjunction with the Interdormitory Council Social Committee.

Kappa Alphas Back

For the first time since Nov. 8 the Kappa Alpha house is being occupied.

On that date, fire drove the KAs out. It started in the basement due to an over-heated coal furnace.

The fire spread along the underside of the entire first floor and gutted the basement before it could be brought under control. Total damage from fire, smoke and water was estimated at over $10,000.

After three weeks of conferences with insurance adjustors, the Wrenn-Wilson Construction Co. of Durham was given the contract for putting the house back in shape. The job is now within two weeks of completion, according to Martin Jordan, KA president.

"Everything's clean, and the basement is better now than before," said Jordan. "And now we are using an oil furnace."

"I was sorry when it (the fire) happened, but not now," Jordan added.

Gasoline Investigator Gets Reply From Attny. General

State Can't Do Anything About Prices Which Don't Violate Monopoly Laws

Student Legislator Norwood Bryan, who last month unleashed an attack on what he termed "artificially high" gasoline prices in Chapel Hill, yesterday received a letter from North Carolina Attorney General Harry McMullan on the subject.

(Bryan had previously written a letter to Gov. Luther Hodges, asking State help in investigating the current gasoline situation here. Bryan (SP) and fellow Legislator Max Crohn (UP) are members of a committee appointed by the campus-lawmaking body to look into gas prices.)

Said Attorney General McMullan in reply to Bryan's letter to the Governor:

"The same condition which you report in Chapel Hill is prevalent throughout many other areas of North Carolina where prices of gasoline are considerably lower than prices charged in other areas, indicating perhaps some local gasoline 'price wars' resulting in fixing prices substantially lower than prices generally throughout the state.

"We have no laws in North Carolina," continued McMullan, "which authorize any agency of the state to fix the price of gasoline and where prices are fixed by companies on a competitive basis, without violating our laws against trust and monopolies, no remedy is provided for this situation."

SCOTT COMMITTEE

McMullan wrote that during the administration of former Gov. W. Kerr Scott" a committee was appointed by him to study the (gasoline) problem and various ways of dealing with it were considered. The committee made a report to Governor Scott, copy of which you can obtain by writing to Mr. Charles Poe of Raleigh . . . attorney for this committee.

"Nothing, however, was suggested in this report which would enable the state to deal with the price variations in the sale of gasoline in different localities of the state," McMullan added, "unless it could be shown that such action was a result of agreements between companies or distributers in restraint of trade in violation of our statute."

Legislator Bryan, in a statement to The Daily Tar Heel before Christmas, declared "the gasoline interests in Chapel Hill are using the students and charging what the market will bear. In polite terms," said Bryan, "this might be called "price gouging."

Bryan's gasoline survey, conducted last month, showed petrol prices higher in Chapel Hill than in Carrboro, Hillsboro, Durham and Raleigh.

Coming Here Jan. 14 & 15:

Wendell Corey's A Veteran

By MAJORIE WYLDE

Wendell Corey, one of America's most versatile actors, will perform here Friday and Saturday night, Jan. 14-15.

He will play Lieutenant Greenwald in The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial, to be presented in Memorial Hall at 8:30 p. m.

Corey is noted for such distinguished and varied screen portrayals as a homicide in The Accused, the romantic gambler in The Furies, when he costarred with Barbara Stanwyck with whom he also appeared in Sorry, Wrong Number and the recently completed Alfred Hitchcock production, Rear Window.

His stage successes include Dream Girl, The Voice of the Turtle, in which he appeared in the London Company, and Sabrina Fair, in which he toured around the country.

Corey fans love to see him in a role of Lieutenant Greenwald, the clever yet unassuming and semi-apologetic "sea lawyer." As counsel for the heroic Lt. Steve Maryk in his court martial for his alleged mutinous conduct, he puts on a brillinat and winning performance.

His friends predict that this play, with the subtle production values contributed by Paul Gregory and Charles Laughton, plus the sharp-shooting punch of the lines provided by the author, Herman Wouk, will powerfully intrench Corey in the forefront of his profession.

In addition to Corey, the cast of the Caine Mutiny Court Martial includes Steve Brodie as Lt. Steve Maryk and Paul Douglas as the unforgettable Captain Queeg.

This new play by Wouk is based directly upon the author's best-selling Pulitzer Prize-winning novel The Caine Mutiny which has remained at or near the top of best-seller listings in all of the nation's major cities since its publication nearly three years ago.

Immediately after Gregory and Laughton had completed the preliminary work incident to their production of John Brown's Body, one of the outstanding smash hits of last season, Gregory went to work seriously on his cherished project of bringing The Caine Mutiny to the footlights.

An agreement was reached with Wouk, the author came to the Coast for conference, the treatment was discussed, and Wouk set about the task of translating his creation into the medium and the idiom of the living stage.

More than a year of intensive work went into these preparations, climaxing in the smash hit New York engagement. Now, with the formation of the National Festival Company, Wendell Corey joins the roster of distinguished actors currently appearing under the banner of Paul Gregory.

Staging and direction are under the supervision of Charles Laughton, the famed stage and screen star and associate of Paul Gregory in their previous stage ventures which include Don Juan in Hell and John Brown's Body.

PAUL DOUGLAS, on the witness stand as Captain Queeg, is questioned by Wendell Corey, as Steve Brodie looks on in a scene from the "Caine Mutiny Court-Martial." These three well-known actors play the leading roles with the touring company of the Charles Laughton-directed show, which will be given on Jan. 14-15 in Memorial Hall at 8:30 p.m. under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers.

Tickets For WF Game Being Rationed At Gym

Tickets for Saturday night's basketball game with Wake Forest, to be held in Woollen Gym, are being rationed out on a reserve basis, according to gym officials.

Passbook holders who want to attend the game must present their books at the ticket office in the gym in exchance for a ticket.

The plan is being conducted on a first come, first served plan up until noon Saturday.

1955 Legislature Will Start Working Today

RALEIGH, Jan. 4 (AP)—Democrats held caucuses tonight to select presiding officers for the 1955 Legislature shortly after plans to get the General Assembly off to a fast start tomorrow were outlined. The Senate will convene at 11 a.m. and the House at noon.

Almost everyone expected Rep. Larry I. Moore of Wilson to be chosen speaker of the House and Sen. Luther Barnhardt of Cabarrus to be nominated president of the Senate at the Democratic caucuses. The Democratic nominees are certain to be elected when the two houses meet tomorrow since 110 of 120 house members and 49 of 50 senators are Democrats.

Gov. Hodges, meanwhile, told his news conference that the report of the Advisory Budget Commission along with proposed tax bills will be presented to the Legislature Thursday shortly after he delivers his biennial "State of the State" message at a joint session of the House and Senate. Moore said he hopes the House can begin a thorough study of the budget proposals Thursday afternoon.

Legislative observers could not recall a time when the state's proposed budget had been laid before the lawmakers so early in the session. In 1953—when Gov. Umstead was in the hospital following a heart attack—the Legislature did not receive the budget recommendations until Jan. 16.

The proposed budget is expected to ask for tax increases to boost state revenues by approximately 50 million dollars during the next two fiscal years. If taxes are boosted, it will be the first substantial increases since depression days.

The tax problem, plus the school segregation issue and many other

Drama Reading

The Community Drama Group will read Lady Gregory's "Spreading the News" Sunday at 8 p.m. in the assembly room of the Library.

After the reading of the one-act comedy, the group will hold a meeting to plan for future readings.

Copies of the play may be obtained at Stella Lyon's newsstand in the post office.

The Keepers Of The Light

The 1955 General Assembly, which opens in Raleigh today, faces a longer list of imposing problems than any session since the depression years. Money is the root of many of the problems. North Carolina simply doesn't hae enough.

That as always, affects the state University. And that means you.

The silence up at South Building is everybody from President Gray down holding his breath—waiting for Goernor Hodges' budget message tomorrow and the release of the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations. The big question: Will the University's needed expansions and improvements, or any part of them be approved? If not, we'll be struggling along for several more years in crowded quarters and likely with a raise in tuition and fees.

So todays' gathering of the lawmakers in Raleigh is a historic moment for the University. The old dream of a state school "as nearly as possible tuition free", the visions of new living and working space for a cramped campus due to become more cramped next year and the year after—these ideals will be realized or shattered at the hands of the Assembly.

North Carolina's General Fund will plainly stand only so much expenditure. The Daily Tar Heel hopes the legislature will find time, amid the demands for caucuses and committee meetings amid the pressures of other important legislation, to weigh the importance of the University and the light it sheds on the state; and that they will conclude the light should not be dimmed.

The Moral Dilemma & The Casual Paths

In a batch of tired ugly themes that ushered the old year out—the Agriculture Department's firing of a capable anti-Communist as a "security risk" the Reese Committee's report on the "subversive" Ford Foundation, the march of other examples of man's petty ignorance—you may have missed an important summation of the world's plight.

It was made in New York by Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer ,who, stripped of official Government trust, has retained his scientific gift of analysis. He spoke at Columbia's last celebration of her 200th Anniversary—spoke of the moral dilemma that nuclear science has forced upon the world, of the isolation of men that is taking place in the very midst of a mass-communicating world.

This is what he said:

> . . . The means by which the true human community, the man knowing man, the neighor understanding neighbor the schoolboy learning a poem, the women dancing, the individual curiosity, the individual sense of beauty are being blown dry and listless. . .
> And the challenge—and the hope:
> This cannot be an easy life. We shall have a rugged time of it to keep our minds open and to keep them deep, to keep our sense of beauty and our ability to make it, and our occasional ability to see it, in places remote and strange and unfamiliar; we shall have a rugged time of it all—of us in helping these gardens in our villages, in keeping open the manifold, intricate, casual paths, to keep these flourishing in a great, windy world: but this is, as I see it, the condition of man: and in this condition we can help, because we love one another.

This speech, by the man who was, until last June, the most distinguished of the government's atomic advisors, was a clean cool hand on the fevered brow of our times and an eloquent dissent from the bleak iew of progress that is the modern disease.

Dr. Oppenheimer, who helped deise the formula for the world's destruction, has now presented the formula for its salation: a turning from the super highway of inhumanity onto the intricate casual paths, where neighbor might understand neighbor.

Carolina Front

A Sacred Cow Or A Way Of Living?

Louis Kraar

WHILE THE season for making resolutions is still upon us, I have one that the Men's Honor Council should make—and keep.

As one of the main guardians of the Honor System, the Men's Council should see to it that the facts, decision, and sentence for each case tried, are reported to this paper.

The "Campus Law" provides that the Men's Council do this—"generally two weeks after the case has been tried." But this year the Council members have seen fit to release only one report.

Naturally the student defendants are always treated anonymously, and they should be for protection purposes.

But there is little excuse for the Men's Council not to do its duty and report the cases. Not only is this body breaking a law that it is pledged to uphold, but the Men's Council is missing the vital chance it has to remind students that Carolina has a working Honor System.

Apparently, the Men's Council chairman realizes the purpose of reporting cases to students. He pointed it out when he released the semester's sole report.

"With the purpose of informing the students about the operation of the Honor System and the activities of the Men's Council, this report is issued. . . ." the chairman declared.

THE HONOR System is not a sacred cow, something students should hold in awe and speak of in hushed tones.

Supposedly, it is a way of life in a college world that trusts a student on his word.

But when the elected officials who help implement the Honor System fail to utilize the one way of informing students of their work, the whole ideal becomes a farce.

Currently, the idea prevails on campus that the Honor Councils are some mystic groups that meet in a far off place to dole out an esoteric brand of justice. This is a false idea, but the Men's Council—in not informing the campus of its work—contributes to this misconception.

I'm convinced that the students serving on the Men's Council are capable, sincere and probably doing a good job. Chairman Herb Browne has always been cooperative in discussing the workings of the group.

This just makes the failure of reporting cases in the paper more inexcusable—and less understandable.

ONE OTHER aspect of this business of reporting cases strikes me as rather odd. When the Men's Council made its solitary report, just before school ended, the spokesman for the group asked that his name not be used in the paper.

Obviously, no student enjoys being the reporter of who was kicked out of school. But for an elected official—a judge—to be ashamed of his office is regretable.

Of course, the Honor Council members don't enjoy announcing that so many students cheated and were suspended. But this is the job for which they were elected, and the campus respects them for doing the job well.

Administration members have remarked recently that Carolina students don't have a clear conception of the Honor System. If this is true, and I think it is, the lack of understanding has grown from the secrecy which has surrounded the working of the courts.

If students are going to realize that we have an Honor System after the tread-mill of Orientation, the courts are going to have to start making regular reports.

'That's The Kind We Want—You Can See Just What He's Not Thinking'

A Tale Of Two Ex-Amateurs

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — Two men who entered national politics as complete amateurs at the same time two years ago are showing how the great game inevitably takes hold of those who taste its fruits of power.

One, President Eisenhower, is now disclosed to have been lecturing his close associates about the necessity of building up attractive young GOP Presidential possibilities for the future. He had his list ready, all either friendly Governors or men from the second level of his administration.

This assumption of responsibility for the Republican future has appeared before in the still rather generalized Eisenhower conversations about his progressive moderate philosophy. The new list named people and is a further and longer step away from the President's original notion that he could serve as a kind of head of state.

It included Governors Langlie of Washington, Kohler of Wisconsin and Craig of Indiana, Deputy Attorney General William P. Rogers and Deputy Secretary of Defense Anderson.

It is not quite the list the professionals would draw up and it was a failure of tact on the President's part not to select for it some of the men in House and Senate on whom he must rely—for example, Rep. Halleck of Indiana, whose pro-Eisenhower leadership of the GOP House majority was brilliant. But the Eisenhower interest, especially with its implication that he has accepted the yoke of party leader, will be welcomed everywhere but in the extreme GOP right wing.

The idea itself is sound politics. The President has perceived or has been reminded that few if any potential successors loom among his Cabinet members and administrative heads who are getting today's headlines. They are business men, not elective office material. It was always possible that one or more would prove to have the touch, but none has.

The great sameness of the Eisenhower administrators and the emphasis on teamwork and getting along with Congress have combined to keep down the personal publicity that attracts political attention. They may be rather generally respected, but they are not characters attracting warmth, amusement, love, hate, interest and curiosity.

Of them all the country probably knows Secretary of Defense Wilson best, and that is because of his famous bloomers, including bird dogs and kennel dogs, plus the earthy way in which he responds to criticism. As Harry S. Truman proved, the better minds in the capital are censorious of earthiness but the people seem to like it.

The other amateur-turned-professional with great plans is Stephen A. Mitchell, retiring Democratic National Chairman. Mitchell is not returning to private practice of law because he is tired of politics, on the contrary, visons of sugar plums dance in his head.

He hopes and expects to play a leading part in three important elections where the power stakes are among the highest in U. S. politics.

He will act as a bridge between the professional politicians and the larbely amateur Adlai Stevenson camp in an effort to renominate and elect Stevenson President in 1956. He will plunge immediately into the three-way Chicago Mayoralty fight to help a Stevenson protege, County Clerk Richard J. Daley, to victory. In his spare time, he will work on the candidacy of Stephen A. Mitchell for Governor of Illinois, probably in 1956.

If You 'Want A Better Job', Just Don't Think

(The following appeared recently in The St. Louis Post-Dispatch as a letter to the editor from Norman Thomas, who, in his recent visit to this campus, proved himself a sensible protagonist of civil libertues. The pamphlet in question titled "So You Want A Better Job," and written by Paul W. Boynton, supervisor of employment for Socony-Vacuum may be found, by those who can't believe such a responsible company could issue such irresponsible literature, in the office of the Vocational Placement Service, 206 Gardner Hall. —Editor.)

In discussing undergraduate apathy on political and social questions, a Princeton student quoted in the Princeton Alumni Weekly two sentences from an employment pamphlet issued by Socony-Vacuum Co. which he thought helped explain the matter.

I was so pertured by those sentences that I sent for the pamphlet and now quote the entire paragraph from which they are taken:

"Personal views can cause a lot of trouble. Remember then to keep them always conservative. The 'isms' are out. Business being what it is, it naturally looks with disfavor on the wild eyed radical or even the moderate pink. On the other hand I think you will find very few business men who will attempt to dictate the political party of their employees."

The author—a personnel officer in the company—assured me that this pamphlet had been circulated for some years in and out of colleges with applause and that mine was the first criticism.

Of course, Socony-Vacuum has a right to circulate the pamphlet through college placement bureaus. The pamphlet represents, however, an obvious effort to control opinion by job control. It is, to my mind, surprising that our colleges and universities should spend large sums of money to train students to think and to express their thoughts and then make no protest when a great corporation warns their undergraduates to keep still unless their opinions are "conservative." That is, I suppose, as nearly as possible a carbon copy of the boss's.

The paragraph I quoted, by the way, is headed, "Personal Views" and follows a paragraph on "Personal Habits" which, among other things, advises against drinking too much. If, then, a young college or high school graduate will not drink too much and not think at all except as an electronic machine on the job, he may rise.

But what will happen to democracy or to education if this is to be presented as the road to success? Recent writers who have discovered that corporations have acquired a soul of which they give creditable evidence might do further research into the nature of that soul.

I write as chairman of the Union for Democratic Socialism (a kind of Fabian Society) but I write in support of a principle of vital importance to all believers in democracy whatever their own political and economic views.

Pseudo-Conservative

RICHARD HOFSTADTER

In The American Scholar

Unlike the genuine conservative, the pseudo-conservative believes himself to be living in a world in which he is spied upon plotted against, betrayed, and very likely destined for total ruin. . . He sees his own country as being so weak that it is constantly about to fall victim to subversion: and yet he feels that it is so all-powerful that any failure it may experience in getting its way in the world—for instance, in the Orient—cannot possibly be due to its limitations but must be attributed to its having been destroyed.

Reaction Piece

Muntzing Is Man To Watch In '55—Mundy

David Mundy

Manning Muntzing is the campus "man to watch in '55." My New Year's prediction, circa last Thanksgiving,—the prediction that he will be the next president of the student body—still stands.

Chief obstacle in his path is the "Fleishman Wing" of the Student Party. The SP politicos are pretty sharp characters, however and the wrath of the almighty Joel isn't likely to prevail. First, of course, is the fact that his direct participation and power in campus politics ceases with his impending venture into the Navy's supply corps. He is also unlikely to have the residual influence of the other two great "SP reparted." Penegar and Cook. They possessed more warmth, if not more finesse, in dealing with their friends and foes than has comrade Joel. They left something of a "leading kindly light" in their wake, whereas Fleishman's extraordinary political cleverness may leave some rather rutfled feelings.

And Fleishman has also become something of a SP liability. His political adroitness can be matched by no other campus politico. Without him, up to this point, the SP would be in a bad way. But that same political cleverness is also the SP's great liability. Rightly or wrongly (wrongly, I believe) a great number of students are suspicious of "politicians and all their doings." Fleishman, chairman of the SP and master manager that he is, has come to personify all these real or imagined evils.

The students' reactions to "politico Fleishman" was almost disastrous to the SP in the fall elections. One of the factors which intensified the reaction was Louis Kraar's Tarnation article satiriding Fleishman. Fleishman was plastered with the label of an out-and-out politician. I would adjudge columnist Kraar to be free of ulterior motives in writing his very humorous and very damaging article; but no Fleishman or SP enemy could have done them greater harm. The UP could do well in the spring election by merely distributing copies of the article.

But back to Muntzing.

The move by one wing of the party to censure him last fall was abortive and unsuccessful. Should the Fleishman wing try another maneuver like that one, it could almost assure Muntzing's nomination.

And while much of the SP's bickering has centered around the possibility of Muntzing's candidacy, Muntzing has managed to stay comparatively clear of the intra-party clashes. He didn't have to lead his own defense in the censure move. He was also comparatively clear of the maneuvering which handed SP leader Fleishman his solitary defeat in a SP controlled legislature when he aspired to the highest executive office there, that of speaker pro tem.

The story of the great Fleishman defeat goes something like this, according to one SP member.

He, Fleishman) just trompled all over some people in the caucus beforehand. Only the people he wanted got nominations. Well, some of 'em didn't like it one bit, so they got together a group that could control the legislature by switching and swapping votes. Well, Joel gets wind of it and calls ..... (Not Muntzing), the leader of the group, up to his office and they make some sort of deal. Well, ... comes back and tells 'em that it's all off. It appears that some of 'em were still pretty mad though. They thought ..... deserved the job more, so they voted for him.

When Muntzing's nomination directly confronts the SP there will be some opposition. Conflicting ambitions and cliques, as well as remainders of past feuds, will clutter the field of unanimity. But he will get the nomination for a comparatively simple reason. The SP'ers are well aware of the political trade winds. Muntzing is the SP candidate who can win. The extraordinarily loquacious Dave Reid was another front-runner for a while, but he started to fade with "Leniency Bill."

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE trotted at a dignified pace through the so-called humans who were herding like sheep into Case's Castle, sometimes referred to as the State Coliseum, alias The Wm. Neal Reynolds Coliseum.

He was astonished to see so many other horses. The Horse was just beginning to ogle a few likely mares when a munion of the gracious and always polite management approached and asked:

"Whatcha doin' in this here seat, you?"

The Horse, never one to be outdone in observing the amenities, showed his horse-teeth in a smile and simultaneously showed his ticket of entitlement. The minion went away. . .

The game started promptly on Coliseum time at 7:45 for the 7:30 curtain.

The polite State audience booed Lifson, when we took the court of the ugh. Dook game. They booed the refs, too. The game got under way . . . another State servitor—or was I the same?—accosted us politely anent out seat. We were taken aback at his question of where we got our ticket arrangements when we realized he meant "Can you, let's see ya ticket!" He saw it. . .

Mayer, of Duke, is a vrai Old Pro. I just can't help liking that colt when he starts going to the races. Lenny Rosenbluth's shirt keeps coming out like a perennial debutante . . . and so do his shots in the first-half.

The refs seem to be the only impartial people in the whole of Case's Castle . . . and this seems to annoy the ownership, when they tackle Minnesota. But that, again, was later. . . . Leave us stay with the Dook-Tar Heels. . .

Rosenbluth's shots start going into the bucket with 8:08 of the last period gone. He sinks two fouls and the great Sophomore Basketeer is on his way down the glory road.

The half ends with Dook shooting a phew-ing 21.2, to the Tar Heels' slightly worse at 20%. "Is there a basket in the house. . .?"

When play got under way again—Duke leading 22 to 18—Rosie Rosenbluth displayed a shot that surveyed the rim of the basket twice, and declined not to buy. While the refs and the crowd were wondering this, Rosie got a neat body-block and went down again. We make it four times he has reposed after blocks. This far. Deep-sea divers don't even do this well, yes?

Belmont is stealing the ball so often that Coach McGuire is considering putting Joe Friday on him.

Sutton goes for five through center, and is offside; but Mayer isn't off at all, and cans the charity tosses (just to prove I can clichey with the worst of 'em. . .)

Morgan and Belmont get four fouls each at 12:45 of the last frame and The McGuirian Strategy looms clear. Even Bradley sees it, and slumps dejectedly on the Dook, ugh, bench.

In The Horse's stall is a flattened Cornell University Club matchbook-cover. An omen. . .? Cornell's team nailed down the cellar spot.

Vayda makes a pass at the ball when Mayer is holding it, and ends up bopping Mayer's head. It hurts Vayda more than Ronnie. It hurt still more when Ronnie plunked two in. . .

Rosenbluth's shirt comes out again. . .

Lifson goes ten yards, beating Sutton, but his bucket a minute later marks the turn, and the Tar Heels go ahead. Staters hate Dook worse than usin Tar Heels for, actually, they cheer.

The game ends, Us 68, Dook, ugh, 59.

The nightcap Championship comes on, and we look in amazement at Case's two Leaning Towers, Snavlik and Dwyer. Then a veritable Statue of Liberty named Semonovitch moves majestically down harbor—court, that is—and Minnesota wins the Tallest Man title. . . 6 feet-11; 290 lbs.

Case puts a full-court press on Minnesota at 10:39 of the first stanza, but they get a talcer on Minnesota named Mencel who opened up to full throttle and all Case got was his pants pressed. Mencel made bobbies of Case's vaunted speedsters.

Bolsdorf of Minnesota, thinks he is an Arkansas Traveler or something, and climbs aboard a State ball-hawker; but the refs taught him it was a Gopher game by calling a foul on him. He rode at least the Preakness distance before he dismounted. . .

State's Pond is a gutsy player, and State should pad the press-tables to save maimin gof such players. The only thing that stopped Pond was the press-table and its dangerous fenced front. But then, money comes first. Pond might have fractured his skull and presumably may before safety-mats are put into use. . .

Blessed be those who go about in circles, for they shall become Big Wheels. . . And now The Big Wheel of Case's Castle's Publicity Corps approached to show his minions how it is done, even if it should not be. . . The Horse gets a good hollering at for sitting at his assigned press-table seat. When The Horse pleads Not Guilty and offers Tar Heel accreditation, the Daily Tar Heel gets a yelling at . . . about. It seems it concerns Dottie O'Mare, who is reporting a Woman Looks at Basketball. The Horse does not object when the Big Wheel yells at Mrs. O'Mare, having more than once had the same impulse. . . The Wheel cools off to a bubbling boil and wheels away making sounds like a calliope, complete with steam effect. . . When quality meets, compliments fly. . .

State outlucks Minnesota by getting the last crack at the hoop with 00:00 of the game left, making it a final 85-84.

Tucker of Minnesota pick-a-backs State's Pond, and outrides Bolsdorf's previous race. He wins The Preakness Cup, but all they award is two fouls to State. . . .

A great State team, a great Minnesota team, a great all-the-teams. Good officiating; very good.

But somebody just might mail an Emily Post "Etiquette to Guests" to the management. It wouldn't hurt them in the least.

And now I wonder will Chollie Kuralt ever again get press-table seats? Tell 'em what they can do with your seating arrangements, Chollie, ol' boy.

Promoter Tries To Stop Fight

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Jan. 4 (AP)—Fight promoter Norm Rothschild said today he would take any legal steps necessary to restrain Peter Muller from fighting Gordon Wallace in Milwaukee Jan. 11."

Muller has been signed to fight Carmen Basilio of Canastota, No. 1 welterweight, in a nationally televised fight here Jan. 21.

Mueller knocked out Ernie Durando in the seventh round in Milwaukee Dec. 28 in the latest of three consecutive victories for the busy Grman middleweight.

"I am shocked by reading that Mueller has signed to fight Wallace Jan. 11," Rothschild said. He added:

"If he should get knocked out or cut he would draw a 30-day suspension and be unable to fight Basilio Jan. 21."

Athlete Of The Week:

Vayda's Play Aided In High Classic Finish

Jerry Vayda, 6'4", 200-pound junior from Bayonne, N. J., has been selected by the sports staff of The Daily Tar Heel as "Athlete of the Week" on the basis of his fine performance last week in the Dixie Classic basketball tournament in Raleigh.

Though the solid forward did not play a flashy game and was not a high scorer, his steady and consistent play throughout the Classic was a major factor in Carolina's finishing third. N. C. State and Minnesota finished one-two, respectively.

Vayda, who was high scorer and carried a 17-point average on last year's team, played a major role in all three games. In the opener against Southern California, he scored 13 points (connecting on 11 of 14 free throws) and snagged 11 rebounds. The Tar Heels won that game and moved into the semifinals against State.

Jerry came up with 10 rebounds and eight points against the Wolfpack, and in such a low-scoring, possession-type game, he kept the Tar Heels in the running. UNC lost this one, 48-45, but the following evening played Duke for third place, and it was here that Vayda proved his stuff.

Carolina won from Duke going away, 65-52, much of the credit for the win to Vayda, who came down with the ball time and time again, repeatedly out-jumping Duke's taller Junior Morgan and Ronnie Mayer. Vayda collected 19 rebounds. He scored only six points, taking but eight shots.

The Tar Heels were the surprise of the Classic, beating two nationally ranked teams and losing, only after a battle, to the country's No. 2 five, State.

UVa. Replaces State As Top Scoring Team

GREENSBORO, Jan. 4 (AP)— The University of Virginia, winner of six of 10 games at the start of this week has replaced North Carolina State as the No. 1 offensive basketball team in the Atlantic Coast Conference, ACC Service Bureau figures show.

The Cavaliers, second two weeks ago, have an average of 90.3 pts. per games as compared to 86.6 for the Wolfpack, which is third-ranked nationally and has won 12 of 13 games. Wake Forest, with a 7-4 record, also slipped in ahead of State with an 88.1-point average.

Defensively, Maryland's Terps resign as the No. 1 team in the ACC again, the deliberate Marylanders allowing only 58.7 points a game to the opposition while winning seven of nine games including a sweep of the All-American City tournament at Owensboro, Ky., last week. Second in team defense is North Carolina, which has given up only 63 points a game to the opposition. Duke is third at 65.2.

The Blue Devls of Duke still enjoy the widest margin over the opposition, 16.9 points, with N.C. State second with 14.6.

Wake Forest has a brilliant 47.7 per cent accuracy mark in field goal shooting to lead the ACC by a wide margin. The Deacons hit 55 per cent in beating Southern California in the Dixie Classic tournament last week. N. C. State, Dixie Classic champ, is second with a 38.8 per cent mark. Wake Forest also leads in team free throw percentage with an accuracy figure of 72.5. N. C. State and Virginia are tied for second with 70.6 per cent.

Rosenbluth Tops With 26 Points, But Tar Heels Outclassed by Tide

Alabama Combines Brilliant Outside Shooting And Fast Break to Dominate Game Throughout

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Jan. 4 (AP)—Alabama combined brilliant outside shooting and a fast break to roll over the University of North Carolina Tar Heels 77-55 here tonight.

The Tar Heels, despite a 26-point effort by sophomore Lennie Rosenbluth, were no match for the locals, who hit on 34 out of 71 field goal attempts for better than a 45 per cent accuracy average.

The Crimson Tide took an 8-0 lead before Rosenbluth dropped in a field goal for the Tar Heels with 4:20 of the game gone. The Tar Heels rallied briefly midway the first period and cut the lead to 1 point at 17-16 with Rosenbluth leading the attack. Alabama then jumped back into the lead 35-21.

As the halftime buzzer sounded, 'Bama's George Linn took a rebound, whirled and fired for the basket. He sank his shot—estimated at 88 feet, certainly the longest ever in this neck of the woods.

In the second half, Alabama returned to run its margin to 58-34 midway the period. North Carolina went for a stretch of 10 minutes without sinking a field goal. Rosenbluth broke this drought with 13:30 of the period gone, with the score Alabama ahead 65-38.

Linn had 21 points to top the 'Bama scoring.

–Legislature Convenes Today–

problems which confront the legislature, have prompted some observers to describe the 1955 Legislature as one of the most crucial sessions of this century.

Moore today outlined plans to get "off to a fast start and to keep going." He said if the House approves he hopes to have the House begin its budget study Thursday afternoon.

Moore has suggested that the House and Senate sit as committees of the whole to hear state officials make thorough explanations of the proposed budget and the state's fiscal situation before the finance and appropriations committees start holding public hearings on spending and tax recommendations. In the past the appropriations committees have heard the spending proposals outlined and the finance committees have heard explanations of tax proposals. Normally about half the House and Senate members are on the appropriations committees and about half are on the finance committees. Moore said he thought it would be helpful for all legislators to hear an explanation of the entire budget picture.

Moore said he expects the budget study to require from two to three weeks and that he does not plan to announce the House committee appointments until the study period is over.

He said that in the interim he plans to name a rules committee and a calendar committee. In the past calendar committees have been named at the tag-end of legislative sessions to expedite adjournment. Moore said this time the calendar committee will handle "emergency matters" until the regular House committees are appointed.

In discussing the budget study proposed by Moore, Barnhardt said, "I think I'll leave that up to the Senate." He added that "I think we can all get some important information that way."

He added, however, that if the Senate authorizes him tomorrow to make committee appointments he will go to work and name the Senate committees "as soon as possible." He said the does not plan to name a calendar committee at the start of the session.

Moore, 50, is a veteran legislator who has served in the House continuously since 1939. During this span he has held many important committee assignments, including public welfare in 1947, finance in 1949, appropriations in 1951 and agriculture in 1953. He served for four years as a member of the advisory budget committee and was its chairman for two years. He practices law at Wilson and operates two farms.

Barnhardt, 51, is a quiet-voice Concord lawyer who has served five terms in the Senate, was chairman of its judiciary committee No. 1 in the 1953 session and has been chairman of its utilities committee three times. For many years he has been a member of the state's General Statutes Commission.

No Rent Hikes Here...

Toll Charges Increased On Some Phone Calls

No increases in telephone service rents are likely for local phone customers in the immediate future, but short-haul long distance call toll increases within North Carolina have just gone in to effect.

Grey Culbreth, University Utilities Superintendent, said yesterday that the local rental service rates, increased for the first time in 20 years in September, 1952, would be maintained here.

Late last month the State Utilities Commission granted Southern Bell and several smaller companies increases in rentals in many places over the state. These were the seventh consecutive hikes granted to Southern Bell since the end of World War II. The Chapel Hill Telephone Company sets its rates on the basis of an average for other N. C. communities and exchanges of the same size.

The increase for intra-state long distance calls went into effect as of December 22, on permission of the Utilities Commission, and will apply all over the state. A complete breakdown of the new rates hasn't yet been received by the telephone exchange here, but in many cases it's known that they provide for a five-cent increase on short-haul long distance calls.

UP A NICKEL TO DURHAM

For instance, the rate on a station-to-station call between Durham and Chapel Hill has been increased from $.20 to $.25 and a person-to-person call from $.40 to $.45. These figures are for three-minutes conversation, daytime, night-time, or Sundays. For calling many other nearby places the rate has been upped a nickel.

To call Charlotte from Chapel Hill there will be no increase in the station-to-station day rate, but probably a five-cent increase for night calls. And for many calls to farther points within the state there'll be no increase.

Children 'Moralistic'

Miss Jane Wilson, Supervisor of Elementary Public School libraries in Durham, said recently that her experience with children and their reading has made her "moralistic."

As the speaker of the final Bull's Head Book Shop tea, Miss Wilson reviewed several popular children's books.

A book must offer something more than entertainment, said Miss Wilson, who bases her opinion on many years of working in children's libraries at Detroit, Raleigh and Durham. Lone Muskrat, by Glenn Rounds was an example given.

One of the most practical lessons in fire prevention might be learned from the reading of this book, said Miss Wilson. The story involves the struggle of a single muskrat who survived a forest fire. The Oldest Secret, by Patricia Gordon, is an ideal introduction to classical writers, she said, and was cited as another worthwhile children's book.

North Carolina writers, continued Miss Wilson, have in some instances received national recognition for their children's books.

The Miracle on 34th Street, was told in conclusion by Miss Wilson in her own entertaining style, which has been enjoyed by children all over North Carolina.

Problems Not Solved, Says Gov. Hodges

RALEIGH, Jan. 4 (AP)——An "encouraging" report on December tax collections should not "mislead" the Legislature into thinking the state's financial problems are solved, Gov. Hodges said today.

The report by Revenue Commissioner Eugene Shaw showed General Fund collections of $10,194, 938, an increase of $125,696 over December, 1953. For the first half of the current fiscal year, the fund has collected $64,455,572, which is $1,812,280 more than the same period of the last fiscal year.

A significant portion of the report showed December sales tax receipts totaled $5,196,302, an increase of $453,868 over the preceding December. Shaw said this appeared to be "a reversal of the trend" sent during the first four months of the fiscal year when sales tax collections were declining.

CU's Gordon Gray Opposes Rumored Raise In Tuition

By NEIL BASS

"I am strenuously opposed to any proposed hike in the tuition rates of the Consolidated University of North Carolina for two expressed purposes," so spoke CU President Gordon Gray with a conviction ringing voice at a Cobb Dormitory discussion last evening.

Conservatively attired and entirely at ease as he chatted informally with the dorm residents, Gray enumerated his two opposition reasons as first, "a matter of principle," and second, "a matter of practice in that a number of students are financially unable to pay more."

The graying president, scheduled to speak on the administrative structure of the Greater University, diversified his oratory to cover phases involving "that school outside of Durham that has the temporary athletic ups on us" and a wide range of other subjects.

Completely dispelling criticisms that he was not well known enough among students, Gray seemed to enjoy his "high toned bull session" and went right to the hearts of his audience with the remark that his office could best be described as "the eventual recipient of the buck."

The off the cuff discussion was the first in a series promoted by the IDC social committee.

He Don't Have No Hook Nose:

George's Benefactor Says He's Not Guilty

There is some evidence that George, the collie who is in danger of either being exiled for good from Chapel Hill or of losing his lift if no home is found for him, is not the dog which reportedly bit three people last week, according to Mrs. A. M. Jordan, treasurer of the Chapel Hill Humane Society.

Mrs. Jordan said yesterday that a University faculty member witnessed the attack of a man by a collie, and that the professor described the dog as being hook-nosed. According to George's would-be exonerator, the campus collie does not have a hook nose. She said that another spectator saw the same dog bound against a closing car door in an attempt to attack the driver.

Mrs. Jordan is now attempting to free George from what she thinks are false accusations.

"We must have student help," she said. Of the three people who were bitten last week, only one identified himself. Therefore, the Humane Society treasurer wishes that any students who might know the identities of the other two victims get in touch with her. With more information she feels that the guilty collie will be revealed, and that it will not be George.

"A dog is just the opposite from a man," said Mrs. Jordan. "The dog is guilty until proven innocent." She added that the Humane Society is doing all possible to save George.

Mrs. Jordan said that she is also trying to find a suitable home for George outside of Chapel Hill in case she is not able to acquit him of the charges which have been made against him.

George's Petition Recalled

The anti-integration petition to the Governor state Legislature which was originated last Nov. 18 by a member of the University's faculty will be called in this week.

Dr. W. C. George, professor of histology and embryology, here said yesterday that he is now trying to call in his petition.

Concerning the number of peo- who have signed copies of the petition, Dr. George said that there are "a goodly number— more than I expected."

"It was our intention to limit them to Chapel Hill," said the professor concerning the area in which the copies have been circulated. "Where people from outside have asked for them I have sent them. Other than that I haven't sent them outside the county," he continued.

Dr. George's petition calls for continued segregation in the public schools on the basis of "biological and social" differences between the white and Negro races.

According to Dr. George, the petition will be presented to the Governor and the members of the State Senate and House of Representatives at the 1955 Legislature which began yesterday.

Bryan Says Gas Prices Are Same

There has been little change in gas prices in and around Chapel Hill over the holidays, according to Norwood Bryan, student legislator investigating the situation.

Carolina Motors Co. in Carrboro still retails brand-name gas lower than any other station in the vicinity, said Bryan. The station, .6 of a mile from Chapel Hill's main stoplight, sells regular gas at 28.9 cents a gallon, while high-test goes at 33.9, with no change in prices over the holidays, he continued.

Two Phillips 66 stations which came into Chapel Hill over the holiday period have changed price statistics slightly, with gas selling for barely less than pre-holiday cost.

"Nothing can be done legally to lower prices," said Bryan. "However, I am sure that the students will follow the law of demand and buy at the less expensive stations."

Video Network Visits Schools In The Search

GOLDEN, Colo.—A six-man production crew from CBS Television headquarters in New York City recently visited the Colorado School of Mines, shooting scenes on uranium research at the college. Films will be part of The Search, CBS Television's major documentary effort for 1954-55.

Covering a variety of subjects, the film series will highlight major research work at 26 American universities and colleges. Colorado Mines is the smallest school in the group, and is the only institution in the Rocky Mountain region included in The Search. The series of 26 half-hour chapters, one for each school involved, will be televised weekly over the CBS television nationwide network.

On the road since last spring, the crew has been shooting film and cutting sound tape at universities all over the nation. The crew members and their equipment arrived on this campus from the university of Arkansas, where they filmed a story on research in American mountain folklore; next assignment-Tulane University for story on research in mental illnesses.

Other universities and subjects include Yale University, child study; University of Chicago, cloud and weather research; University of Iowa, speech pathology, and Texas A & M, cattle raising.

Emory Doctor To Talk Here

Dr. Bruce Logue, associate professor of medicine at Emory University, will be the visiting lecturer for the opening sessions of courses with which the School of Medicine and Extension Division here will begin its 1955 post-graduate medical series next week.

The first course, a series for doctors in Goldsboro and the surrounding counties, to be held Jan. 11 through Feb. 15, will hold classes in the Goldsboro Country Club, while the second, Covering the Ahoskie-Edenton-Elizabeth City area, will be held alternately in the Roanoke Chowan Hospital, Ahoskie; Chowan Hospital, Edenton; and Virginia Dare Hotel, Elizabeth City. The latter course will begin Jan. 12 and continue through Feb. 16.

DR. LOGUE

At the opening sessions of both courses, Dr. Logue will present his views on the "Management of Hypertension."

Dr. Logue received both his B. S. and M. D. degrees from Emory University. His experience includes work as consulting cardiologist at Grady Memorial and Veterans Hospital, Atlanta, Ga., and cardiologist at Emory University Hospital.

The Coffee Machine

The green bartender recently acquired by Graham Memorial is dispensing an average of 50 shots a day. But for clarification one must note that the fluid is coffee and the colorful bartender is a lime-shaded Coffee Bar vender.

Nevertheless, "the machine is no losing proposition and a definite output increase is anticipated," says Jim McIntyre, assistant GM drector.

The six foot bartender, whose profits are for the GM Student Union fund, eliminates the necessity of students' having to pour their own coffee from the perculator as it issues cups either black or with cream and or sugar.

English Bagby In Hospital

Dr. English Bagby, prominent and popular member of the Psychology Department, was reported as "resting comfortably" by officals of Memorial Hospital today.

Dr. Bagby was admitted to the hospital Dec. 27, in a "serious condition." Cause of the professor's illness was not disclosed.

Newsweek Claims Rise Stevens Is The 'Modern Prima Donna'

The woman whom Newsweek magazine recently called "the epitome of the modern prima-donna" will be presented in a concert here next Tuesday night.

The Student Entertainment Committee will present Miss Rise Stevens at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Memorial Hall.

Miss Stevens, a mezzo, made her New York Metropolitan Opeara debut in the title role of Mignon, after having first sung the role in Prague, Czechoslovakia, and also the title role of Der Rosenkavalier with the Metropolitan Opera in Philadelphia, Pa.

She has appeared with other companies, including the San Fransico Opera Co., the Paris Opera, the Vienna State Opera and the Glyndebourne Music Festival.

Among the operatic roles which Miss Stevens has sung are Carmen, Delilah, Hansel, princess Marina in Boris Goudunof and Cherubino in The Marriage of Figaro. She has sung the greatest number of starring roles in the Metropolitan Opera in one season in the entire history of the Opera.

The mezzo is the first American born opera star to create a world premiere of an Italian opera in Italy itself. She did that when she sang the title role in The Devil's Daughter at La Scala.

Along with her operatic work, Miss Stevens has appeared on such television shows as Voice of Firestone, Toast of the Town, Comedy Hour and All Star Review. She was starred in the first opera to be televised from the Metropolitan Opera stage to the screens of movie theatres in some 50 cities across the country.

In the motion picture field, Miss Stevens appeared in such productions as The Chocolate Soldier, Going My Way and Carnegie Hall.

She has recorded for both RCA Victor and Columbia Records.

Muntzing Explains To Phi Reasons For Dance Failure

The Phi debated a bill providing for regular dorm sponsored dances at its Tuesday night meeting.

Manning Muntzing, guest speaker for the evening, outlined the necessity for such activity. A similiar proposal, "Brigadoons," failed to meet the approval of the dorms last fall.

Muntzing said failure of the measure was largely the result of fear of financial responsibility imposed on the dorms, rather than disapproval of the project itself.

Most of the debate was directed against the controversial financial plan. It was passed by a vote of 7 to 3, however. The second article was passed unanimously. The final vote on the entire bill unanimously favored it.

The Phi is a debating society, and measures it passes are not made into campus law.

Budget Commission Reveals Plans For University Today

Group Makes Report To State Legislature

By JACKIE GOODMAN

The financial fate of UNC for the next two years will probably be known today when the state's Advisory Budget Commission makes its report to the Legislature.

In making appropriations, the Legislature usually follows the recommendations of the Commission.

The report will disclose whether the Commission will recommend a raise in tuition and dormitory fees to the Legislature and how much of the University's request it will receive.

The possibility of increased fees came up at a meeting of the Commission early in September during which Consolidated University Vice President W. D. Carmichael told Commission members he would ask them to join him in requesting the Legislature to pass an act allowing the University to build dormitories with loans to be repaid from rentals.

WHAT EFFECT?

LeRoy Martin, Advisory Commission member, asked of State College Chancellor Carey Bostian what the effect on his student body would be if fees were increased. Bostian answered that an increase would deprive many youths of an opportunity to obtain technical training.

Since that time, Bostian, President Gray and Chancellor Edward K. Graham of Woman's College have come out against a raise in student fees.

A resolution was adopted by the student Legislature here at its meeting last Dec. 2 by which the Legislature went on record as opposing any increase in tuition and other fees. Also in accordance with the resolution which was introduced by Charles Hyatt, letters were sent to each state legislator, accompanied by copies of the resolution.

President Gordon Gray and Chancellor Robert B. House met with the commission during September to ask appropriations for the 1955-57 biennium.

Gray, at that time, asked for an increase in his general administration budget from $79,207 last year to $129,263 this year and $188,255 for next year. He also asked for $15,000 for the new office of business manager-treasurer and secretary.

House requested an increase in the maintenance budget for the University of $905,044 for 1955-56 and one of $867,738 for 1956-57.

The University requested $1,603,500 to build a new pharmacy building and remodel Howell Hall for occupancy by the School of Journalism.

Other requested appropriations for permanent improvements were an addition to, and remodeling of, Peabody Hall, $735,000; dormi-

Bill Up To Repeal State Secrecy Law

RALEIGH, Jan. 5. (AP)—The House got a bill to repeal the state's so-called legislative "secrecy" law, and the Senate a resolution to study the question as North Carolina's general assembly began its 1955 session today.

Consideration of the House bill was deferred for several days at the request of Speaker Larry Moore.

The Senate met at 11 a.m. and the House followed at noon.

Both houses went through the formality of electing the officers nominated at Democratic caucuses last night, with Rep. Larry Moore of Wilson as House speaker. Sen. Luther Barnhardt of Cabarrus as president of the Senate and Dr. Paul E. Jones of Pitt as Senate president pro tem.

Both houses adopted resolutions inviting Governor Hodges to appear before a joint session tomorrow to deliver his biennial message in which he is expected to urge tax increases in order to maintain state services at their present levels during the next two fiscal years. The Governor is expected to give his views on a number of other issues in his "State of the State" message.

After his election as speaker, Moore told the House, "Many problems face us." He added that "This general assembly must decide whether North Carolina is going to retranch its services to the pepole or levy additional revenues. Neither prospect is pleasant."

He suggested that after hearing the Governor's message and the budget proposals of the Advisory Budget Committee tomorrow, the House—as a committee of the whole—should undertake a thorough study of the budget proposals and the state's financial situation.

The colorful and dynamic secretary will speak on "Party Organization and Effective Politics" at a 6:30 dinner meeting upstairs in Lenoir Hall. Students will go through the regular line and take their trays upstairs to the north side.

John Jordon of Raleigh, president of the North Carolina Young Democrats, will introduce Mr. Eure.

Friday will be the second speaking engagement Thad Eure has had here this school year. On Nov. 18, he spoke to Delta Sigma Pi, professional business fraternity.

Men interested in being interviewed shquld contact the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall.

Field Scout Executives are responsible for organization of new scout units and for helping established units. The latter involves such things as leadership training courses, roundtable programs, camping events, inter-unit activities and personal help to leaders.

There are also a number of openings for counselors at camps for the coming summer.

N.C. Cars Increasing

RALEIGH, Jan. 5 (AP)-North Carolina's traffic continued to grow in 1954, but at the lowest rate of any year since the end of World War II.

The Highway Commission reported today that during the first 11 months of 1954 traffic on the primary highway system increased 1.4 percent over traffic in the same period of 1953.

The rate of increase showed a steady growth to 1950 when it reached a high of 12.7 percent. Since then the rate of climb has steadily fallen. In 1953 it dropped to 3.1 percent.

Traffic on minor state highways and major secondary roads showed a slightly higher increase of 3.9 percent over 1953, according to the report.

"The increase," noted the report, "May be due to traffic transferring from dirt roads and from crowded major primary highways to paved secondary roads. Even so, the increase and the transfer motor vehicle usage in North Carolina has increased no more than 2 percent over 1953."

Carolina-WF Game Will Be Televised Over WUNC-TV

For pictures of WUNC-TV at State College and Woman's College, see page four.

The first live telecast of basketball in the state will take place when WUNC-TV, Channel 4, televises the Carolina and Wake Forest games' Saturday night.

WUNC-TV will televise both the freshman and varsity games as part of its opening-day program. The telecast will begin at 6:30 from Woollen Gym with the freshman game. The varsity game will begin at approximately 8 p. m.

The Consolidated University's educational television station plans to make this telecast the first in a series of games to be presented during the rest of the basketball season.

Play-by-play announcing for the games will be done by Frank Waldman, sports director for WUNC-TV and former West Coast sports editor of The Christian Science Monitor.

Between the frosh and varsity games, President Harold W. Tribble of Wake Forest and Chancellor Robert B. House of Carolina will offer their best wishes to Dr. C. Sylvester Green who will join the staff Wake Forest College in March as director of alumni affairs and public relations.

At half-time of the varsity game, pictures of the old and new Wake Forest campus and historical highlights of the college will be presented.

WUNC-TV's Facilities Set To Be Used Today

WUNC-TV will televise Governor Luther Hodges' address at the joint session of the 1955 General Assembly in Raleigh today.

WUNC-TV's mobile unit will originate the presentation from the floor of the capitol building with several commercial stations picking up the telecast.

The telecast will begin at 11:30 this morning and will last for one hour.

The Magic Window Must Have Clear Panes

Saturday afternoon, WUNC-TV's test pattern will be replaced by a program, and North Carolina's first educational television station will be on the air.

The months and years of planning that see their fruition Saturday have not been free of discord for the planners. There is serious disagreement between those who would make of WUNC-TV a clear window into the University for the people of the state and those who would rose-stain the window—make the station merely a medium of amusement.

That disagreement has not been resolved as the University's television station prepares to begin operation. As a result, a large segment of WUNC-TV's most valuable asset—the faculty members—have been alienated from the whole idea. It will take a long period of serious work to bring them into the project.

WUNC-TV can do a number of useful things. It can bring more and better cultural programs to those who want them; it can bring high school and college courses into the homes for adults; it can telecast great speeches, great drama and music; it can teach f mers and housewives and craftsmen and businessmen, liberate thousands of people from ignorance by providing the state with programs of a higher level than commercial stations and networks are, by and large, willing or able to provide.

It cannot, as we see it, nor should it, compete with the Jackie Gleason show as a medium of pure amusement. It cannot—and we say this with due deference to one of the station's sincerest protagonists—it cannot be a Kollege of Musical Knowledge and justify its existence.

Long before educational television was dreamed of, men conceived the University of North Carolina as a great center which would affect the cultural course of the state and the whole South. The Extension Division, the Institute of Government, the great sweep of foundations and divisions, grew up around that conception.

WUNC-TV is properly the latest, and greatest, of those extension agencies.

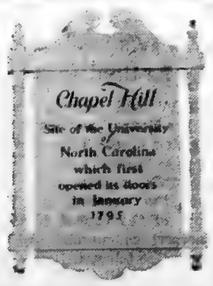
If it forgets that, it will be a disgraceful and monumental flop.

Let it hold to the idea of a University dispensing truth and beauty and it can be the revolutionary device which will take all the intellectual resources that have been painstakingly formed and assembled in Chapel Hill and make them available to every North Carolinian.

Policeman, Spare That Collie!

This is one for George, who's in trouble with the cops. They've got him down on the Humane Society's death row with no bail, no lawyer and no trial in prospect. In ten days, unless somebody outside of town adopts him, George takes the last walk.

The charge against him—nipping at people's heels. Some of us aren's so sure he's guilty. The Humane Society's humane and diminutive treasurer, Mrs. A. M. Jordan, has been scurrying about trying to hang the count on some of the other collies in Chapel Hill, and with some success. It could have been the one with the white spot on his back or the one with the hooked nose. Students (and we might add, cops) have a hard time telling the dogs apart. They call 'em all "George."



But the real George, as always, catches collective hell for the misdeeds of the multitude. It was the real George who caught a face full of birdshot last year; it's the real George they've got penned up, with chloroform in his future.

Kill George? He who has marched in Every Beat Dook parade for four years? He who has appeared on the stage of the Forest Theatre and Memorial Hall, who has attended class, caught breakfast in the Y Court, become a patron of the arts (at Person Hall) and letters (the Intimate Bookshop)? Kill the unassuming, courteous collie who was recognized only two years ago by President Gray from the Kenan commencement platform along with the other notables of that occasion?

You may as well tear down the Old Well or root up the Davie Poplar. We have faith that Mrs. Jordan and the spirits that protect the cherished monuments and institutions of man will not let it happen.

The Land Of Dark Screens And Darkness

Louis Kraar

ONCE MORE I journeyed into the darkened living room with voluminous videos.

It was over the holidays that I sat and watched television. And I'll probably have to wait for another holiday to find time for figuring out what draws and holds people to the glowing screens.

Some of the programs shown on TV are notable, but they are exceptions to the tripe that parades across the 16-inch kaleidoscope daily.

Programs like "See It Now," "Toast of the Towns" and "Omnibus" are of the notable variety. They are consistently interesting and clearly illustrate what TV can do.

But the gang of crime stories, panel shows, and second-rate stuff that imposes on listeners each day is disgusting.

PERHAPS I don't understand television, I kept telling myself, remembering that etiquette in this day forbids conversation at any time other than during commercials.

So in quest of further knowledge about this medium of apparent mediocrity, I read an article by a TV man called "Television Faces Life."

"Americans spend more time looking at television than they spend doing anything else, except eating and sleeping," the Esquire magazine article declared.

The Esquire piece added that this is not the "whole answer" because "if it were, Lili St. Cyr could replace Katharine Cornell." What this had to do with TV, I wasn't sure. But obviously the article was pointing out that simply because something has a wide audience, this doesn't mean it's good.

Then the article talked about the great strain of mass production of television and the fact that some shows were very "intellectual."

But the paragraph that held me, perhaps like a TV fan on Saturday night, was the one:

"The TV target is the man who doesn't read widely or, if he does, never reads the editorial page; the man who doesn't discuss or, if he does, confines his contention to the Dodgers or Notre Dame . . ."

This seems to be the crux of the whole problem. The television shows are aimed at the lowest common denominator. Certainly no television network could exist on mere "intellectual" programs, but a raising of the level might help—even the "TV target."

BEFORE LONG the University will be in the television business, but it will also still be in the education business. I'm talking about WUNC-TV, the Consolidated University's educational television station.

Perhaps this venture into high frequency teaching will bring to the air shows on a higher level than the typical tripe of commercial stations. If it can present educational shows that are interesting — and interesting shows that are still educational —the University's station will supply the upper level needed by TV.

Other University stations have set a high mark in the medium. Dr. Frank Baxter of the University of Southern California has brought Shakespeare to a television audience, and he has made the bard live.

I have watched Dr. Baxter's show, and it's like inviting a urbane visitor into your home for a pleasant chat. There's nothing pedantic or obscure about the way this man brings books alive. And he even tells an occasional joke.

The University has lecturers as skilled as Dr. Baxter, so I'll be waiting for educational television—and hoping.

A New Hydra Or A Great Ambassador?

Ed Yoder

Those who think that the art of vituperation has been lost would have been heartened at the scathing speech I heard the other day on the dangers of television.

The sepaker was watching the rhythmic flashing of the red lights from WUNC-TV's new tower. In one hand he held a dog-eared copy of The Golden Bough. With the other he swept a damning fist upwards and shook it toward the dark framework that rose above his head.

"Television!" he sneered. "It's like a new American Hydra with a nose that spurts the flame in which all the literacy of the world will be burnt to ashes. And at every stroke of the sword on its body, a fiercer and bigger offspring appears beside it."

There is a measure of truth in all bad things that can be said of television. The great lot of it. reaching a peak in the boring vocal marathons of Arthur Godfrey, is not worth watching. There is a measure of truth, too, in the belief that it will destroy literacy and the art of conversation. The heartening counterbalance to that belief, however, is that mass communication media, from Marconi's wireless to the silent movies of the "Perils of Pauline" stripe, were condemned in their time as the same messengers of destruction.

Aldous Huxley probably has many of the same dim potentialities in mind when he describes the society of Brave New World. There, where truth and beauty have been junked as dangerous beasts, the closest thing to literate entertainment is—not television, not the movies—but "feelies," an extension of moving pictures enabling the viewer to participate in all the sensations pictured on the screen. No one in Brave New World, except "Our Ford," the director, and "The Savage," a Rip Van Winkle from Twentieth Century morals and mores, has ever read Shakespeare.

It is, of course, well to be aware of the dangers of television—an element on the way to replacing Lenin's religion and Hemingway's bread as "the opiate of the people." But that fear is always tempered by the idea that the tension between television and a dying art of conversation or literacy will, in time be resolved. The spring will snap and moral equilibrium will return.

The effect feared by extreme critics of television is the production of a sterotyped, illiterate, stupid crew of H. L. Mencken "boobs." Boobs, interestingly enough, were not thought by Mencken to be the potential offspring of mass entertainment. Not silent movies, not the neglect of books but the democratic form of government, to Mencken's strangely twisted mind, was the culprit that helped to breed the boob—a fantastic dunce of whom Mencken wrote:

"What he knows of histology, or protozoology or philosophy or paleontology is precisely nothing . . . . Even those applied sciences which enter intimately into his everyday existence remain outside his comprehension and interest. . . . He knows no more about chemistry than a cow and no more about biology than its calf . . . He is more ignorant of elementary anatomy and physiology than the Egyptian quacks of 4000 B. C. . . . Greek, to him, is only a jargon spoken by bootblacks, and Wagner is a retired baseball player. He has never heard of Euripides, of Hippocrates, of Aristotle or Plato. . . . He doesn't know what a Doric column is, or an etching, or a fugue."

. . . a producer of boons or boobs?

The point is easy enough to see. The Hydra of television whose nostril flames threaten to burn the literacy of the world to ashes is, as well, an animal that can produce the boob with ease. Right now, in fact, it is converting thousands of unfortunate victims of the pre-equilibrium era of television into boobs.

All of the foregoing more or less describes the Chapel Hill academic climate, the bed of nails, in which WUNC-TV must now try to rest. Even the adjective, "educational," does not soften the language with which the new television station is denounced. The outstanding characteristic, in fact, of an educational television station is that it will not, in the truest sense, educate. A more elevated form of television it can produce—introducing good music, Euripides, Wagner, Plato, and even histology into the family circle. But a substitute for books, classes, and stimulating people it can never be.

Given all that, however, there is a very definite and valuable function which the new educational television may fill—especially for the Chapel Hill branch of the University. The University of Chapel Hill has been, and must continue to be, a big brother to the other two branches of the Consolidated University. Here, a much older tradition, a freer, more unconventional and healthier academic climate has existed and must continue to exist.

The University of Chapel Hill, lacking the cities of Raleigh and Greensboro to form a medium and a buffer zone between it and the people of the state, as a result has been more or less set apart from the general thought and action of the state.

A television station which will begin to introduce the faces, the thought, and the characteristics of the true University to the cross-section of citizens in North Carolina can play an important role. It can become an ambassador, an intermediary, between the large University and the people of the state who support it and without whose good will it can't get along.

That great advantage will perhaps transcend and eclipse the drawbacks of television as a general threat to literacy, as an educational instrument that can never be truly educational. By that virtue, it may become a producer of boons and not boobs.

LAST YEAR'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

. . . what will be the political 'state of the union' on Nov. 6, 1956?

Eisenhower Failures To Get Full Treatment

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON—The Democrats opened an intensive campaign to regain the White House at precisely twelve noon yesterday when Vice-President Nixon banged his new ivory gavel, the gift of India, to call the 84th Congress to order.

Until the polls close on November 6, 1956, Democratic strategy will be directed toward separating in the public mind President Eisenhower, the popular military leader, from President Eisenhower, the civil and political leader.

The former they will let alone. They hope through remorseless analysis as issues and occasions arise to show that the limitations of the latter diqualify him for a second term.

Their strategy implies that they expect him to run again. That is just what they expect; from what they have seen they think he cannot say no to a draft.

For very sincerely Democrats believe that the President is the major and almost indeed the only political asset of the Republican party. If they were Republicans they would arrange a forced draft themselves.

For the same reason they believe their strategy is purely a matter of survival.

They see no way to avoid a certain build-up of the President by enacting most of his legislation, since they would offer it if he didn't. They feel compelled to shift their ground to the proposition that no program is any better than the people who administer it.

There are very few important dissents in the party from the new strategy, only arguments about how it should be executed. Southern conservatives are among those who feel most deeply that the President has been put to work for which he is not suited. The Rayburn opinions which were accidentally made public at New Orleans are a fair statement of the general view.

Only time will show whether such strategy can be executed according to plan and whether the public will oblige by making the requested distinction. Nothing like it has been tried lately.

For 20 years most Republicans attacked both the two Democratic Presidents and their works with fine impartiality, reserving their greatest scorn for the "me-tooers" in their party. Their system worked badly until the erosion of time and the errors of the Democrats invoked the Eisenhower landslide.

Democrats will do what they can in this Congress to capitalize on farm discontent, Republican factional differences, the "giveaways" of natural resources and apprehension about cuts in defense. Any failures in the Administration, as the Ladejinsky case, will get the full treatment.

They still think their problem boils down to Eisenhower, the Chief Executive. They have no illusions about their task. They think he has had a very long honeymoon with his good qualities magnified and advertised, his shortcomings widely excused.

Their argument is that the presidency is not a popularity contest. If it were they think Eisenhower well might win it no matter what the opposition proved. They insist that the people can and will accept what they call a calm, honest and realistic presentation of the Eisenhower philosophy and character.

"And if the people won't," said one veteran politician, "we've already lost in 1956."

The Year Of The Global 'Great Debate'

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—The American and Soviet governments appear to have one thing, at least, in common. Both governments are internally divided about the direction their foreign policy should take, now that the basic decision to rearm Western Germany has at long last been made.

The evident suggestion that the Soviet government is divided on this question is, as always, fragmentary and inconclusive. But it is a good deal less so than usual.

When Ambassador Charles E. Bohlen returned to Moscow recently, he reported back that the sense of tension had measurably increased there in the few days since he had left. The British Ambassador, Sir William Hayter, who also returned to Moscow at about the same time, reported back to London precisely the same thing.

One obvious reason for this tension in Moscow was, of couse, the French voting on the German rearmament issue. But another reason also appeared, when long editorials about the future of the Soviet policy were published just before Christmas in Pravda and Izcestia.

Izvestia is the organ of the Soviet government and is thus accounted the mouthpiece of Premier Georgi Malenkov. Pravda is the organ of the Soviet Communist party, and is thus accounted the mouthpiece of N. S. Krushchev, Secretary of the Party. The two papers took almost diametrically opposite lines.

Izvestia called for a continuation of essentially the present policy — increased emphasis on production of consumer goods, and a "co-existence" policy abroad, and a return to all-out priority for heavy industrial production, which means arms production.

The next day, Pravda published another long editorial, and this time Pravda fell in line with Izvestia, By knowledgeable Russians as well as foreign observers, this episode was universally taken to mean that there had been a basic disagreement on policy as between Malenkov and Krushchev, and that this disagreement had been settled in Malenkov's favor.

The episode was further taken to mean that the Russian rulers wished to make known the existence of the disagreement. The purpose was, presumably, partly to remind the West that the Soviets could adopt a tougher line if they wanted to. But another purpose certainly was to give Krushchev, as it were, his day in court, and to remind the Russian people that no one had inherited all the powers of the dead Stalin.

It is quite genuinely true, in the view of Bohlen and all other foreign observers, that there is still no single absolute dictator in post-Stalin Russia. Moreover, the extent to which the Soviet rulers — though notably not the ruled — feel free to disagree with each other is remarkable.

There is a good deal to suggest, in short, that a "great debate" of sorts is in progress within the Soviet government. No one, of course, believes that the essential objectives of the Soviet regime have changed. But it is natural that the Soviet rulers should debate whether the "soft" policy which achieved a triumph in Asia and almost achieved a greater triumph in Europe, has not about played itself out, now that the French have at last agreed to the rearmament of West Germany.

Malenkov's recent equivocal remarks about the desirablility of a four-power "meeting at the summit" further suggests that the issue has not yet been fully decided. The Soviet rulers, apparently, simply have not made up their minds whether such a meeting would serve Soviet purposes, since it is now seemingly impossible further to delay German rearmament.

A great debate is also, of course, in progress within the American government. This debate also concerns whether it is worth trying to negotiate with the Soviets, now that the German rearmament issue is presumably settled; and if so whether this is the time to try it. On one side are those who believe that the Soviets at least share the West's interests in avoiding mutual incineration; and that it is worth trying to agree on a set of ground rules to this end. At least to some extent, President Eisenhower inclines to this view — as does British Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill.

On the other side are those who have strong doubts about the value of any negotiation with the Russians except on the most limited and specific issues. Secretary of State Dulles entertains these doubts — and British Foreign Secretary Eden shares them. Thus a kind of global great debate is going on, in Washington, in Moscow, in London. No doubt it will be settled one way or another before this year ends.

In The Carolina Israelite

When I think of Norman Thomas, the Socialist leader of the United States, I have to smile. If you had told some the early Socialists that one day a Socialist leader would receive birthday telegrams from The Reader's Digest and from Herbert Hoover, they would have locked you up in a padded cell. But that's the way of the world. . . Mr. Thomas always jokes about it, but it is one hundred percent truth—that Franklin D. Roosevelt smashed the Socialist Party in America by taking over its program. . . The heresy of today is the rock-ribbed conservatism of tomorrow.

Five events, three in Woollen Gym, are on tap for this Friday and Saturday as Carolina's winter sports teams settle down to serious work after the two-week Christmas holidays lay-off.

The UNC swim team, under Coach Ralph Casey, takes on its third varsity opponent Friday afternoon here as they play host to the South Carolina fish in an inter-conference meet. On Saturday afternoon the Tar Heels invade the University of Virginia. Coach Casey's club captured both of its pre-Christmas meets, defeating Bainbridge Naval Training Station, 45-39, and Duke, 61-23.

The frosh swimmers will also be seeking their third consecutive triumph Saturday afternoon when they travel to Greensboro high school. The freshmen racked up two wins over High Point high school in their first two meets of the season.

Sam Barnes' winless Tar Heel wrestlers go after their first victory Saturday afternoon as they play host to Washington and Lee in Woollen Gym. In a preliminary match, the UNC frosh tangle with the W&L frosh at two o'clock. The varsity battle will get underway at four o'clock. Davidson and Duke scored wins over the Tar Heels in their only two matches to date.

The gymnastics team, 51-43 victors over the Jersey City Recreation Department team December 18th, will not resume action until January 15 when it invades Annapolis for a meet with Navy.

Saturday night will find the Big Four basketball teams doing bitter battle strictly among themselves. While Carolina takes on Wake Forest here, Duke will be playing host to State in Durham. The game here will afford fans an opportunity to witness the Big Four's two top scoring aces, Dickie Hemric and Lennie Rosenbluth, in action against each other.

DEPT. OF MISCELLANY: Vic Seixas, who recently playing a leading role in returning the Davis Cup to America, not only got a start in big time tennis while at the University of North Carolina, but also played varsity basketball during his years here.

Lennie Rosenbluth, Carolina's sophomore basketball sensation, has been transplanted from Yankeeland. His is now making his home in Greenville, Tenn. His family moved there from New York City recently.

UNC basketball coach Frank McGuire rates guard Tony Radovich as one of the most improved players on his team this season. Radovich, who saw most of his duty in a sub role last year, is averaging 10 points a game this year as a regular starter.

Orioles Apply Science To Game Attendance

BALTIMORE, Jan. 5. (AP)—The Baltimore Orioles, apparently the first major league baseball team ever to apply this "scientific sample" business to its fans, found out today most of them are "white collar" workers.

And only 65 per cent invariably rooted for the Orioles.

Dick Armstrong, public relations director for the club, said some policy changes are in the works as the result of his findings.

He was surprised when tabulations indicated 26.1 per cent of the 1,060,910 fans who paid to see the Birds play here last year came from beyond Baltimore and environs.

"The experts always said Baltimore would never support major league baseball because it couldn't draw enough fans from outside the city," Armstrong pointed out.

Rosie, Hemric To Battle Here Saturday Night

There should be plenty of scoring here Saturday night when the basketball teams of North Carolina and Wake Forest clash in Woollen Gym, for the tilt will bring together two of the highest scorers in the Atlantic Coast Conference—Wake Forest's Dickie Hemric and Carolina's Lennie Rosenbluth.

The two have been among the conference's scoring leaders since the opening whistle and both should enter Saturday night's tilt with hefty 29-point-plus averages. Both cagers were chosen to the All-Tourney team at the annual Dixie Classic during the Christmas holidays.

Rosenbluth, a 6-5 sophomore, has also developed into one of North Carolina's top rebounders and is currently holding the university's record for rebounds in one game with 25 against South Carolina.

Hemric, a 6-6 senior from Jonesville, N. C., hit for 49 points against Virginia for his biggest effort thus far this season, while a 39-point night against William and Mary has been Rosenbluth's biggest single entry in the scoring column.

North Carolina Coach Frank will be bringing his charges home after a two - game invasion of the Deep South for tilts with Louisiana State University and Alabama on Monday and Tuesday, respectively.

Saturday night's action will be the first for the Deacs since capturing fifth place in the Dixie Classic. Wake Forest, in taking seven of 11 games, has bumped off two of three Atlantic Coast Conference rivals, including Maryland, which holds a 10-point win over North Carolina on the Tar Heel court. The Deacs' other ACC win came over Virginia, 100-90, and the loss was against N. C. State, 100-81.

In addition to Maryland, N. C. State is the only other common foe of the two teams. The Tar Heels fell to the nationally-ranked Wolfpack in the Classic, 47-44.

Against conference competition, North Carolina has come up with three of five decisions, with the wins coming over Clemson, South Carolina and Duke, and the losses to N. C. State and Maryland. The victory over the Blue Devils of Duke enabled North Carolina to take third place in the Classic, a surprise finish for the Tar Heel who entered the tourney with a record of only two woins and two losses.

Tar Heel Frosh Meet Virginia

The University of North Carolina freshman basketball team, fresh from a two-week holiday respite, jump back into action tonight against the University of Virginia frosh at South Boston, Va.

Coach Buck Freeman's formidable five will be gunning for their eighth straight win tonight, having breezed through a seven-game, pre-Christmas slate unscathed. Their last outing was a 99-68 triumph over Charlotte Central high school in a preliminary to the varsity's December 18th loss to Maryland here. Stocky Guard Tommy Kearns continued his high-scoring rampage in that tilt, pouring in 32 points.

By virtue of their impressive record to date the Tar Babies are favored tonight, notwithstanding the fact that the Virginia yearlings are rated very highly. The junior Cavaliers are led by a couple of homegrown products, Wistar Nelligan, 6'3" forward, and Kendall White, 6' guard. Both boys made Virginia All-State selections last year in sparking Lynchburgh high school to the state tournament finals.

Carolina's starting five is expected to be: Kearns and Bob Cunningham at guards, Joe Quigg at center, and Pete Brennan and Roy Searcy at forwards.

Quigg has six games of eligibility remaining as a freshman. The 6'7" New Yorker will be ineligible after this semester, having entered school February, 1954, and spreading his freshman playing over two school years (the final semester of last year and the first semester of this year). He will retire after this month until the 1955-56 season when he will begin his three full years of varsity eligibility.

Indoor Track Squad Begins Ernest Work

By RAY LINKER

Members of Carolina's freshman indoor track squad begin serious workouts this week in preparation for their opening meet here on January 15 with N. C. State.

Although 42 showed for the informal practices held prior to the holidays, Coach Dale Ranson still feels that there are qualfied to hold down positions on the team, and he urges those interested to drop by and see him any afternoon in the Tin Can, where the team is working out daily. Ranson stated that he and assistant Coach Joe Hilton can use as many as want to come out and work.

During the informal work before the Christmas vacation, several boys demonstrated considerable skill and ability. However, all positions are wide open, and Ranson went so far as to say that he probably had not seen some boys who will prove themselves to be some of his best this season. He is depending on more boys coming out for the team.

After a few workouts, Ranson believes his freshman particularily need men in the sprints, the various jumps, the 440-dash, and the mile relay.

There are several boys from the Tar Babies cross country team that lost only to State who have moved inside to contend for top distance positions on the boards.

The State meet on January 15 will be the first of two meeting between the Wolflets and the Tar Babies. Two runs are also planned with Duke and possibly with Wake Forest. Other teams interested in scheduling meets with the Carolinians are invited to contact Ranson.

The grand finale of the indoor season will be the Indoor Games on February 26 in Woollen Gymnasium. Last year's squad captured first place among 11 teams entered in the freshman division.

"Grass Roots" Poll Is Suggested

NEW YORK, Jan. 5 (AP)—The outgoing television committee reported to the NCAA today, repeating its suggestion that a "grass roots" poll of the colleges be taken before a new program is set up.

Harvey Cassill of the University of Washington, chairman of the outgoing committee, explained that it was the group's basic idea not to tie the hands of the incoming committee. Cassill's committee has made broad recommendations for continued controls pending a general discussion to be held tomorrow.

A new report from the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago showed the 2½ per cent increase in football attendance among the colleges in '54 was due "almost entirely" to a six per cent gain in student enrollment.

Caldwell Talks Over Ottawa Coaching Spot

OTTAWA, Jan. 5 (AP)—Charles Andrew Chan Caldwell, line coach at the University of Tennessee, talked over the Ottawa Rough Riders, vacant coaching job with officials of the Big Four football team last night.

He was the fifth to turn up here in search of the spot Clem Crowe vacated at the end of last season.

He probably won't know about the job for a few days, however. A Rough Rider official said earlier the choice of a coach likely won't be made until after a meeting of the Big Four Jan. 15.

Pro Gridders, College Stars Meet Sunday

HONOLULU, Jan. 5 (AP)—If you've wondered how the latest crop of college stars such as Primo Villaneueva, a key join on UCLA's undefeated 1954 gridiron machine, can stack up against the likes of such pros as Otto Graham of the Cleveland Browns, you will get the answer Sunday.

Graham, who passed and plunged the Browns to the 1954 National Football League title against the Detroit Lions, will quarterback the Hawaii All-Stars in the ninth annual Hula Bowl game against college performers from the Rose Bowl, Cotton Bowl and the East-West classic.

He'll be passing to Elroy Crazylegs Hirsch, the Los Angeles Rams end who, like Graham, has announced retirement from the pro ranks. Another target will be Gordy Soltau, pass-catching demon from the San Francisco 49ers.

For points after, and for field goals—steady stuff in the pro game but a bit neglected by colleges—there will be the Browns' Lou The Toe Groza. Detroit's Charley Ane will be in the line, playing alongside talent from the military in the territory and stars of Hawaiian town teams.

On the collegiate side will be Ohio State halfback Bobby Watkins who scored the second of the Buckeyes' three touchdowns in the 20-7 Rose Bowl win over Southern California, and the Trojans' Aramis Dandoy, who scampered 86 yards for the Trojan score.

In the line will be California center Matt Hazeltine, who raced 44 yards with an intercepted pass for one of the two West scores of San Francisco's East-West game, won by the East 13-12.

Alternating with Hazeltone at center will be Larry Morris of Georgia Tech, 14-6 winner over Arkanses in the Cotton Bowl.

With them in the line will be Jim Salisbury and Jack Ellena of UCLA, Jack Peters of Oregon, Art Walker of Michigan and Buck Lansford of Texas.

Paul Larson of California, the 1954 collegiate champion passer who was contained to the point of embarrassment in the East-West game, will have a chance to show whether he is a pro prospect in the field Graham is leaving.

For his targets he will have his California teammate Jim Hanifan, and ends Dick Brubaker of Ohio State and Johnny Kerr of Purdue.

Carroll Hardy of Colorado, who boomed two punts of more than 50 yards for the West in the Shrine game and showed in the fourth quarter the best running punch of and West man on the field is expected to see more duty in the Hula Bowl.

Dick Moegle of Rice and George Broeder of Iowa will be other backs in action.

The college stars flew over immediately after their Jan. 1 efforts in the States and began practice sessions Monday.

THE OPERATOR

On every American campus there are four standard fixtures: No. 1—ivy; No. 2—a statue of the founder; No. 3—Philip Morris Cigarettes; No. 4—The Operator.

The ivy is to prevent strangers from mistaking the college for a warehouse. The statue of the founder provides shade for necking when the weather is fine. The Philip Morris Cigarettes are an aid to concentration when you are studious, an aid to sociability when you are sportive, and a source of smoke rings to impress new girls . . . And The Operator is the man you can't do without.

Well do I remember The Operator on my campus. He was a young man with a ready smile, a quick mind, fifteen complete changes of wardrobe, a six room apartment, a red convertible, and assorted stocks, bonds, securities, and second mortgages.

The Operator's origins were a source of lively speculation. Some said he was left over from the old Capone gang. Some said he was Judge Crater. Some said he sprang from the brow of Zeus.

But, in fact, he was just an ordinary student—to begin with. In his first year he studied hard, took copious lecture notes, got good grades, and made a big reputation as a friend in need. He'd lend you money; he'd let you copy his lecture notes; he'd write themes for you; he'd sit up all night to help you cram for an exam. All of this was done with infinite good nature on his part, and no obligation on yours . . . The first year, that is.

In the second year The Operator started to operate. He'd still let you copy his lecture notes—but it cost you a quarter. Sitting up to help you cram cost 50 cents an hour till midnight, 75 cents an hour afterwards. His prices for writing themes were based on a sliding scale—a dollar for a "C", two for a "B", three for an "A". A "D" cost you nothing, and if you flunked, you got a dollar credit on the next theme he wrote for you.

His services expanded steadily. He added a line of cribs for examinations. He booked bets on football games. He did a bit of bootlegging. He ran a date bureau. He rented cars, tuxedos, non-wilting boutonnieres.

But all of these were really sidelines. His main line was lending money. At any hour of the day or night, for any amount from a dollar to a hundred, The Operator was always ready with a sympathetic ear and cash on the barrelhead. And he rarely charged more than 150 percent interest.

Usury and sharp trading are practices not calculated to win affection. Nobody loved The Operator. But nobody did anything about it either . . . Because undergraduates live in a perpetual state of need—need of money, need of lecture notes, need of romance, need of beer, need of something—and The Operator was the goose that laid the golden eggs and, therefore, safe.

Nor did The Operator seek affection. He just went his well-heeled way, serene and carefree . . . No, not quite carefree. One thing troubled him: a fear that some day he might graduate. Graduation, leaving school, would mean the end of his empire. You can't run a business like that from the outside; you must be right in the midst of things, spotting opportunities, anticipating needs, keeping your finger on the public pulse.

So he took great pains to stay in school, but never to graduate. This he accomplished by constantly shifting majors. He would come within a semester of getting a B.A. in sociology and then transfer to law. When he had nearly enough law credits, he'd switch to business administration. Then from business administration to psychology, from psychology to French, from French to history, and so on, meanwhile getting cultured as all get-out, rich as Croesus, and never accumulating quite enough credits for a degree.

Finally, of course, it caught up with him. There came a semester when no matter what he took, he had to wind up with some kind of a degree. He looked frantically through the class schedule trying to find some major he hadn't tried yet. And he found one—physical education. So, sleek and pudgy though he was from high living, The Operator entered the department of physical ed.

It was a mistake. Among the people he had to wrestle and box with were some great hulking fellows who, like everybody else on campus, owed him money.

Their tiny foreheads creased with glee as they regarded The Operator's trembling little body; their massive biceps swelled joyously; their flexors rippled with delight. Rumbling happily, they fell upon him and covered him with lumps, the smallest of which would have taken first prize in any lump contest you might name.

Confused and sick at heart, The Operator dragged his hattered members home. He knew he had to get out of physical ed; his life was forfeit if he did not. So, unhappily, he transferred to some other course, and the following June, a beaten man in his cap and gown, received with lifeless hands a diploma and a bachelor of arts degree and shambled out into the great world.

I don't know what happened to The Operator after graduation. It's not a bad guess that he's serving time in some pokey somewhere. Or maybe he was lucky and went into the advertising business. If so, he is surely a big man on Madison Avenue today.

But, as I say, I don't know what happened to him. But this I do know: another Operator appeared on campus as soon as this one left, and he in turn was replaced by another, and the process goes on endlessly.

For as long as boy students like girl students better than going to class, as long as parents cling to the delusion that the allowance they had at college is sufficient for their children, as long as blood runs warm and cash runs short, there will be an Operator operating on every campus everywhere.

Scenes From UNC's TV Studios

Frank Jeter, editor of the Agricultural Extension publications at N. C. State College, will be a regular performer on WUNC-TV, channel 4, after the station opens Saturday. Jeter, focal point above, will head the station's agricultural program, "Today on the Farm," which will be presented every weekday at 5:30 p. m. from the State College studio. Jeter will present up-to-date farm news on his program as well as features on new farming methods.

This pcture gives a pretty good idea of the enormous amount of equipment required for telecasting. Here the Woman's College studio WUNC-TV staff members televise Peggy Britt as she conducts her home economics program over channel 4. Miss Britt will alternate with Dorothy Mulder of State College in presenting the home ec show every weekday afternoon at 3:30. Also scheduled are programs for children of all ages. "Schoolhouse" will be for children of pre-school age while "The Younger Set" will be for children from eight to 14 years of age.

University Awaits Commission Report

tory for men including dining room and kitchen, $1,000,000, and an addition to the physics building, $760,000.

The Advisory Budget Commission makes its recommendations today to the Legislature in a book called The Budget. The book lists expenditures for the last biennium, requests for the new biennium and the Commission's recommendations as to how much of the requested appropriations should be made.

The resolution which was adopted by the student Legislature said: "Whereas: The present tuition and fees at the University of North Carolina are already as high as many students can pay;

"Whereas: It has come to the attention of the students that an effort will be made to increase tuition and other fees at the next meeting of the General Assembly;

"Now, therefore be it resolved by the student Legislature of the University of North Carolina that,

"Article I. The student Legislature go on record opposing any increase in the tuition and other fees at the University of North Carolina.

"Article II. That a copy of this resolution together with a copy of a letter adopted by the student Legislature be forwarded to each Senator and Representative of the North Carolina Legislature."

The resolution was introduced to the student Legislature by Charles F. Hyatt.

Following is the letter which was sent to each member of the state Legislature:

"It has come to the attention of the students here at the Universiy that some effort will be made at the coming session of the Legislature to increase tuition and other fees. Already these fees are as high as a great many of our students can pay.

"The student Legislature, representative of a student body of 6,0117 students, has gone on record against any increase of these fees to students. We, therefore, hope that you as one of the legislators will find it possible to agree with us and oppose such legislation should it be introduced."

HEART HITS THREE

North Carolina's three top public officials — Governor Umstead and Senators Hoey and Smith—have all died during the past year from heart diseases, the N. C Heart Association office here points out. Almost 50 per cent of the deaths in this state were caused by heart and blood vessel diseases during 1953, according to figures released by the State Board of Health. On a nation-wide basis the same situation holds true. Heart conditions cause more than half of all deaths in the United States, according to the latest available figures from the National Office of Vital Statistics

Advisory Budget Commission Recommends That Carolina Dorm Rates Be Increased; No Hike In Tuition Indicated

Let Boards Decide On Students —Hodges

RALEIGH, Jan. 6 (AP)—Gov. Hodges today recommended that local school boards be given "complete authority" over enrollment and assignment of pupils as a step to meet the U. S. Supreme Court decision banning school segregation.

The Governor urged the General Assembly to follow the report of a special advisory committee which also proposed creation of a commission to give "continuous study to the segregation problem.

Hodges said the report of the committee, appointed by the late Gov. William B. Umstead and composed of white and negro citizens, "gives to this general assembly and to all of North Carolina a starting point from which the state may go forward towards a solution of this problem."

Hodges called the report "a unanimous document of great significance" and quoted its conclusions and recommendations in his message prepared for delivery to a joint House and Senate session.

The report stated its opinion that "the mixing of the races forthwith in the public schools throughout the state cannot be accomplished and should not be attempted." Compulsory integration on the basis of race alone "would alienate public support of the schools to such an extent that they could not be operated successfully," it declared.

If Proposed Budget Passes, Average Rent Will Be $130

By JACKIE GOODMAN

There were "no apparent recommended tuition increases as far as receipts are concerned" for UNC in the Advisory Budget Commission's report which wa a made yesterday to the 1955 state Legislature, according to C. E. Teague, business manager of the University.

Teague said that any tuition increase will apparently be based on an enlarged enrollment rather than an increase in enrollment fees.

There will be an increase in room rents for both men's and women's dormitories if the report is made into law, according to Teague. He said that the recommended budget for the next biennium calls for an increase of $70,000 in the receipts from the men's dorms, an increase of $13,500 in those from the women's dorms and an increase of $4,000 in receipts from Spencer Hall dining room.

If the budget is adopted by the Legislature, these increased receipts would mean that average room rents here would be upped to $130 per year.

The University received no part of the $4,098,500 which it requested for permanent improvements last September, said Teague.

Appropriations requests made by the University were $1,603,500 to build a new pharmacy building and remodel Howell Hall for occupancy by the School of Journalism, $735,000 for an addition to and the remodeling of Peabody Hall, $1,000,000 for a men's dormitory and $760,000 for an addition to the physics building.

The University did receive recommended appropriations for an "additions and betterments" program, said Teague. These appropriations include $15,000 for physics department equipment, $8,000 for replacement of a console organ in Hill Hall, $20,000 for improvements to Woollen Gymnasium, $15,000 for a filter system in the outdoor pool and $3,000 for motor vehicle replacements.

The report made no recommendations provisions for new positions in the faculty or staff of the University according to Teague.

A total of $434,800 will be appropriated for support of WUNC-TV if the recommended budget is adopted.

The television station here was recommended for an appropriation of $79,550 for the first year of the biennium by the Commission's report and the same amount for the second year. The same amounts were recommended for the station at State College in Raleigh, while Woman's College received a recommended appropriation of $58,300 for each year for television.

The report recommended an appropriation of $39,112 for State College's School of Design to assist state industries design their products and packages. A recommended appropriation of $62,500 was also included in the report for industrial research program at State College.

Proposed Budget Calls For 2 Cent Cig Tax

RALEIGH, Jan. 6 (AP)—The General Assembly received a budget today calling for state expenditures of $637,075,544 during the next two fiscal years plus tax increases amounting to $52,063,004.

The budget compares with $608,492,752 appropriated by the 1953 Legislature to operate state agencies during the present biennium.

Prepared by Gov Hodges and the Advisory Budget Commission, the budget proposes that $26,031,502 a year be obtained by the following changes in the state's tax structure.

A 2-cent tax on a pack of cigarettes plus a cent tax on cigars and cent tax on each 10 cents worth of smoking tobacco which would yield the state $8,945,000 per year; three fourths cent tax on soft drinks, yielding $7,125,000; elimination of the $15 per item sales tax ceiling yielding $77,250,000; and upping from 1 to 2 one half percent the tax insurance companies pay on their premium sales to yield $1,170,000.

The budget also calls for boosting liquor taxes from 8 one half to 10 percent, or about six cents on a fifth, to bring in $900,000.

The commission said the only alternatives to increasing taxes would be:

1. A pay cut for the state's 30,000 teachers and other state employes;
2. A big increase in the school teacher load;;
3. Drastic increases in fees and charges at state institutions;
4. Greater local support of the schools, or
5. Discontinuing services or drastically reducing them.

The proposed budget contemplates spending more than 843 million dollars in the next two years. This includes the state appropriations plus more than 139 million in federal funds and nearly 67 million which state agencies and institutions will receive in fees and charges.

For the first time since 1947 the budget does not ask for appropriations for building by state institutions and agencies. The Budget Commission had received requests from the state agencies for $35,644,089 in new construction.

The budget proposes General Fund appropriations of $425,325,663 compared with $398,607,463 spent this biennium. For the Highway Fund, it calls for spending $209,561,381 compared with $200,177,526. And for the Agriculture Fund, it calls for spending $2,188,200 during the biennium compared with $2,108,900.

Of the total increase in General Fund spending, $20,184,396 would go for education, including 19 million for the public schools; another $1,489,416 would go for public welfare and health programs, $2,241,391 would go for mental institutions, mainly for staffing purposes. Appropriations of governmental administrative agencies would be increased by $705,917 and the amount set aside for debt service would be increased by $1,625,935.

The commission recommended no appropriation to continue the hospital building program of the Medical Care Commission. This program could be continued, it said, with federal and local funds plus $1,701,519 in state funds already appropriated but not yet used by the commission.

If the proposed tax increases are approved, General Fund revenues for the biennium will total $442,912,132, the commission estimated. A balance of $2,654,472 is expected to be on hand at the end of the current fiscal year to help balance the budget for the next biennium. The commission estimated the balance at the end of the next biennium would be only $240,941.

The commission proposed that more than 19 million of the increase in General Fund spending go to public schools to maintain present teacher loads and pay scales. During the first year of the biennium, this would provide for about 1,058 new teachers and 1,041 the second year to take care of the expected enrollment gain of 31,000 each year.

Under the proposed Highway Fund budget, 25 state highway patrolmen would be added the first year and 25 more the second year of the biennium.

COMMUNITY DRAMA GROUP

The Community Drama Group will meet on Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in the assembly room of the University Library. Pat Liston will direct the reading of "Spreading the News," a one-act play by Lady Gregory. After the play reading there will be an open discussion meeting to make plans for the coming year. Everyone is welcome to participate.

Seasonal Sign: Those College Outlines Going Like Hotcakes

Get out those outlines: exams are almost here.

If the sale of college outlines is any indication of the coming of exams it would appear that finals are fast approaching, for there seems to be a rush on at the local bookstores for the study aids.

H. R. Ritchie, manager of the UNC Book Exchange, said that sales at the Steele basement emporium are up 100 percent since classes resumed after the holidays.

'Star' Ends Monday

The Morehead Planetarium's showing of "Star of Bethlehem" will conclude Monday night, according to A. F. Jenzano, Planetarium director.

Jenzano urged that reservations for the final weekend performances be made immediately. The annual Christmas pageant is shown nightly at 8:30 with matinees Saturday at 11 a.m., 3 and 4 p.m., and Sunday at 2, 3 and 4 p.m.

The director also asked that large groups make reservations to be assured of seatnig. This year's edition of "Star of Bethlehem" has already been viewed by some 17,500 persons.

They Don't Talk, But Sit Still 2 1-2 Hours

Not a single one of them speaks a word, yet the sextet of actors in The Caine Mutiny Court Martial are vitally important to the success of the show. The Caine Mutiny Court Martial will be presented in Memorial Hall Jan. 14 and 15.

They are called "The Silent Six," and are very important to the dramatic prograss of the Paul Gregory stage production of Herman Wouk's new play.

"The Silent Six" are much in evidence during the production as six uniformed jury men in the box of a Navy Court martial.

Seen constantly by the audience, the performers remain on stage for 149 minutes, practically the entire length of the show's action.

Although they appear immobile, they have numerous action cues. They concentrate furiously on wringing the last ounce of emotion out of such gestures as shooting their cuffs, shifting restlessly in their chairs, smiling sympathetically, staring skeptically, scribbling notes, bristling, nodding, leaning forward anl a wile assortment of other motions. All of these actions are "cued" to the second and synchronized with the spoken lines of the actors who handle the dialogue.

Director Charles Laughton, in casting the play, insisted on the finest available actors for the six supporting roles of Paul Douglas, Wendell Corey and Steve Brodie, stars of the new offering.

'Color Notes,' Series Of Pictures, On Exhibit

Color Notes, a series of pictures by Dr. Floyd Hunter of the school of social work here, are now on exhibit in the North Scientific Exhibit Room of the Morehead Planetarium and will continue through January.

Behind the pictures lie ideas drawn from sociological study and observation, accordng to Dr. Hunter. He said that the ideas are simplified abstractions of complex human relationships, and the medium of presentation allows for a dignity and harmony of expression where many words on the subject, however well framed, might fail.

The exhibit is Dr. Hunter's third in Chapel Hill. The series, executed in 1954, is being shown for the first time under the sponsorship of the North Carolina Alpha Chapter of Alpha Kappa Delta, national honorary sociological fraternity. The exhibit will be open daily from 2 until 10 p.m., except Saturdays, when it will be open from 10 a.m. until 10 p.m., and Sundays when it will be open from 1 until 10 p.m.

Just As Soon Quit...

ALTOONA, Pa., (AP)—Mrs. Jane Berard, one of this town's 37 lady cops who guard school children crossing streets, has quit because she won't wear slacks on duty.

Mayor H. Grove said he issued the order to wear slacks, instead of skirts, because several of the women complained of arthritis and other physical discomfort.

Just Too Many Curves...

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, (AP)—Denmark's oldest citizen, Mrs. Ellen Kjerstina Peterson of Haderslav, celebrated her 105th birthday today and told reporters she is getting too many curves.

"I just went on a diet in order to lose weight," she said. "I eat too much, and as I don't get around very much any more, I am just getting too fat."

Four For Chapel Hill:

UNC Gets Du Pont Grants

Carolina and Duke University were listed yesterday along with other colleges and universities of the nation which will receive grants from Du Pont Company.

The University will receive four grants, and Duke will get two.

The Du Pont Co. in Wilmington, Del., yesterday announced a fund of $291,000 for grants to universities and colleges to help improve the teaching of science and mathematics as part of its $800,000 aid to-education program for 1955-56.

Both Duke an Carolina are slated to receive $1,500 each as a part of the $279,000 program of grants by the company to universities for funamental research in chemistry in 1955-56 and for summer research work in 1955. Grants to these two institutions will be for summer research work in 1955.

Duke also was listed among five institutions slated to receive post-graduate fellowships. Each fellowship provides $1,500 for the student, except for first year graduates, who will receive $1,200. An additional allowance of $600 is made to married students. In Addition, tuition and fees are paid and a contribution of $1,200 is made to the university with each fellowship.

A fund of $75,000 has been set aside for fellowships to be awarded to present and prospective teachers of high school science and mathematics who are studying for the master's degree. This program has two parts. One provides summer fellowships for in-service teachers which will provide opportunity for them further to improve their effectiveness. The fellowships will go to teachers taking summer work toward the master's degree.

Under this part of the program, the company granted 16 fellowships to Carolina, a total of $5,500.

The second part of the program provides fellowships for the 1955-56 academic year to encourage college graduates to continue toward their master's degrees and go into high school science and mathematics teaching. Two of these fellowships were awarded to UNC for a total of $3,300.

Each of these fellowships provide the student a living allowance of about $1,200 plus tuition.

The University of North Carolina also had a postgraduate teaching assistantship in chemistry renewed. In large universities, much of the laboratory instruction in undergraduate chemistry courses is given by graduate students, most of whom normally drop this work after two years.

The grants, for which Du Pont has authorized $91,000 to one each of 24 universities, were set up to encourage outstanding graduate students to continue teaching for a third year, thus enabling the universities and undergraduates to get the benefit of their added experience.

Each grant provides $2,400 for the year for unmarried assistants and $3,000 for married men plus an award of $500 to the university and payment of tuition and fees.

Concerning University Students:

Draft Changes Noted

Change In Policy For Grad Students Issued

A change in policy for deferment of graduate students has been issued by the National Selective Service Board.

Col. F. C. Shepard, UNC veterans' advisor, said the selective service regulations remain the same as they were except that a student entering graduate school must now be in the upper 25 percent of his class instead of the upper 50 percent as previously and he must enter graduate school in the next semester after receiving his baccalauveate degree.

Also now the student must make a score of 80 on the SSS college qualifications test instead of the 75 previously required.

No changes have been made in the requirements for deferment for other students.

Proposed Draft Cut Will Not Hit Here—Shepard

The draft cut proposed by the Secretary of Defense will have little noticeable effect on the University, according to Co. F. C. Shepard, veterans' advisor.

Col. Shepard said the proposed cut, which would decrease our armed forces by some 200,000 men, would not effect the school.

This decrease in the size of the militia would be affected by cutting down on the draft quota. Since most students who are attending the University have met the deferment requirements, these men would still be deferred, and thus no change would occur.

Col. Shepard added that the number of men who had to stop their studies to enter the service was very slight and, therefore, any change that might occur in this number would not be noticeable either.

GI Education Loses To 'Economy'

The President has withdrawn veterans benefits that were made available to servicemen after the outburst of the Korean War.

The regrettable thing about the end of G. I. benefits for education—the part of the Presidential order most affecting college campuses—is that they have become a natural and decorous part of the educational system. Veterans returning to college under the G. I. Bill have made notable places for themselves particularly in the area of scholarship.

Thousands of good students who might otherwise have ben denied college educations have ben granted them. Right now Carolina's veterans number well over 1,000—a bare illustration of the wide-spread use of G. I. benefits.

The G. I. Bill has proved a practical and relatively inexpensive adjunct to the U. S. educational system. The millions per month that the new Presidential order may save is a sizeable sum to be sure. But weighed against what it would extend to the country in the way of informed citizens, weighed against the present mammoth expenditure for jet pl. ics and aircraft carriers, it is paltry.

It is mysterious that the educational benguaanty, unemployment compensation and guaranty, unemployment compensation and others) have ben slashed at a time when the Administration finds it hard to digest the crow it has been eating over the still unbalanced budget. It is, too, insufficiently explained why veteran's benefits have been removed while the state of national emergency, declared by Mr. Truman in 1950, remains.

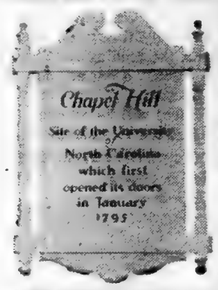
The point of all this, it seems to us, is that there is ample reason for making the G. I. Bill a permanent part of service benefits—and not for th super-patriotic reasons advanced by the American Legion, either. An education for veterans is simply worth what it costs Uncle Sam many times over.

The government needs budget money right now. But we think it has taken the money from the hands of the wrong group.

Gracious Living – XVI

Our Cobb Dormitory operative, looking haggard and worn, stumbled into the office complaining of lack of sleep.

"Pyrotechnics," he mumbled, "flash, bam, ka-pow!"



He leaned against the door and related a horrible tale of abuse at the hands of nameless firecracker bugs in the dorm. Nightly, as soon as he is asleep, somebody tapes a small-size bomb to the wall outside his room, lights it, and leaves it to awaken him (and everybody else on his hall) with a loud roar.

When slumber finally returns, a string of Chinese firecrackers goes off in the yard, and so on, through the night.

Fireworks can (1) get citizens booted out of dormitories and (2)) land them in the pokey. If these warnings don't deter the firecracker fiends in Cobb, let them remember that anything that keeps Carolina Gentlemen from their full 11 hours of sack time is inimical to Gracious Living in Chapel Hill.

Take Care Of Candidates For President

Louis Kraar

THE GROUP of student government workers sat around the quiet President's office in Graham Memorial and talked of spring and elections.

The student union building is quiet these pre-exam days, but ghosts of aspiring candidates will be busy as eem to roam gain next term erhaps some of he ghosts hovered around the he halls that lent's office the tudent Presiother days.

"Well, Don, you think you'll run for President this spring?" asked Ed McCurry, who had just received a kidding from Treasurer Don Fowler about the same thing.

"How can a guy get any work done with all this?" Fowler protested good-naturedly.

And so the kidding continued until Norwood Bryan came in.

"Are you going to run for President this spring, Norwood?" asked McCurry.

"Why, no, are you?" he answered.

"Course not. Hadn't even considered it," McCurry replied.

It must have all started over columnist David Mundy's piece on Manning Muntzing's presidential aspirations. It was still on when I left.

ACTUALLY, TODAY'S candidate in student government begins to feel the pressure of the spring campaign early in the fall. Between the political columnists in the student newspaper and the always-planning party leaders, candidates have to be made early.

Thus, what usually hapens in a vigorous year—like this one—is that many plans, conflicting ones, are made. And within each party several students try for the top nominations.

The students most talked about for President on the Student Party side of the political fence are Fowler, Dave Reid, and Norwood Bryan. Muntzing, of course, is mentioned often, but he feels that just that may have hurt him.

In reporting the names of the aspirants mentioned around Graham Memorial, I want to make it clear that I'm not predicting or speculating. I am simply reporting the names that one hears mentioned around the student union.

University Party presidential hopefuls seem to include Jack Stevens, who says he's going to Law School next year, and McCurry, who (like all the others) says he's not running.

PERHAPS IT'S unfair to tag a student as a candidate because of the pressure it puts on him. But, as a rule, it's the student's own actions that earn him the candidate tag.

In national politics, lists of possible candidates are as common in papers as the crosword puzzle in this paper. And in the national political arena, the dubbed candidates always vow they're not running—this is, before nominations are made.

Manning Muntzing has suffered more so far this school year from pre-election pressure than other possible candidates. This is regrettable because the aspirations of the other SP people mentioned are just as strong as his, though not as obvious.

So pity the plight of the prospective presidential candidate. If he admits he wants the big job, the pressure is really on him all year. And when he denies it, his friends (and enemies) call him a hypocrite.

The only solution seems to be for a candidate to be an "Eisenhower." That is, win fame in a non-partisan job (like Orientation Chairman), stay out of the political spotlight during the year, then come roaring on the scene in the spring.

Lightning Over The Dark Abysses

Excerpted From

The Charlotte News

TEARS about the terrible state of American letters are being shed again and if dumped into one container they would be sufficient to float the Forrestal. Loudest laments come from U. S. creative artists themselves. With a discipline as austere as that of the Trappist monk, they like to chant that there is no "great American novel."

One writer who registered a catalog of complaints is Frederick Prokosch, the Wisconsin-born poet and novelist. He says that the nation simply has no great fiction that exposes the heart of America to the world. . .

Only during the past 75 years or so has this nation seen any substantial turn toward the use of native materials in art. But in that period, sensibility has played like lightning over America's dark abysses. In 1955, the American scene can hardly be marked terra incognita. It has been examined with clarity and beauty and artistry of presentation in music, in painting—an in elterature.

There has not been one "great American novel" but many. Each has, in its own way, shed light on the American national character. It is ridiculous to think that this land can be wrapped up in one piece of fiction. John Steinbeck spoke truly when he said that anyone who presumes to speak for or about all America is a fool, a demagogue or a liar. "Our writers do not say, "This is America." They say—"This is a part I know and love and criticize and understand, and also it is only my attitude toward that part.' "

There are simply as many Americas as there are Americans. Some aspects of this are revealed and made real—and thereby, for the eyes of the world, newly created, newly communicated—in a whole succession of novels. . .

After the Civil War—when the old literary dominance of the East declined—a broader national literature emerged. Out of this movement came the great Mark Twain, who added humor to the literary stew.

America was explained further in the naturalistic fiction of Stephen Crane, Frank Norris and Theodore Dreiser—and even in the works of Henry James, although he spent much of his life abroad. Later came the "muckraking" novels, like Upton Sinclair's THE JUNGLE, and a whole series of tracts on political, social and economic problems. Ernest Hemingway examined the disillusionment of America's runaway "lost generation" in THE SUN ALSO RISES. JOHN DOS PASSOS' trilogy, U. S. A., gave a panoramic view of American life from 1900 to 1930.

William Faulkner has exposed the decadence of old Mississippi families and the depravity of "poor whites" risen to power. Other broad canvasses by Carson McCullers, Thomas Wolfe, Erskine Caldwell, Robert Penn Warren, and Ellen Glasgow have explored sections of the southern landscape. James T. Farrell, John Steinbeck, Richard Wright, John P. Marquand, John O'Hara, William Saroyan, James M. Cain, Irvin Shaw and Saul Bellow have turned out significant — sometimes disturbing—novels about other regions, other traditions, other tensions.

In all their varied ways—realism, romanticism, primitivism, naturalism and the classic traditions of sparseness and objectivity—scores of "great American novels" have given the world a mature look at every side of Americas' national character. The American soul has been well explored.

Old Guard's Dilemma; Ike's 'Moderate Progressiveness'

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — Congressional Republicans are in a rather sober frame of mind as they approach the next two years. The mere statement of their situation shows why.

During the 84th Congress they will be functioning under Old Guard leadership as a minority more than ever dependent upon their President who has announced his intention of turning them all into progressive moderates.

In such a situation, somebody has to give ground. So far, the most articulate voices in the party and in the press are indicating it ought to be the members of Congress.

There is not too much time for maneuver. For Republicans as for Democrats, the Vice-President's gavel signals the opening of the 1956 Presidential campaign in which there are very few present certainties on either side.

The election of the leaderships was dictated almost wholly by seniority and has little real meaning as a sign or portent for the future, with one exception.

The exception is the decision of Speaker Joe Martin to accept the House minority leadership again. Rep. Charles Halleck of Indiana, who had functioned with remarkable efficiency as majority leader during the past two years, wanted the minority leadership and Martin was willing. But Halleck in his labors for Eisenhower had made enemies on the right who resented what they think of as his apostasy from the one true GOP faith. Martin would not risk an open quarrel.

In a sense Martin's decision is notice to the White House that House Republicans as a group are not quite yet ready for a mass baptism into the Eisenhower political faith.

In choosing Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire as chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, Senate Republicans completed a ruling triumvirate all of whom voted for Senator McCarthy. The re-election of Senator Knowland as leader and Senator Millikin as chairman of the conference of all GOP Senators were foregone conclusions.

This result could hardly have been avoided. The Eisenhower Republicans are fewer and junior and they lack a natural rallying point among themselves. The Old Guard also has more vigour and knowhow.

What they have not got however—and the President has—is the country's confidence. They cannot escape the pressure of that fact as the hour nears for decisions which will mean unity or scarifying factionalism.

The Republican right has not ben able to dictate the nomination for President of one of their own since 1920 when Warren G. Harding emerged from the smoke-fliled room. They could claim his successor, Calvin Coolidge, but Coolidge was already President when nominated in his own right.

Since Coolidge, six Republican national conventions have nominated candidates who could be presented to the country as having some claim to the progressive-moderate label. Even when the Democrats were in the depths in 1952, the convention delegates dared not risk nominating their real hero, the late Senator Taft.

The new session should show fairly soon who is making the concessions so vital to the Republican future, and why.

Reaction Piece

Party Splits Are No GOP Monopoly

David Mundy

Currently a hypothesis is being advanced to the effect that unity within a political party is a thing to be very greatly desired. This is essentially a reflection of the "brain trust" days, the "bossism" prevalent in many segments of American politics, and a trickle of which has come down from the philosphy of collectivism so prevalent on the political left.

I find the hypothesis anathema, inasmuch as it assumes that a party council, brain trust, or speech-writing board can make decisions superior to those of individuals, and that this "superior group" should have power to enforce its ideas.

Worst of all, however, the hypothesis is being advanced as though it were one of the "eternal verities," without a shred of an attempt at proof. Close observation easily proves it patently invalid.

Basing their current propaganda effort on the hypothesis that party dis-unity is bad, the Democrats are labeling the Republican party as one in which there is no unity.

Republicans, who are at all very smart when it comes to party politics, are again proving their ineptness in that field. Not only are they accepting the hypothesis as a valid one; they admit that their lack of party unanimity is something to be deplored. They just sit and take the mud as it comes, in large handfulls molded by the ADA's most skillful mud-ball makers.

Were party disunity something really bad, however, it would be the Democratic party that would be disqualified in a fair test.

Examples:

The day after the fall election the new chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committe announced that he favors one system of price supports. The same day the chairman of the House Committee announces that the party is for the old high-parity system. Who lacks unity?

Party propaganda would give one the impression that the Democrat party is squarely for expansion of the government into production and distribution of electric power. Yet one of the leaders of the Southern wing of the party, Sen. George, obtains most of the support in his state from private power companies. For a time, indeed, he was accused of being their lobbyist in Congress. In the same party is Sen. Neuberger of Oregon, who wants the government to build dams all over the place.

And Sen. Kefauver of Tennessee assails the Dixon-Yates contract as a give-away, as being corrupt, part of a calculated attempt to destroy TVA, reactionary, facist, and Wall-Streetish in general. Across the Mississippi in Arkansas, where the plant is to be built, the Democrats laud it as a real boon to mankind.

This "looking out for the interests back home" arises in another of the great questions, that of reciprocal trade agreements. Democrats who come from areas manufacturing products which would be affected are as loud in denunciations of lower tariffs on those products as are Republicans from the same areas. The Democratic party earns the reputation for supporting reciprocal agreements and lower tariffs by virtue of the fact that most of its congressional leaders come from the South, which has relatively few industrial interests. But will the Southern Democrats allow the textile industry to be placed at any tariff disadvantage? Not on your last absentee ballot!

On the matter of civil rights the Democrat Party is immeasurabely greater split. Sen. Lehman and Sen. Strom Thummun' in the same side? There isn't even a comparative situation in the Republican Party.

But, say the Democrats, the Republican party is split over Sen. McCarthy. No one can say that it isn't. But that is almost superficial. By screaming longly and loudly the liberals, who have been badly mauled by "Brother Joseph," have been able to convince the public that there is something evil about what they term "McCarthyism."

The Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was highballing down Campus Cameron when I saw him, a basketful of New Year's resolutions perched on his back.

"I come by the perching-on honestly," The Horse rebutted, braking to a hoof-scorching stop. "My grandpaw was a Percheron. And while this is the season for highballing, mine is confined to the basket type."

Oh! Basketballing?

"Yup," The Horse confirmed. "I was a sort of guest at Case's Castle, in Raleigh, for the Dixie Classic. A sort of unwelcome guest, if you catch?"

Oh, aye; I'd heard of past "welcomes" extended to legal and bona fide ticket-holders by State officials when and if those tickets granted Tar Heel holders thereof squatting privileges in anything even remotely resembling decent seats . . . i. e., anything within a day's walk or three Case hollers from the scene of action!

"A monthly bulletin should be sent to all employees in all state governmental functions, be they Administrative, Legislative, Juridicial or Edoocational," The Horse stated, "informing these more or less worthies that they are the servants of the people, paid by the people, to work for the people; and not a passel of fast, or half-fast, dealers of despotic dicta to vassals of the state."

Did The Horse really think this was the case, lower-case 'c', and not capital-C as in Hard Case?

"I know it is." The Horse snapped. "This here proud Tarheelia of ourn may not be 'The Sahara of the Beaux Arts,' as Henry L. Mencken tagged it; but it sure is evident that a few Russian-state employees regard it as their own private Siberian Steppes, and we the people of Tarheelia as their own private Steppe-ing stones."

Well . . . Case's Castle of Basketball Hassle is, after all, the private dominion of North Carolina State College functionaries, is it not?

"No, it is not," The Horse insisted. "It is not their private anything, but is the property of the state, and the state is the people thereof, as defined in and by our state constitution. Closer still, Case's Castle is the property of The Consolidated University to manage and administer for the Consoliation and through them for the people of the state."

Well, yes; but — wasn't what The Horse stated a principle, and not necessarily a practise?

"There should be no practises in our state which are not based on and maintained at a level of high principle," The Horse saw it. "This goes for seats at a Classic held on state-owned and state-maintained property, or whatever else. The cute lil' gimmick of State College czars ear-marking the choice seats all over the Coliseum for their chosen, and for the people of the City of Raleigh, is just so much huckstering of the property of the people for the benefit of the favored few."

Well . . . yes: but —

"Why isn't it worked as a football game is?" The Horse interrupted me. "Why aren't blocks of tickets — including good, ground-floor seats, mind you, not just scattered and the worst-available—assigned to the participating schools? You don't entertain any fallacious notion that us Chapel Hillers, or the Dookians, or the Deacs, could get to sit in any sort of friendly, cohesive, home-school bunch, do you?"

Well, no. Not exactly.

"Not especially, is what you mean," The Horse horse-laughed. "Heck, it might sound to our embattled teams as if they had some sort of fair-play backing, some sort of encouragement. This is not to be countenanced at Case's Castle. The deck of spectators has to be stacked for the Wolfpack, and it is stacked for them. Just you get a good seat—and I do not mean at the press-tables—and let out two consecutive cheers for your team, other than State —and instanted, the Cowstapo. if I may coin a word, will check your tickets to make sure you are legally entitled; and next, if you are so legally entitled, a Big Spoke will wheel up and give you a third-degree on who sold you that ticket. And in the event you do not believe this, just you try and get a good seat, not to the Classic, but to he Conference Championship playoffs."

What? Not the Playoffs of the ACC!

"Why, to be sure, Roger, me simple gull," The Horse assured me. "Of course, the excuse is that student bodies or home-town supporters would not buy blocks of tickets for all the games, and this is a requisite, catch? It assures the Case Castle management of the fastest sales at the least expense. Or, to put it another way, it is another example of high principle being subordinated to low expediency. On the same basis—get the dough, and to heck with principle—the management could and some day may sell the Coliseum out to a group of scalpers and let the devil take the hindmost. That would be but logical, for doesn't that even further simplify the fastest sales at the mostest money and the leastest bookkeeping? It does."

Oh, I hardly thought so!

"In a way, it is being handled in that fashion right now," The Horse said somberly. "If you 'know' somebody connected with the dictatorship of Case's Castle, you can get good tickets. This is a sort of 'scalping' in club fashion: only instead of paying money for the good seat, extra money, you 'buy' on the basis of friendship — and you ain't got a chance if you ain't got a Cowstapo friend, and I don't care what school you go to, teach at, or where you pay taxes."

But was there a cure for this favoritism?

"You're doggoned right there is," The Horse snapped. "Step one is to have the Consolidation officials inform the Case Castle management that is a servant of the people of the state, and not the Southern Division of Madison Square Garden: step two, appoint a committee to inquire into and act upon the question, including assigning blocks of seats for the ACC Playoffs to the participating schools; and step three, to remind said Cowstapo regularly that they are servants, and not we-uns their serfs and vassals."

Well . . . me, I'm willing to be shown. . .

Invitations To Indoor Games Extended To Southern Schools

By RAY LINKER

Announcement of an invitation to the big Indoor Games, indoor track classic held annually in Woollen gymnasium, has gone out to colleges throughout 10 of the southern states, as well as to numerous high and preparatory schools throughout six nearby states.

Five hundred announcements have been sent by the office of Dale Ranson, UNC track coach, inviting the schools to participate in the big meet of the season, called by many the indoor track classic of the south.

Four divisions will be run during the afternoon and night of February 26, with a total of 34 events scheduled. Maryland, Carolina, and Duke will battle for the championship in the conference division, which lists 12 events, including the famed Weil Mile run. Other members of the conference will field fine teams also, with South Carolina playing the role of the darkhorse.

The non-conference thinclads will have 10 races in which to display their talent, while the freshman and scholastic groups will have six events each. The Tar Babies edged past Maryland last year to the crown of the frosh division, which had 11 teams entered, George Washington and Washington & Lee, the top two teams last season in the scholastic division, are expected to be among the top contenders again.

Information concerning the affair was sent to colleges and high and preparatory schools throughout the states of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Virginia. Colleges throughout Florida, Kentucky, Mississippi, and Louisiana also were invited.

Trotters Play Fog Check Tilt

CHICAGO, Jan. 6 (AP)—A basketball version of baseball's rain check might be the "fog" check which will bring some 12,000 fans back to the Chicago Stadium Jan. 13 to watch the Harlem Globetrotters.

The Globetrotters, in an emergency flight from the east, were unable to land here because of fog last Monday night when they were scheduled to play at the stadium. The star Negro team had to land in Milwaukee after also failing in a landing attempt at Detroit.

Although the 12,817 fans saw a National Basketball Assn. game, Trotter officials decided to honor their ticket stubs at the Jan.13 date. The Trotters will play the Washington Generals as the feature of double header.

Capacity Crowd Is Expected For UNC-Wake Battle Tomorrow

By BERNIE WEISS

Tickets are going fast for tomorrow night's Atlantic Coast Conference clash between Wake Forest's Demon Deacons and the Tar Heels here in the Woollen Gym.

A complete sell-out is expected by gametime for Carolina's first regularly scheduled Big Four battle this season.

The varsity contest will follow a freshman game between the two schools. The frosh game will begin at 6:15; the varsities will take the floor about 8:15.

The Athletic Association announced late yesterday that many of the best seats had already been taken, but that the end sections of the temporary bleachers were still unoccupied. Students must exchange ticket No. 10 of their passbooks by tomorrow noon for a game ducat. Guest tickets are $1.50 each.

The game is shaping up as a scoring battle between Wake Forest's Dickie Hemric and Carolina's Lennie Rosenbluth. Hemric is the third highest scorer in the ACC, carrying a 29.4 average. Rosenbluth, in fourth place, has a 27.5 mark.

Wake Forest, though beaten four times this year, is not to be regarded lightly. The Deacs, according to latest statistics, have a 47.7 shooting percentage from the floor, coupled with a 75 percent accuracy mark from the foul line.

Add this information to the fact that three of the team's four losses have been to teams ranked in the top 20 in the nation (State, George Washington, Alabama) and you have what amounts to a formidable five.

Hemric, 6'6" center, and forward Lefty Lowell Davis comprise the scoring punch in the Deacon attack. The other starters for Wake will probably be Maurice George, Erie Wiggins and Jackie Mureck.

Davis has a 19.4 scoring average, Murdock has a 13.7 average and Wiggins has an 11.0 mark.

Hemric holds a national collegiate scoring record over a four-year period, and every point he scores from now until the end of the season sets a new record. He hit for 49 points against Virginia recently for his highest effort so far.

Carolina, home from a Deep South road trip to L. S. U. and Alabama, will be seeking to snap a two-game losing streak. The Tar Heels' last victory was over Duke in the Dixie Classic.

The freshman game should be a breeze for the Tar Babies. They have already defeated the Deaclets once, 92-73.

Weill To Name Rocky's Next

NEW YORK, Jan. 6 (AP)—Rocky Marciano's manager, Al Weill, said today he will know "by Feb. 15" when the heavyweight champion will be ready to make his next title defense. He can pick among three propositions offering total guarantees of $950,000.

Weill so informed Promoter Jim Norris of the International Boxing Club at a breakfast meeting this morning. He sent the same answer to Jack Solomons, British promoter, who offered a $300,000 guarantee plus transportation for a Marciano-Don Cockell match at London in late April or May.

"By that time Feb. 15, I'll know what kind of shape Rocky is in and how the cut on his nose is standing up. He'll go to camp at Grossinger's Sunday to do preliminary work for some exhibitions.

"If I think he's okay by Feb. 15, he would be able to fight in a couple of months."

The UNC Blue Dolphins, victorious in their first two outings take on South Carolina in Bowman-Gray pool at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

This will be the first home meet for the locals, having defeated Bainbridge Naval Training Station at Bainbridge, Md., and Duke at Durham.

Last year, the tankers defeated the Gamecocke swimmers, 54-27, taking eight out of the ten first places.

Immediately after today's meet, the swimmers will leave for Charlottesville, Va., where they will swim the Cavaliers at 2 o'clock Saturday. The tankmen defeated Virgina last year by only four points, 44-40.

Coach Casey has announced the tentative lineup as follows: 300 medley relay—ACC recordholders Charlie Krepp, Phil Drake and Dick Baker; 220 free style—Co-captain Larry Shannon and Steve Marks; 50 freestyle—Pete Dannenbaum and Lee Holmes; 150 Individual medley—Bob Linker and Pepper Tice; Diving—Dave McInnis and ACC champion John Hussey; 100 free style—Tom Brenner and Pete Dannenbaum; 200 backstroke - ACC recordholder Charlie Krepp and Smith Jewell; 200 breaststroke—Co-captain Warren Heemann and Charles Perry; 440 freestyle — Phil Drake and Pepper Tice; and the 400 yard freestyle relay—Dick Baker, Larry Shannon, Lee Holmes and Warren Heemann.

Patterson Favored Over Troy In TV Bout Tonight

NEW YORK, Jan. 6—(AP)—Floyd Patterson, just turned 20, is expected to enhance his reputation as a lightheavy contender tomorrow night in a Madison Square televised bout with hard-punching Willie Troy of Washington.

Rated No. 4 among the 175-pounders behind Champion Archie Moore, the flashy Brooklyn boxer is a solid 18 to 5 favorite on the strength of his fine 18-1 record for 19 pro fights with 10 knockouts. Only a disputed decision by ex-champ Joey Maxim, June 7 mars Patterson's record since he returned from Helsinki in 1952 as an Olympic champion and turned pro.

Again, the No. 1 reason Luckies lead in colleges over all other brands, coast to coast—border to border: Luckies taste better. A Campus-to-Career Case History

"Always something new"
"Different types of work appeal to different men," says Donald O'Brian (A.B., Indiana, '50), in the Traffic Department with Indiana Bell Telephone Company. "For me, I'll take a job that keeps me hopping. And that's just the kind of job I have.
"You'd think that after two years I'd have all the variables pinned down. But it doesn't work that way. When you supervise telephone service for thousands of different customers whose needs are always changing, there's always something new coming up.
"I started with Indiana Bell in 1952, after two years in the Army. My training program exposed me to many different kinds of telephone work—customer contact, personnel, accounting, operations. I saw a lot of jobs which looked as interesting as mine. As much as I like the kind of work I'm doing now, I bet I'll like my next spot even better."
Don's enthusiasm for his job is pretty typical of how most young college men feel about their telephone careers. Perhaps you'd be interested in a similar opportunity with a Bell Telephone operating company, such as Indiana Bell . . . or with Bell Telephone Laboratories, Western Electric or Sandia Corporation. Works Of Two Water Colorists Now Showing At Planetarium

The works of two contemporary water colorists are now on display in Morehead Planetarium and will remain there for the rest of this month.

Paintings by Leo Rosmer and Frank Baisden are now being shown in the planetarium's art galleries from 2 to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday and from 1 to 10 p.m. Sunday.

Rosmer, who spent several months in Winston-Salem last year doing illustrations for Western Electric, is a native of Vienna where he studied art at the Kunstgewerberschule. His first exhibit was held at the Imperial Palace there in 1933.

A resident of New York City, he has exhibited at the Montrose Gallery and the New School for Social Research there. Critics have said his work is both original and experimental without being unrecognizable.

Baisden, a native of Tennessee, is the founder and for 16 years the head of the art department of the University of Chattanooga. He has studied both in this country and Paris and now divides his time between Florida and Mexico. The water colors in the Planetarium exhibit were done last summer while Baisden was in Mexico.

L. L. Howell, who says he guarantees "light headiness," is the new clipper.

The hours, formerly from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, are now extended from 10 in the morning to 6 in the afternoon, Monday through Saturday.

Eure Declares:

Government Administered By Parties, Not By Individuals

By NEIL BASS

A distinguished North Carolina gentleman declared last evening that "Americans must realize that goverumental function is administered by parties and not individuals."

The gentleman was NC Secretary of State Thad Eure, the occasion, a meeting of the UNC Young Democrats Club, the reference, to Democrats who voted for the "man" Eisenhower in the 1952 elections.

The robust Mr. Eure, a veteran of 18 years in the secretary of state's capacity, further stated "a chief executive can do little except recommend and veto other than what the leaders of his party designinate."

This opinion was expressed by a man who this year convened both branches of the NC General assembly, an event unequaled according to the speaker "in the history of the United States."

Frequently gestulating and driving his points in high toned voice Eure explained to the young politicians "the plan of organization of the North Carolina Democratic party."

Describing the purposes of pol- "they were established for five principal purposes. These being: to influence governmental policies, to influence public opinion, to choose candidates for office, to win elections and to secure salaried posts for the party leaders.."

As for the primary difference in the Democratic and Republican parties, the bespeckled orator had this to say, "the differentiation is in the methods employed in accomplishing a given result and we all understand these differences."

Sailing into the constituents of that " their components are of three sorts, first the leaders who have risen to power because of ability, secondly, the money men who have seats in the council affairs and thirdly, the mass of citizens."

"Hearty congratulations" were the keywords with which the longtime democratc leader laureled the UNC Young Democrats for what he called "cultivation of interest and knowledge in the field of government."

Wrapping up the address, Eure said "our government is as good or as bad as the people make it."

Administration Brass Neglect Budget Study

By JERRY REECE

"It is just too early to tell." That seemed to be the general opinion around South Building yesterday about the proposed budget for the University now before the State Legislature.

President of the Consolidated University Gordon Gray had "no comment," while his secretary William C. Friday, pointed out that most of the officials in the administration offices had not had time to analyze the complete budget yet.

Claude Teague, the University's business manager, explained that, "You just can't take one segment of the budget and analyze it without considring the budget as a whole."

Concerning the proposed raise in dorm rents, which seemed to be the biggest fighting point with students and officials alike; Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver said, "Up to now we never had to do anymore than break even on dorms and dining rooms. I don't know if we are expected to make a profit now or not."

One administration spokesman pointed out that it is not understood yet whether the proposed increases in dorm rent will be for dorm improvements or for deficits in the general University fund.

The regular meeting of the President's Cabinet will be held Monday in Chancellor Carey Bostian's office at N. C. State College. The group will discuss budget recommendations at this time.

The Chancellors Council will meet with Chancellor House Tuesday, at which time the same subject will probably be discussed.

One observer pointed out yesterday that although there were no permanent improvements for the University approved, no new

With Part In Marriage Of Figaro:

She's A Cinderella

By WILLJAM EATON

When Martha Fouse, Chapel Hill sporano, heard Jarmila Novotna sing the part of Cherubino in The Marriage of Figaro at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York several years ago, she never dreamed that some day she would be portraying the same part, singing the same arias and dressing as the same 18th century page boy.

Trying out and winning the part of Cherubino in the popular Mozart opera, which is to be presented by the University Music Department Jan. 17 and 18, is "indeed a treat," according to Mrs. Fouse.

"Opera in full production is not performed much ouside the few professional companies in the United States," the petite brownette explained, adding that a presentation such as the one the Music Department plans is "a rarity.."

Performances of The Marriage of Figaro will begin in Hill Hall at 8:30 p.m. Reserved seats are now available by mail order for $1 and will be held until the evening of the performance.

The important part of Cherubino, an adolescent boy, is generally sung by a woman. Other Metropolitan singers who interpret the part are Rise Stevens and Mildred Miller, both mezzo-sopranos..

Mrs. Fouse received most of her early musical training in Columbus, Ohio, where she majored in French at Ohio State. She is continuing her voice training while in Chapel Hill by studying with Walter Golde.

Her husband, Donald, is a graduate student in the Music Department and plans to teach after he receives his Masters degree in June.

The Fouses have been in Chapel Hill a year and a half. She is employed as secretary in the Department of Social Work. As soon as Mr. Fouse begins his teaching career, Martha plans to embark on a new carer as a "full-time housewife."

Rise Turned Into 6-Pointed Singing Star

Lovely Rise Stevens, whose renowned operatic talent will be featured in concert next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall, has been described as "the most versatile singing star in modern history."

It is true that the mezzo is the leading attraction at the Metropolitan but a variety of roles on the screen, television, radio and concert performances and her rating as a leading seller of classical records demonstrate that she is a "six pointed star."

Perhaps it is in the recording field that Miss Stevens has drawn her largest legion of followers. The best evidence of this is the fact that the New York born "modern prima donna" is the only classical singer ever to run up a sale of 2,500,00 records in a single year.

Miss Stevens, chosen as one of the 10 best dressed women, began her career at the age of 10..

Playmakers Cite Brisk Mutiny Sales

Good seats at all price ranges are still available for the Caine Mutiny Court Martial, according to a Playmaker business office representative.

The Court Martial production will be presented at Memorial Hall Jan. 14 and 15. It stars Paul Douglas, Wendell Corey and Steve Brodi, who will be supported by a cast of six men who compose the jury for the court martial. The driector for the play is Charles Laughton.

"The tickets, which are priced at $4.40, $3.30 and $2.20, are selling quickly," the Playmaker representative said "but anyone who wants to see the show can still buy tickets."

Bill Introduced To Postpone Tax Filing Date 31 More Days

RALEIGH, Jan. 7 (AP)—Income taxpayers would be given 31 days more in which to get ready for the tax collector under bills introduced in the House and Senate today.

Tossed in the hopper in both houses were administration-backed bills to change the deadline for filing individual state income tax returns from March 15 to April 15. Sen. Claude Currie of Durham introduced the Senate measure and Rep. W. B. Rodman of Beaufort sent up the House Bill. Both are members of the Advisory budget Commission.

Congress has changed the deadline for filing Federal income tax returns and Gov. Hodges has expressed the opinion North Carolina should change its deadline to conform to the Federal law.

Brief House and Senate meetings today before the legislators left for their first weekend at home of the 1955 session saw introduction in the Senate of legislation dealing with two other important issues—legislative reapportionment and Secrecy.

Sen. F. J. Blythe of Mecklenburg introduced a Senate resolution calling for the creation of a commission of nine members to study the question of reallocating

No Plans For Retirement:

Poet-Historian Carl Sandburg Slows Down For 77th Birthday

Party guests included Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, World War II commander of the 8th Army, and Mrs. Eichelberger; Demaree Bess, associate editor of The Saturday Evening Post, and Mrs. Bess.

Sandburg said he has no plans for retirement, and is uooking forward to another year of work during 1955. He is working now on a prologue to be used in an exhibit of photographic murals by his brother-in-law, Edward Steichen, New York Photographer.

During 1954 Sandburg prepared the one-volume Abraham Lincoln: The Pairie Years and the War Years, a condensation into 742 pages of his earlier six-volume, prize-winning autobiography of the Civil War President.

Sandburg's first work, Chicago Poems, was published in 1915, and he later published Smoke and Steel and several other collections of poems. His novel, Remembrance Rock, was published in 1948.

Next week, Sandburg will go to Louisville, Ky., where the University of Louisville will confer the honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Local Officials To Attend Tea At Lambda Chi

Administration and departmental officials, professors, housemothers and presidents of dormitories, sororites and fraternities, and the President of the student body have been invited to a tea from 3 to 5 tomorrow afternoon, to meet the new Lambda Chi Alpha housemother, Mrs. O. B. Bell.

Mrs. Bell, orginally from Washington, N. C., moved to Chapel Hill last August and in the middle of November became the Lambda Chi's housemother.

No Paper Tomorrow

There will be no Daily Tar Heel tomorrow.

The newspaper has suspended publication of Sunday morning editions due to the appropriation of last year's student Legislature of just enough funds to put out a six-day paper until Christmas.

The next edition of The Daily Tar Heel will be delivered Tuesday morning.

Y Delegates To Report

Delegates to the recent YMCA-YWCA National Student Assembly held at the University of Kansas will report on the Assembly special meeting of the University YMCA and YWCA to be held at 8 p.m. in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

The meeting is being sponsored by the YMCA and YWCA student cabinets and advisory board.

Miss Sally Folger, Milledgeville, Ga., was chairman of the Carolina delegation. Other members were Miss Anna Wendley, Miss Amy Cooke, Graham Rights, Edward Crutchfield, Dan Southerland, Holland McSwain, Miss Susan Fink, Bob Hyatt, John Riebel and Miss Betty Ray.

The Budget

It is too soon to tell exactly what will be the effect of the new state budget on the University. Better financial heads than ours are pouring over the budget book in the South Building business office, trying to decipher its significance for Carolina's next biennial course.

Some things, however, are clear. The University gets no permanent improvements—that is, no new buildings or major renovation jobs. We get no new faculty members and no new staff. That is a four million dollar disappointment to those who realize the acute need on this campus.

Too, dormitory room rents will be upped 20 to 30 dollars a year and the coeds who live in Spencer will have to pay more for their food in the dining room there. This added revenue will total about $88,000. Here, we feel, the Budget Commission made its biggest mistake. Much as The Daily Tar Heel has opposed a raise in tuition, we should still have preferred that to a general raise in dormitory room rates—a hike affecting only a segment of the campus, and by and large, the segment that can least afford to pay.

But there is another side to the ledger. WUNC-TV, if the budget passes the Assembly, will get $434,800. In a year of hardship, that is an encouraging vote of confidence in our fledgling television station. And minor betterments—a new organ for Hill Hall, new equipment for the physics department and the like—will be allowed.

So, at first glance, (and assuming that these recommendations will be approved) the University seems to have been dealt a serious blow in the denial of new teachers and buildings, but a blow tempered by the granting of money for smaller works and projects.

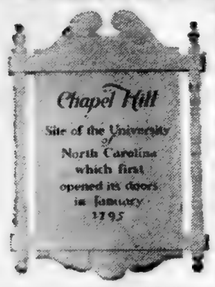
Nobody really expected more. And, in fact, the Commission should be commended for not taking the expedient course in drawing up the budget—drastically increasing fees and reducing salaries and services to meet the state's deficit.

With Protection & Security For All

End of the week—and time to clean out a basket full of the fortnight's little triumphs of "security" over reason. They'd be funny if they weren't so scary.

Only day before yesterday, for example, the watchful old American Legion protected the youth of Muhlenburg College, Allentown, Pennsylvania from the acting of Charlie Chaplin. An ancient film had been scheduled in an art film series, but the Legion said no, and, well, the College decided the Legion had a point. They cancelled the show.

Then there's the Forest Hills home owners association which makes you say you're not a Red before you can join the group.



The latest Girl Scout Handbook is off the presses, and this time, we're happy to report, without a taint of subversion. The "One World" badge of the 1953 edition has become the "My World" badge. "You are preparing yourself for a world citizenship" now reads, "You are preparing yourself to be a friend to all." "Make up a quiz game on the UN" has been changed to "Make up a quiz game on the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts."

The nation's scientists, of course, are still feeling the squeeze of "security," but at least one young man in the field has the right idea. We recommend that all our readers who are worried about present-day encroachments on the realm of free thought adopt the philosophy of James M. Hawk, who this week wrote thusly in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"At one time I was disturbed that my performance in academic work toward a graduate degree in physics was not equal to that of the top scientists. But I am encouraged now that the government is doing me a service by cleaning out all those at the top. I may be stupid, but boy, am I loyal!"

'Art' At WC Gets Censure & Headlines

Louis Kraar

IS A CAMPUS literary magazine the place for uninhibted self-expression?

This became more than an academic question at Woman's College last month when a drawing of the male figure in undraped detail appeared in "Coraddi," WC's magazine.

The magazine's editor, Debora Marcus, took the position that the nude was "art." She and the entire staff quit after Chancellor E. K. Graham censured them for poor taste.

Miss Marcus, who lives in New York at 1246 Shakespeare Ave. (of all places), argued that anything worth creating as art merited exhibition to the public.

Chancellor Graham seemed to have other ideas when he pointed to the wide range of opportunities on campus for self-expression. He cited galleries, art booklets, and other media on the campus besides general publications for viewing this expression.

This controversy over the nude seems to have raised the academic argument of art as well as the blood pressure of the gals at our sister institution to a new level. And aside from a little unfavorable publicity, the whole argument was probably a good thing.

I noticed the now-infamous drawing in "Coraddi" a week or so before the controversy started. Flipping through the pages of the magazine in the WC student union, I felt mildly surprised at seeing the picture, but it wasn't offensive.

The blare of publicity that resulted from Chancellor Graham's censure, however, was offensive. It did't help WC's reputation nationally either.

One of the more sensational news services described the controversy as "an uproar" in "the nation's biggest women's college." The article also said, "The official attitude was that such "art" should be confined to galleries."

The chancellor would have done better through a quiet chat with "Coraddis" staff. As it turned out, Graham's censure made as many campus headlines as McCarthy's censure did nationally.

Now that the girls at WC have calmed down, probably to concentrate on recruiting a new staff for the literary magazine, perhaps someone can settle the academic argument.

Should nudes be restricted to art galleries, or do they have a place in campus magazines?

I FIND myself aching in many (some unmentionable) places this week.

I mention this personal note only as explanation to my friends and enemies for what may be viewed as unusual conduct.

Returning from the holidays with various pains, I took a jaunt over to the dent school to find that I had contracted some long-named gum inflammation. After gum packings in my mouth and penicillin shots in the opposite area of my body, I find sitting difficult and talking impossible.

So to my friends I ask pardon for not being able to talk. (Perhaps I'll gain more friends.) And to my enemies, I say enjoy the blissful silence while you may.

Living It Up At Lotus Lake

Joseph Alsop

NONGKHAY, Northeast Thailand.—This reporter is currently recovering from giving a New Year's Eve party which perhaps deserves recording on a higher level than the expense account, if only because it was a dinner-dance for 150 people that cost thirty-five dollars.

It was born of a decision to spend Christmas and New Year's day in this lovely northeastern region of Thailand, which is also the most exposed to Communist presure and the most penetrated by fifth columns. When I got here, my friend Rod Hemphill, who runs a local silk factory, said no one could understand northeastern Thailand without getting the feel of village life.

It was a pity, Rod added there was no village party coming up, because going to a village party was the best quick way to see what a Thai village was really like. And so I asked whether I might give a New Year's eve party at the village of the Lotus Lake, where Rod's silk factory is situated.

From here, Rod's charming and intelligent Thai partner, Kun Nom and he extermely able, tough village headman, Som Si quietly took over. There were a couple of preliminary crises, about the price of the cow that was to be the main dish, and about the difficulty of obtaining the truly superior brand of local white mule that is made across the Mekong River in Laos.

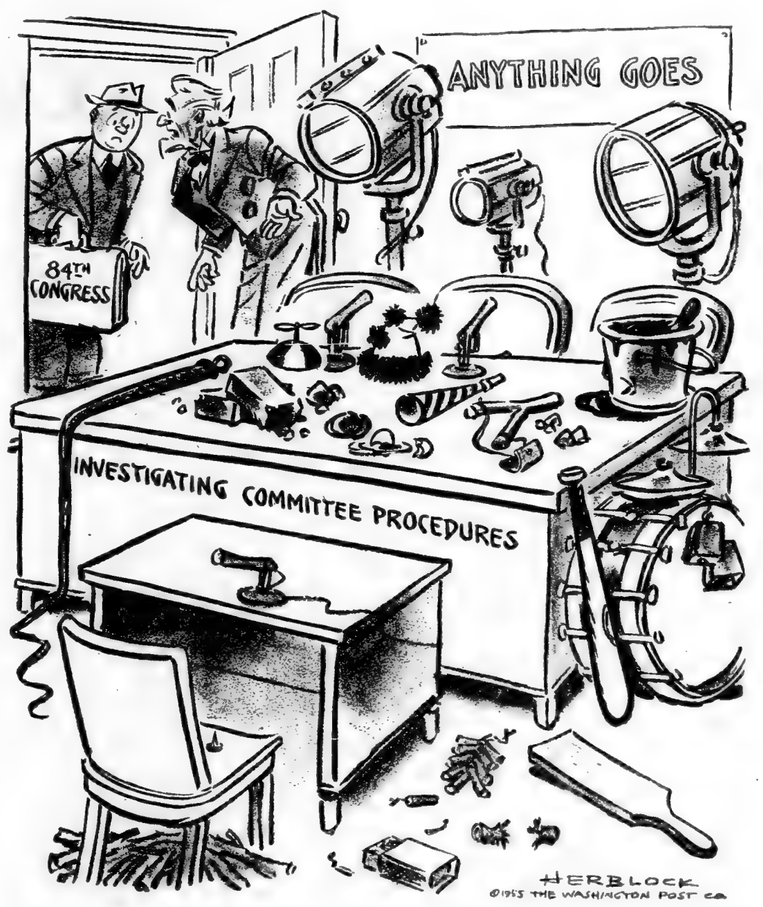
But Kun Nom, and Som Si were as efficient a catering service as any in Washingon. On the morning of Dec. 31, they reported that my thirty-five dollars had provided a cow, half a bufffalo, and several ducks and chickens; plus about fifteen gallons of white mule for the common people with a specially invigorating and precious bottle of white mups mixed with black monkey's blood for he honored guests; plus the most celebrated player of the ken, a local instrument halfway between bagpipes and pan pipes; plus prizes to persuade the young ladies to dance, which they are reluctant to do without suitable inducement.

Rod and his beautiful wife, Annong and I sat off for the party in the late afternoon. The children of Lotus Lake village were driving the village buffaloes home from their wallow; the herons were gloriously winging their way back to the heronry by the Lotus Lake, and the lowering sun was gilding the rice straw in the fields. But this perfect atmosphere of pastoral peace was shattered, when we reached the ballroom (Rod's silk factory). Som Si had insisted on installing the powerful American public address system that the village bought last year to brighten up its festivals.

The noise of alternating records of Bankok songs, local ballads and arias from Thai classical opera was downtright deafening. Besides half the village was already there. The white mule was already going around. And the conversation was beginning to show that added brightness that always marks the cocktail hour.

The first item on the program was the idea of the village elders—to wind the bai see strings which bring good luck on the arms of Rod, Annong and me. The ceremony involved siting on the floor through an interminable, imitation Pali chant, and being wound with the strings while all those not busy string winding held hands to strengthen the life forces.

After that, the party really got going. The white mule circulated rapidly by an efficient loving cup system. The cow and the buffalo appeared in the form of laap, which means that they had been chopped fine with the fieriest red peppers available, exta seasoned with spices and rather summarily cooked, with laap and curry and salad and white mule in plenty. The usual second stage of every party, when the conversation almost overtops the music, was easily reached.



Then the ken player took over the microphone. With many a shy gesture the young ladies took the floor, and the village bucks stepped out for the circle dance. This involves revolving, very remotely, around your partner, making elegant hand and arm gestures. An American buck would find it unexciting, but Thai bucks think differently.

And so we reached the party's final phase, which continued, with louder and louder music and faster and faster circle dancing, until all could wish one another a happy new year. There were the usual late party incidents—the headman's son went a bit too far, as headmen's sons often will. There was also the usual group who could not resist the temptation for "just one nightcap," so the Lotus Lake village was still ringing with song in the dawn. But as a party it was a clear success.

And what useful information did I gather from this evening, it may well be asked. Well I earned from all those present that Thai villagers are charming, gay and friendly people. From Som Si and one of two other intelligent and sober elders, I learned they hate the Chinese and Vietnamese with an intense passion, and equate communism with its great Asian converts. And just by listening to the loud speaker, I learned that this was a semi-neolithic community, experiencing a violent impact from Western civilization whose final outcome you could not predict.

And I also learned that Kun Nom was not factually accurate, when he promised that Laos white mups mixed with black monkey's blood never gave you a headache.

'Care To Start Making Changes Here?'

Tonight At The Moom Pitchers

Or Would You Rather Be A Prairie Dog?

If you are one of life's tormented individuals, ready to toss n the towel and call it guits, we ask you to spend a few hours at the Varsity Theater tonight and observe what type of life the average prairie dog faces.

Walt Disny's newest creation, "The Vanishing Prairie", is the current attraction, running through today.

Prairie dogs play a major role in the picture which, although excellent, falls somewhat short of its predecessor, "The Living Desert."

These prairie dogs seem to have more troubles than you and Mendes-France put together. How would you like to live in a hole in the ground, way out in the middle of nowhere in particular, faced with a constant battle for life? Woe be the prairie dog, who has more enemies than N. C. State has talent scouts. His natural predators include the coyote, rattle-snake, badger, owl, prairie falcon, black-footed ferrett, and buffalo.

Sympathyzing with him, you will feel like a million bucks.

The title of the picture is used as a theme throughout, and Disney effectively puts across the point that conservation efforts, though thorough and beneficial in other areas, are needed badly in the prairie. Buffalo, whooping cranes and certain other species of wold life are fast disappearing from the scene, an old tale retold once more in natural drama.

"The Vanishing Prairie" is good. Photographic angles are amazing, and set one to wondering to what extremes Disney's battry of assistants must have gone. The picture is filmed entirely in technicolor. Music, as always, plays a large part in pictures along this order, and is capably handled here by Paul Smith.

There are episodes in the lives of all the animals previously mentioned, plus the mountain lion, ram, various ducks and geese. The picture ends on an interesting note, "Anvil Chorus" being played in the background while two battering rams duel for a mate.

A flash prairie fire and flash flood also are pictured.

An Appeal For Ol' George

Editor:

George is a good dog. The evidence against him, according to The Daily Tar Heel, is not enough to convict him of petty larceny. Since when is the anonymous complaint enough to jail someone in this democracy of ours?

If there are not enough facilities or money to take care of George until he gets a proper trial, I'm sure that there are enough kind-hearted students and townswolk who would be willing to take care of him until he is proven guilty or innocent.

Here is a dog of dogs. Let's not make any mistakes that we may regret later. Kill George and you kill a part of Carolina.

Writing, Anyone?

Editor:

This is the quickest way I know of contacting students at the University who are interested in writing.

I have had a letter from Mr. Nolan Miller, professor of English at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, who is editing an anthology of student writing for Ballantine, to be published next fall.

The collection, "Campus Writing Today,' has received material from all over the nation, but so far no submissions from the Tar Heel state. As Mr. Miller is very much interested in a representative selection, and since North Carolina is producing so much through student writing channels, it would be a shame if nothing went in for consideration for the anthology.

Creative writing students and others interested in submitting material may obtain details from Mr. Miller.

Ladejinsky's Demands Met By White House

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — The White House met Wolf Ladejinsky's price for dropping his embarrassing fight against Agriculture Secretary Benson who had fired him as agricultural attache in Tokyo on security grounds.

Ladejinsky wanted more than a comparable job. He demanded and got a full security and loyalty clearance before he accepted a Foreign Operations Administration post in Viet Nam. He will do there the same land reform work he did for Generla MacArthur in Japan.

Like MacArthur, Ladejinsky will return. A Democratic civil service committee will bring him back as part of their investigation into the operations of the Eisenhower security system. He is exhibit A in their thesis that the Eisenhower program is being systematically warped into a modern version of the old spoils system.

Ladejinsky's partisans include influential Republicans as well as Democrats. With the press, they raised a storm of protest to which the White House felt compelled to how even though it meant the public reversal of a favorite Eisenhower Cabinet member, Secretary Benson.

But while the President was willing to admit that in this case Mr. Benson was wrong, Mr. Benson had no such misgivings. He has been outvoted two to one, as the State Department earlier and now FOA have given Ladejinsky full clearance and marks of perfect confidence.

The Secretary was calm and self-assured as he confronted a large press conference for nearly an hour. He conceded that "reasonable men" might not always take the same view and he deplored the anti-Semitic issue raised in the Vitt letter which his executive, Milan D. Smith, made public.

He still felt he had had the facts—though he has still to meet, much less talk to, Ledejinsky. He made the decision according to his best lights. Furthermore, Mr. Smith has his confidence though Smith made an "unfortunate" mistake. The Benson security officer, a newcomer, who initiated the proceedings, is okay too and will remain.

It had a familiar ring to those who were accustomed to hearing Harry S. Truman defend his cronies until after hell froze over.

In the Truman manner, too, Benson admitted no doubts about the system under which such storms arise. It permits two Cabinet members to come to exactly opposite conclusions and it is widely debated by responsible people, but the secretary showed no trace of concern.

The most unkind cut of all was the personal one.

Wolf Ladejinsky has worked for the Agriculture Department for 19 years. During that interval he has earned great praise and the confidence of a widely differing assortment of politicians and government officials, includng General MacArthur.

He was fired without a hearing on the say-so of two newcomers to the Agriculture Department. Smith and security officer Cassity. Mr. Benson accepted their word completely and still does. Ladejinsky's efforts to see him even after the White House expressed concern failed.

The land expert leaves the department he served so long without a singl generous word or gesture from its head. Reporters gave the Secretary opportunity to discuss the case from every angle. Somehow he never got around to Ladejinsky, the man, a faithful government servant accused by indirection of being capable of treason.

The Secretary said he had a successor in view who will be named to the Tokyo post shortly.

The Army Ends Segregation

Condenced From The Reporter

The end of segregation in the U. S. Army was first carried out in a few service units in Northern posts and in the Army's troop-training program, but until the outbreak of the Korean War most regular units remained segregated. Segregation was eliminated in Korea, not as a social experiment, not as an ideological measure, but as a practical answer to immediate combat needs.

The Army's study addressed itself to the question of how Negro soldiers could best be employed in the war effort. It began in April, 1951. At that time most—but not all—of the combat units in Korea cotained some Negro soldiers who had come as badly wanted replacements; yet the vast majority of Negro troops were still in Negro units.

It was a changing situation, one which provided the oportunity to compare what happened under widely varying circumstances.

Within a period of four months, in Korea, Japan, and on ten Army posts in the United States, a research team brought detailed questionnaires to 12,000 officers and men, and interviewed almost 1,200 others. (Only Negro members of the team talked to colored troops.)

They collected numerous records anl documents and made many systematic observations of troops on and off duty. They found that the worries about integration were largely unfounded.

Clearly, there are many important differences between race relations among young men in military service and youngsters attending Southern schools.

Military discipline was an important factor in reducing incidents during the transition, but by no means the only one. The Army's study showed that Americans learn to get along with each other, even in unaccustomed situations.

"It's all in your mind. Once you get it out you're O. K. If you can live with whites, you can live with most colored."

The man who said this was from Virginia. The South's traditional racial code does not mean that Southerners are "anti-Negro." Of the thousanls of white southern troops who answered the questions, only a relatively small percentage said they disliked or "hated Negroes.

"Southerners are not without understanding of how Negroes feel, or without sympathy for the idea that Negroes should stand up for their legal rights. Take this problem: "A colored soldier is sitting in a service club reading a magazine. Three white soldiers enter; they stare at the colored man, and one of them says in a loud voice, 'Don't you know this place is for white men only?' "

White infantrymen in Korea were asked, "If you were the colored soldier in this situation, what do you think you would do?" Here are the answers they selected:

7%: Did not answer.

11%: "I'd apologize first and then leave the Club."

7%: I'd put down my book and walk out of the Club."

19%: "I'd just keep on reading and pay no attention.'

14%: "I'd call in whoever was in charge."

42%: "I'd say, 'This place is for anybody who wants to use it.' "

And Southerners picked the same answers as men from other states.

Findings like these make the Army's experience a source of encouragement for those who face the difficult task of ending segregation in the schools.

UNC Guns For .500 Mark Against Deacons Tonight

Carolina will be seeking to even up its season's record at 5-5 tonight when the Tar Heels take on Wake Forest in Woollen Gym.

The Atlantic Coast Conference toss-up, which will be UNC's first scheduled Big Four match of the year, is slated for 8 o'clock following a freshman preliminaty between the Deaclets and the Tar Babies at 6:15.

Carolina currently holds a 4-5 record, discounting the opening game of the season against McCrary Eagles. Among the Tar Heel victims are Clemson, South Caolina, Southern California and Duke.

The team has dropped games to W&M, Maryland, State, L. S. U. and Alabama.

Coach Frank McGuire, throughout his coaching career here and at St. John's, has never had a losing record.

A capacity crowd is expected to be on hand for the traditional battle between the two clubs. The main target of observation, and also the pointer for the Tar Heels, will be Wake's all-America candidate, center Dickie Hemric.

Hemric ,6'-6" senior from Jonesville, already holds a national collegiate scoring record for four years, and every point he scores now means a new record.

Coach McGuire, quizzed yesterday, said he had no idea who would draw the assignment of trying to stop the big Deacon. "We don't anybody who can adequately defend against him," he said, "with the possible exception of Rosenbluth."

Double-teaming Hemric would put Carolina at a distinct disadvantage, because there is not one player among the Wake Forest starting five who desn't know his way to the basket. The other sharp-shooting Deacs are Lefty Lowell Davis ("A terrific player"—McGuire), Maurice George, Ernie Wiggins and Jackie Murdock. To leave one of these men open in favor of doubling against Hemric might prove fatal.

McGuire is uncertain as to his starting quintet. Forwards Jerry Vayda and Lennie Rosenbluth are sure starters, as is guard and co-captain Al Lifson. However, the other two berths are still open, and could be filed by either Frank Goodwin, Paul Likins, Tony Radovich or Bob Young.

Because of the large number of fans expected, students are urged to exchange pass-book tickets beforenoon today (after which time the Athletic Association office in the gym will be closed) for their game ducats. Only a few good seats remained last night.

The freshman game should not prove too difficult for the Tar Babies, who are undefeated and whacked the U. Va. frosh, 84-62, Thursday night.

George's Benefactor Says She's Got New Evidence

There are both bright and dark spots in the very uncertain future of George, the campus collie, according to Mrs. A. M. Jordan of the Chapel Hill Humane Society, who has been trying to clear the dog of the charges which were made last week against him.

George is now in the Humane Society's pens, where he was taken last Monday after three people reported to the Chapel Hill police that he had bitten them. He is slated to remain there for eight more days.

Mrs. Jordan reported that a girl from Chapel Hill's grammar school told her Thursday that she had seen a large dark collie jump a man in an attempt to bite him. When asked if the dog were George, Mrs. Jordan said that the small girl replied, "No, it wasn't George, I know George."

Yesterday, Mrs. Jordan took the child to the pens of the Humane Society to have her say positively whether George was or was not the dog which she had seen attack the man. Upon seeing the campus pet, the girl said positively that he was not the culprit.

Today, Mrs. Jordan will continue to try to obtain more evidence of George's innocence. She is going to take the only person who left his name, when reporting to the police that he had been bitten, Jerry Ashworth of Carrboro, to see George to have him say whether or not the collie is the guilty one.

She said yesterday that Ashworth, when asked to describe the dog which attacked him, described a hook-nosed and multi-colored collie. According to Mrs. Jordan, that is not a description of George.

Mrs. Jordan also said that several people outside of Chapel Hill have offered to take George into their homes if, at the end of his stay at the Humane Society's pens, he is not allowed to come back to his usual haunts in town.

On the darker side of matters concerning the collie's future, Mrs. Jordan reported that the Chapel Hill police do not want George to return to roaming the campus and the streets of Chapel Hill under any circumstances. According to her, they are sick of the whole thing.

"I want him to come back," said George's benefactor. She still feels that George is not the guilty party, but that another collie belonging to one of the fraternities is the one which should be punished for the crimes which have been attributed to George.

Mrs. Jordan concluded saying that if George is not cleared of the charges by the time his 14 days at the Homane Society's pens are up, the Society is still not going to let him out.

"We are going to keep him until we can either get a home for him or he can come to Chapel Hill," she said.

State membership through a redrawing of Senatorial district boundaries. The resolution stated that the question "is a serious and important matter affecting the representation of the people of the state in the Senate." The commission would be given 45 days after adption of the resolution to make its report.

The resolution was the third piece of legislation dealing with legislative reapportionment to be introduced. Both the Senate and House yesterday received measures to rallocate House seats in accordance with 1950 census. Under the bills Cabarrus and Pitt Counties would each lose a House member, leaving them with one representative each, and rocking-which now have one each, would each gain a member.

Blythe is from Mecklenburg county which, along with Guilford, probably would get an additional senator if a Senatorial redistricting bill is passed.

Sen. Adam J. Whitley of Johnston and 12 other senators joined in sponsoring a measure to repeal the 1953 "Secrecy" law which allows Legislative Appropriations Committees to neld closed meetings while considering the state's budget. Prior to 1953 the law required all such meeting to be open to the public—although the law was not observed.

The House, meanwhile, continued the study it began yesterday of the record-breaking 637 millon dollar appropriations measure prepared by the Advisory Budget Commission and introduced in both houses yesterday. Asst.

Tryouts For Teaching Jobs Overseas Slated

There is currently a need for overseas teachers. Approximately 900 elementary and secondary teachers wll be needed in American schools overseas for the 1955-56 school year.

Applicants for these teaching positions will be intervewed at the University's School of Education on Jan. 1 and Feb. 1 from noon to 9 p. m., Dr. Arnold Perry, dean of the School of Educaton, said today.

A nationwide recruitment program is being conducted to staff these schools that have been erected by the army for the benefit of servicemen's children. They are comparable to the better public schools in the U. S. "They offer the same curriculum, supplemented by special classes in native culture with thrs of the countries in which they are located," Dean Perry said.

The high schools are fully accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. The basic qualifications include a Bachelor's Degree, a minimum of 18 semester hours in education courses, a valid state teaching certificate and at least two years of public school teaching experience in the grades or subject fields in which the person plans on teaching.

The minimum age is 25 and the maximum age is 55. All candidates must be currently teaching or attending school to further their academic background. Single teachers with no dependents will be given first consideration, because of the scarcity of family-type housing overseas.

"The welfare of our country is the great object to which our cares and efforts ought to be directed."

George Washington
January 8, 1790

It has been the peculiar blessing of America to have had a succession of great leaders whose first devotion was to all the people.

Without exception, they have taught us that the security of our country begins in the home.

And, of course, it is a basic truth. The strength of America is simply the strength of one secure home touching that of another.

Our first duty to America is our duty to our own homes. We can do honor to George Washington and all our other great leaders in no better way than to make our homes secure.

TWO LOCAL PRESIDENTS, Louis Brumfield of Cobb Dormitory, and Gordon Gray of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, shake hands after a Cobb meeting. President Gray, speaking last week in the first of a series of talks promoted by the Interdormitory Council social committee, told dormitory residents he was "strenuously opposed to any proposed hike in the tuition rates" of the three universities. President Brumfield, from Yadkinville, is active in student politics.

George's Friends Rally To His Aid

By JACKIE GOODMAN

The number of would-be protectors of George the dog seems to have increased over the weekend which reduced the length of his foreseeable future to six days.

Among new additions the list of George's friends are certain pupils of Chapel Hill's grammer school and one of his fellow canines.

Bobby Poston, a pupil in the fourth grade of the Chapel Hill Elementary School, drew up a petition last week which asks for George's return to the streets of town.

The petition which is headed "George is Our Friend," is addressed to the Chief of the Chapel Hill police, and reads as follows:

"Please let George come back to us. We love him and like to say "Hello George," when we meet him at the Post Office or the Bookshop or Y-Court or on the street. We like to give him part of our hamburgers and ice cream cones.

"We think George is a good citizen. We are sorry you get complaints about him, but we think he gets blamed for things he doesn't do just because everyone knows his name. We are sure that he brings happiness to more people than he annoys.

Please bring him back to us."

Bobby, the son of C. F. Poston of the University's School of Business Admiistration, reported that last Saturday the petition had gained 29 names.

The canine friend which came to bat for the campus collie over the weekend is a seeing eye dog owned by Miss Betty Sigle, a graduate student here.

A letter was received by Mrs. A. M. Jordan, the lady who for the past week has been using all of her energy trying to clear George of the charges lodged against him, which came from Dottie, the the seeing eye dog, and which, according to Dottie's mistress, expresses exactly what Dottie would say if she were able to write. Here is what the letter said.

"I want you to know that I am on your side, and I hope you can do something so George can come back. I have several good reasons for this.

"I am a graduate student in the School of Sociology work at the University. I know how George must feel about being blamed for everything any collie does because I am often blamed for what other seeing eye dogs do. For example, they tell us in hotels sometimes that "We can't have a seeing eye dog here, because we once had a seeing eye dog, and it howled at night." Now I don't howl at night, but how can I prove it.

"This is my first year in this University, and when my mistress brought me here in September I was so lonesome, and all the dogs were snobbish and wouldn't play with me. That is all excepting George. Every evening before supper I was allowed to have a run in the yard, and every evening George came to play with me. My mistress said it was good to have me work off some of my excess energy, and I admit that I act a lot better in class when I don't feel so restless.

"Of course, George does have the bad habit of prancing around me when I'm working to distract my attention, and my mistress does get peeved at him, (and me), for it, but I know her pretty doggone well, and I know she doesn't really mind much.

"I am certain that I am talking about the real George, too, because lately there hasnt been any collie come to play with me before supper, and there isn't any collie to walk with me to class or stop by my place for a drink of water. Also lately there hasn't been any collie pestering my mistress with a cold nose so she'll give up in desperation and let me off without having my fur combed and brushed.

"Won't you please make them send George back, Mrs. Jordan, for you see he is th only dog that upholds the spirit of hospitality and friendliness of the University of North Carolina.

Lonesomely yours,
Dottie Sigle, seeing eye dog."

Mrs. Jordan reported yesterday that Jerry Ashworth, the one person who left his name with the police when reporting that a collie had bitten him, told her that George was the culprit. He told her that after seeing George at the Humane Society's pens on Saturday morning.

She added that the police still do not want George to come back to roam the campus walks and streets of the town in spite of the evidence of his innocence which she said that she has presented to them.

"If students are interesed enought in George, would they please go and tell the chief of police what their opinion of George is and ask him to let him come back?" she asked.

"If he (the police chief) was made aware that a lot of people do want George back, he would let him come back," George's number one benefactor concluded.

Formal TV Dedication Held With Chancellors

The state's first educational TV station, the voice of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, opened here Saturday with a telecast of the basketball doubleheader between the UNC Tar Heels and the Wake Forest College featuring the first day's programs.

Formal dedication of the Channel 4 outlet was held Sunday at 7 p.m. when President Gordon Gray of the Consolidated University presented the station to the people of the state. The chancellors of the three divisions of the University, Cary Bostian of N. C. State, E. K. Graham of Woman's College at Greensboro and Robert B. House of UNC at Chapel Hill, spoke on the same program.

Station Director Robert R. Schenkkan and University Provost J. Harris Purks also joined the dedicatory rites.

The station has its 798½-foot tower located on a 65-acre tract atop Ferrell's Mountain in Chatham County. Test patterns have been received as far west as Kansas and Missouri. The effective range of the station, however, is about 65 miles, while reception is fair at 100 miles.

Branch studios are located at each of the divisions of the Consolidated University.

Saturday's programming began with a film program, "This is the Life." Afterwards a 30-minute "live" song and dance program, "Prelude," was telecast from the WUNC studio prior to the presentation of the basketball games between UNC and Wake Forest. A new program and Edward R. Murrow's "This I Believe" concluded the first day's activities.

WC Teacher Resigns After Mag Censure

Novelist Lettie Hamlett Rogers, assistant professor of English at Woman's College, who Friday announced that she would resign from the faculty "in protest of administrative action" censuring the staff of the school's literary amgazine, yesterday said she had "no further comment" on the matter.

The entire staff of Coraddi, the student publication, resigned last Dec. 16 a few hours after Chancellor Edward K. Graham publicly reprimanded them for including in the fall issue of a nude male.

Mrs. Rogers is the author of three novels and specialist in the teaching of creative writing.

She said her resignation was submitted to Dr. Graham Jan. 3 and that, so far as she knows, no official action has been taken by administrative officials concerning her move.

Contacted by telephone yesterday, Mrs. Rogers said she had nothing further to say about her resignation.

Asked for comment, Dr. Graham said it was the policy of the college not to discuss resignations until they have been approved by the executive commitee of the Board of Trustees. Next meeting of the executive committee will be Feb. 17 at Raleigh.

Social Hourglass Sifts Away Again

By ELEANOR SAUNDERS

The social hourglass of 1954 has sifted itself away nito nothingness, yet Carolina socialites have another year and a streamlined new glass of time before them. Among the sands of 1955 will be numerous parties and pinnings, escapes and engagements, weekends and weddings.

NEW LOOK

This promises to be a year of new looks—the full classroom look, the shapeless Dior look, the higher dormitory bill look, and perhaps the George-less look. But with the same people and the same places, bigger and better parties loom on the social horizon. So relax and enjoy it! It's 1955!

After this and varied other vigorous greetings to the New Year, the first weekend didn't seem typical of future predictions and aspirations. But those time-consuming days are nearly upon the Carolina calendar again; so, on second thought, relax and enjoy it after Jan 29!

For instance, KAs, despite the move into a decharred and remodeled house, assembled troops to a study party during the weekend. Early start, anyone?

Pledges and actives of Alpha Delta Pi enjoyed a weekend of festivities in honor of the pledge class. Friday night the traditional formal dance was held at the Carolina Inn with the theme of "Snow Frolics." And Saturday night, members and dates attended a banquet at the Washington-Duke in Durham.

Sigma Chi pledges entertained actives Saturday night with a party at Hartmann's in Durham. And TEP pledges kept the social spirit high with a stag party Friday night.

Observing all forms of social graces during the weekend were Lambda Chis Members from the Washington & Lee chapter were guests at the local chapter house this weekend; and, Sunday the fraternity's new housemother was honored at a tea from 3 until 5.

After the crowded and quite successful New Year's Eve party, Phi Kaps spent a quiet weekend on the home front. But Friday night, pledges of the fraternity entertained pledges from Duke.

A Four Rose party was featured by ATOs during the weekend. The affair was held Saturday night at the Patio. And Thursday night saw Chi Os and ATOs joining forces for a party at the Country Club.

Department Of Peace Washington, D. C.

Representative Harley O. Staggers, a Congressman from West Virginia, has introduced into the House a bill proposing that the government establish a Department of Peace, whose head would be in the President's Cabinet.

A sound proposal if we ever heard one. It is to be hoped the Congress will approve the idea, which is imaginative and far-reaching.

The Secretary of Peace, as we conceive the position, would be a counterbalance to most of the rest of the Cabinet. After the Secretary of State has reported on mounting tensions in Laos and Cambodia and the Secretary of Defense has exhibited the latest atomic-spending index, the Secretary of Peace will rise in the Cabinet Room and indicate to the group a small response to Universal Truths Education classes in Pitteburgh, but an encouraging rise on the Moral Objection to War chart in the province of Travancore-Anchel.

The Secretary, who would be a wise and good man, would probably have to be recruited from the National Education Association or from the National Conference of Christians and Jews instead of from General Motors or Colgate-Palmolive in order that he might have, as they say in Washington, "the right orientation for the job."

His office would be staffed by an undersecretary in charge of Involvement in Mankind and an undersecretary for Spiritual Affairs. The Department would aim massive retaliation at the forces which make friend distrust friend, nation distrust nation. It's seal would bear the motto, "We Are Indeed Our Brothers' Keepers."

However, Rep. Staggers' measure will likely be defeated on the floor of the House. It will be voted down overwhelmingly on logical grounds—that the size of military expenditures rule out any appropriations for a new department.

Then the Speaker will call for the next order of business.

Dr. Schweitzer On Soul-Searching

Unlike Ernest Hemingway, who dislikes, as he recently told a Time Magazine writer, to talk about abstract entities like the soul, the government and its security force have accepted the soul and asserted that it may be searched.

"It has been demonstrated," said a sentence in the Oppenheimer decision, "that the government may search the soul of an individual."

Soul-searching, especially as advocated by a free government, has an ugly sound. It is good to find among Dr. Albert Schweitzer's 80th birthday quotations in the New York Times Magazine a renunciation of the idea.

"To analyze others," Dr. Schweitzer has said, "unless it be to help back to sound mind someone who is in spiritual or intellectual confusion—is a rude commencement, for there is a modesty of the soul which we must recognize, just as we do that of the body."

Perhaps the idea of political soul-searching is temporary and will subside like other deplorable ideas. The wisdom of Dr. Schweitzer, Nobel Prize-winner, missionary, medical expert, scholar of Bach and Goethe, builder of organs, man of arts and letters, is the polished wisdom that transcends the moment and its governmental inquiries into the minds of men.

Clothes Make The Man, But Not With Art

Louis Kraar

JUST WHEN I was ready to write the Woman's College literary magazine hassle off as much ado about nothing the nothing being what the infamous male sketch was wearing), one of the WC faculty members up and quit this weekend over the controversy.

The faculty member, Assistant Professor Lettie Hamlett Rogers of WC's English Department, quit "in protest of administrative action" censuring the staff of "Coraddi," the literary magazine.

Mrs. Rogers' resignation follows that of the entire student staff of the magazine, which quit after Chancellor E. K. Graham said that an undraped sketch of a nude male was out of taste. Graham publicly censured the magazine's staff.

It is unfortunate that Chancellor Graham's rather unnecessary "censure' has now caused WC to suffer one more blow that could have been avoided. Mrs. Rogers is the author of three novels and a specialist in the teaching of creative writing. She is the type faculty member that WC will find difficulty in replacing.

In announcing her resignation Mrs. Rogers made clear that she was quitting in protest of the administrations censure of the student magazine.

"I consider such action and the stated reasons for that action undemocratic in principle and in precedent and contrary to our traditions here of intellectual freedom,' she said.

Mrs. Rogers' resignation seems to turn what was a rather ridiculous controversy into a cause celebre.

When Chancellor Ghaham censured the "Coraddi" staff, the student editor took the position that any art worth creating merited exhibition to the public. The chancellor, on the other hand, felt that other places on campus were more appropriate for such self-expression rather than in a campus magazine.

In short, Chancellor Graham said that uninhibited self-expression (like the nude in "Coraddi") belonged in art galleries and the like. The students said, in effect, that if it's art, it should be exhibited any place that an audience can view it.

The fact that an important faculty member felt that the chancellor's censure was "undemocratic" and contrary to WC's traditions of "intellectual freedom" adds weight to the student argument.

Meantime Chancellor Graham is silent and probably regrets the censure now. And WC is without a literary magazine staff and a valuable faculty member.

A FRIEND sent over a "Bird Watchers Guide" yesterday, and one of the birds bears watching.

The bird in question is a "barrel-chested gross-speaker," which is indentified as a "light-headed bird which is greatly disturbed either by silence or by others speaking." This species of ornithological greatness "appears content only when beak is flapping, emitting innocuous but impressive call," according to the guide.

The "barrel-chested gross-speaker" is usually found "in vicinity of microphone; male variety is more common, but female more exasperating."

Call of this bird (uttered while popping up and down) is "Mister Chairman, Mister Chairman." This species, you can see, is strictly for the birds.

WEATHER HERE lately has changed faster than a coed's mind. On the way to buy an ice cream cone yesterday, I found it sleeting. Sunday was almost like spring, and Saturday was almost beach weather.

Today's prediction: Change.

America's Revolutionary Role

Overcoming The Fires Of Discontent

Edgar A. Mowrer
In The Saturday Review

Back in the late Twenties, when I was chief of the Berlin Bureau of the Chicago Daily News, I received a request for a job from a certain Doctor Paul Joseph Gobbels. The Bureau had no vacancy, but I suggested that the writer call if he ever came to Berlin. This he did. I met a small, dark, embittered man who walked with a limp and wrote limping plays that nobody would produce.

Later Goebbels's name became only too familiar. When he came to Berlin as executive editor of the new Nazi newspaper there I had repeated talks with the outspoken little Nazi.

However much he failed as playwright, he was incomparable as propagandist. Therefore, on one occasion when personally unable to attend a monster rally in the Sportpalast which Goebbels was slated to address, I visited him and asked for a text.

He was willing. "I am announcing our Party's future program."

"What are you going to say?"

"Just this: under National Socialism everything will be different.

"Oh, yeah?' I ironized. "Let's get down to details."

"No details. Lieber Herr Mowrer, a good politician keeps his promises as wide as the sky—and as empty. Any details are bound to disappoint somebody. But by promising a complete change I shall nourish the secret hopes of every single listener—and let it go at that. On such a platform we Nazis are sure to win. Once in power we shall do as we please. But doesn't it sound wonderful: Es wird Alles anders werden"?

To me a the time it sounded silly—and was I wrong! It drew the Germans as a garbage can, even empty, draws flies. It made the prophet-charlatan Adolf Hitler absolute boss of the world's best-educated people. It made little Joe Goebbels Propaganda Minister of the Third Reich.

Some will say that such empty stuff could draw only Germans. Wrong. Today's Communists are using as much of the same technique as their doctrine (the Nazis had none) will allow. They too promise every discontented outsider just what he wants if only he'll support the Communist Party—and wait until the Red Ship comes in!

What is wrong with American propaganda? Essentially this: Among the world's major peoples Americans alone are satisfied with what is—or think they are. Not altogether alone. There are satisfied groups—beati possidentes—everywhere. A few smaller peoples—the Swiss and Scandinavians, the Thais, the Uruguayans, etc.—like us, think more of keeping what they have than of kicking over the applecart.

But the vast majority of the race is dissatisfied to the point of welcoming any change. They are consumed by a fire of discontent. Skillfully the Kremlin stokes this fire. But it did not create t. This flame was ignited by modern technology with its promise of more and better things for everybody. Communism fans the fire—and moves in behind it. America seems to stand against it with a fire extinguisher—and continually gets burned.

What can we do about it?

Two possibilities are plain. First, we can go on just about as now, taking revenge for our failures abroad on our few domestic Commies, pinkos, and independent radicals. It may work. Maybe God will melt the hard Communist hearts, or set them to quarreling among themselves or utterly destroy them. (We have always been lucky.)

Second, we could recognize the tremendous power of our own historical experience and then act upon it. In this case, the President would start by proclaiming as the American goal the creation of a world braver and newer than any seen before, a world where everything (almost!) would be different.

For a century and a half Americans have been consciously building a country unlike others. This we proudly called the new country. Yet recently, irritated beyond measure by the spread of the Red Blight, we have partly shifted emphasis from creation to preservation of the "American way of life. "Our way of life.'" Our way of life has great value. Yet its unique quality has been its hospitality to change. We can not only truthfully, we should logically admit publicly that we intend to remain a dynamic people.

Today the American people alone possess the means and ability to take the empty Goebbelsian slogan and fill it with substantial, peaceful content. No amount of success here would immediately exempt us from the sacrifice of maintaining military preponderance over the Communists until we have beaten them elsewhere. But it would make that sacrifice bearable.

And even—which I do not admit—if we did not overtrump Moscow by publicly acknowledging our revolutionary role in the world, we should not be without all profit. We should doubtless have modified some of our less pleasant recent habits. We should cease to fear, and rather to welcome, contact with our adversaries, relegating the problem of our few domestic spies and traitors from the political to the criminal plane.

We might modify the McCarran-Walter Act so far as it applies to transients. Abroad we might encourage our people to seek out Commies and "neutrals" whether at the diplomatic or the "cultural" table. Have we no faith in our bliefs?

I never yet met a Communist to whom I could not stand up in argument. Who is the more afraid of whom? And we might drop our childish suspicion of the United Nations. With the world's ultimate choice—I say, ultimate—so clearly between enforceable world law for everybody and wars ad infinitum which do we prefer?

All in all, we might find Goebbels's slogan worth trying.

Perhaps Only Touch Is Left

The Reporter

The battle of technology with instinct has seldom been more sharply presented than in the case of the German pigeons.

It seems that out of two thousand homing pigeons sent out from Munich last year, only six found their way home; and out of six thousand sent from Karlsruhe, 3,500 were lost. They were lost, according to a heap of evidence, because they got into beams from a radar apparatus. The electronic guide for man became the destroyer of direction for pigeons.

It is sad that delicate man-made devices should either blunt or cancel the delicate instruments of nature, but this seems to be happening. Amplification of sound has coarsened the ear, artificial illumination has dimmed the eye, and the precipitations of industrial waste in the air can certainly be doing the nose and mouth no good.

Perhaps only touch is left in its pure state, uncorrupted by the machine. Touch, if not feeling.

Rich Thailand Outposts Still Vital—And Weak

Joseph Alsop

BANGKOK, Thailand—In Bangkok, where they like to laugh ,the current joke in the more literate circles is the cover of an American news magazine, showing a handsome portrait of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles with the legend, "He strengthened the outposts."

For Thailand is the richest prize in all the west-rich southeast Asian area which is now the primary target of world Communist infiltration and aggression. And the outposts hereabouts have not been noticeably strengthened.

Despite the contrary advice of Secretary Dulles, one key outpost, northern Indo-China, has already been surrendered. The enemy has been virtually handed the keys to two more outposts, southern Indo- China and the offshore islands of Formosa.

The sacrifice of the other Indo-China outposts has placed the two weak but strategically vital border states, Laos and Cambodia in most deadly danger. If both Laos and Cambodia are allowed to fall, on one in his senses here thinks this charming, feckless, oddly governed country will be able to withstood the resulting increase of Communist pressure. And so the chain reaction will proceed with mounting force.

At home, perhaps, the prospect of this vast upheaval in the world balance of power may still seem comfortably remote. It does not seem so here, for several different reasons.

The first is the simple reason of geography. Back in the bad old imperialist days, when the French seized Thailand's border provinces to form Laos and enlarge Cambodia, they drew the new frontier with the purpose of preparing their next planned move, which was to have been a grab for Bangkok itself. Thus any force concentrated at Sisophon on the Cambodian border, looks right down the throat of any government in Bangkok. It is only 168 miles, and easy walking or driving distance all the way, with no natural defense positions anywhere, between Sisophon and this city.

When the time of more acute danger may probably begin, a couple of years from now, the army of the Viet Minh will comprise somewhere between fifteen and twenty tough regular divisions. The present Thai forces, which are not likely to be effectively increased, comprise an army of about 50,000 combat troops and approximately 15,000 paramilitary police. Hence the unbalance will be overwhelming.

Consequently no allied SEATO or other force could arrive in time to save Bangkok from a determined Viet Minh attack from Sisophon. A relieving force would only "liberate " Thailand after it had been subjugated, piillaged and purged. This being a prospect which few Thais enjoy, the mere appearance of an enemy force at Sisophon, the mere threat to invade, might well bring Thailand down as Joshua's trumpets brought down the Walls of Jericho.

"Massive retaliation" will be complicated to employ in these circumstances. It is much wiser to stop talking about massive retaliation, and to face the hard fact that if Cambodia falls, it is almost sure to be fatal to Thailand, one way or another.

Needed: A New Darrow To Stand For Judicial Integrity

Ed Yoder

At this writing, Junius Scales, finally grappled by the long arm of the Smith Act, has not obtained a defense lawyer.

As former mogul of the Communist Party in the Carolinas, he awaits arraignment on a charge of conspiracy to "teach or advocate" the overthrow by force of the U. S. government.

Much time and law has passed since we waved the Declaration of Independence in the face of the British King, telling him in plain English that whenever people become dissatisfied by government they have the right to destroy it and form a new one. The Smtih Act has visited almost certain sentences on Communist leaders in the past and there is little reason to believe that Scales is not in for the same fate. His is a flimsy case under the strict terms of the Smith Act.

But his failure to gain a spokesman seems to strike at the principle that any man accused under law, bank robber, murderer, or Communist, has the right to a defense equal in potency to the charge against him. The potency of being charged with Communism in these days is great. To cope with that charge, a great lawyer is needed, a man of loyalty, dignity and integrity that will be honored.

It casts a beam of irony on the Scales Case that, come next July, the 30th anniversary of the enlistment of Clarence Darrow, Arthur Garfield Rays, and Dudley Field Malone—three of the top lawyers in the history of American jurisprudence—to defend John T. Scopes in Dayton, Tennessee, will pass.

Is this the tragedy of the Scales trial? Is this the most meaningful single fact involved in the case—aside from the tragic inplications of a man's desertion of his own native philosophy for an alien one?

What has happened since 1925 that makes our great defense lawyers hesitant to take up the fight for a defendant in matters nvolving civil liberties?

The logical choice is this: Either there were giants in the earth in those days or there are all midgets now.

The Civil Liberties Union, which procured the services of Darrow, Hays, and Malone for the young Dayton biology teacher who'd been indicted under the Tennessee "Monkey Law"—a law making it unlawful to teach biological theories assuming the descension of man from lower animals—will, no doubt, get lawyers in time. What will they be like?

None of the three men who defended Scopes had the reputation of a radical. Hays, recently dead, practiced law for a lifetime in the corporation law firms of Wall Street. The overpowering fact about Darrow, Hays, and Malone was that they were men of very stable political and social views.

Somehow, a radical is not the man for the defense of Scales. A great conservative name would capture the imagination and confidence of the rank and file as a radical may not. A man of lofty and unimpeachable political commitments is needed; on the other hand, he like Darrow and Hays must be vitally concerned with First Amendment questions upon which the Smith Act definitely touches.

Clearly, the situation differs from Dayton days. Under the Smith Act, Scales will be charged with teaching the overthrow of the government—not with teaching the overthrow of a ridiculous ignorance. The Smith Act is national law. The law under which John T. Snopes was tried was Tennessee state law; yet it was only one of a cancerous chain of similar laws stretching through at least a dozen other states.

The Scales case, like Scopes', is hopeless. In 1925, the Evolution Trial had promised a final, lock-horns, set-to between the Modernists and the Fundamentalists. The jury was picked with Fundamentalists. The judge was a Fundamentalist. And William Jennings Bryan, the golden tongued mignon of the provincials, pled the case against the teacher.

Behind all of these circumstances which alter occasions, Scales, like Scopes, is a man accused without a capable advocate. The integrity of American court practice needs an advocate as much as Scales. It needs one who will plead a vain case (just as vain as Scopes') and thus become symbolic of American interest in civil liberties.

To defend a Communist in 1955 is dangerous, just as it was dangerous for the senior Kenneth Royal, a graduate of the University, to defend the Nazi espionage agents in the early part of World War II.

It is to be believed, however, that if our belief in the "fair play" we are always talking about still prevails, the reputation of the lawyer who defends Scales will not be denigrated in the process. Darrow's reputation, Hay's reputation, Malone's reputation remained free of suspicion—grew in stature even—after their defense of Scopes.

Will the same fear that has made a ludicrous spectacle of the Wolf Ladejinsky case win out? Or will a new Darrow rise out the maelstrom of confusion to take the side of Scales?—And of American judicial integrity?

Carolina Opens Heavy Week Against Virginia Here Tonight

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

The so-called experts have been saying that Carolina could not run with a running team, but last Saturday night in Woollen Gym Frank McGuire's Tar Heels abandoned their possession-type style of play and all but ran Wake Forest off the court to a 95-78 tune.

The locals were hot as firecrackers. Both teams took the same number of shots, 67. But Carolina hit on 37 of theirs for a 55% average; while Wake Forest dumped 28 of their shots for a 41% average, a very healthy mark, but not quite enough for the occasion. In the first half Carolina sank 19 of 31 shots from the floor. This phenomenal 61% accuracy mark afforded them a 48-40 lead at intermission.

The McGuiremen also dominated the all-important rebounding phase of the game, grabbing 40 to the Deacons 25.

The highly-publicized scoring duel between Wake's All-America Dickie Hemric and Carolina's sensational sophomore Lennie Rosenbluth never quite materialized. Both men double-teamed a good part of the game. Hemric was guarded so closely that his teammates had difficulty getting the ball into him. Rosenbluth volunteered to guard Hemric, but three quick fouls in this role during the opening minutes of the tilt prompted McGuire to take his scoring ace off the 6'6", 227-lb., three-foot wide Deacon tower. Bob Young, also a 6'6" giant then assumed the task of covering Dangerous Dickie, and Young eventually fouled out in the process, late in the game.

Hemric took 23 free throws and made 17 of them. He was held to seven field goals and retrieved only 11 rebounds.

Rosenbluth sank ten field goals and four free throws and grabbed 13 rebounds. He shot only 19 times.

Reliable Jerry Vayda suffered through a miserable four-point first half effort, only to run wild in the last period, tossing in another 20. Vayda also outshot Hemric from the floor with nine field goals.

Tony Radovich, who is not so spectacular but who never seems to make a mistake, worked his back-jack-knife jump shot and four gratis tosses for 18 points. The prettiest shot of the night was his long hook shot from outside the foul circle as the final horn sounded.

Al Lifson, the take-charge floorman, contributed 14 markers and his usual excellent floor game.

But the most pleasantly surprising feature of the night was Bob Young's coming to life. The fair-haired New York sophomore has been the victim of a long, cold streak, but Saturday night he thawed out and hit a sizzling high mark. The six-foot, six-inch husky was the main cog in Carolina's first half attack, repeatedly hitting on long sets from the corner with readly accuracy. He sat out part of the second half after committing his fourth personal, but returned long enough to add another field goal, bringing his total for the night to 15.

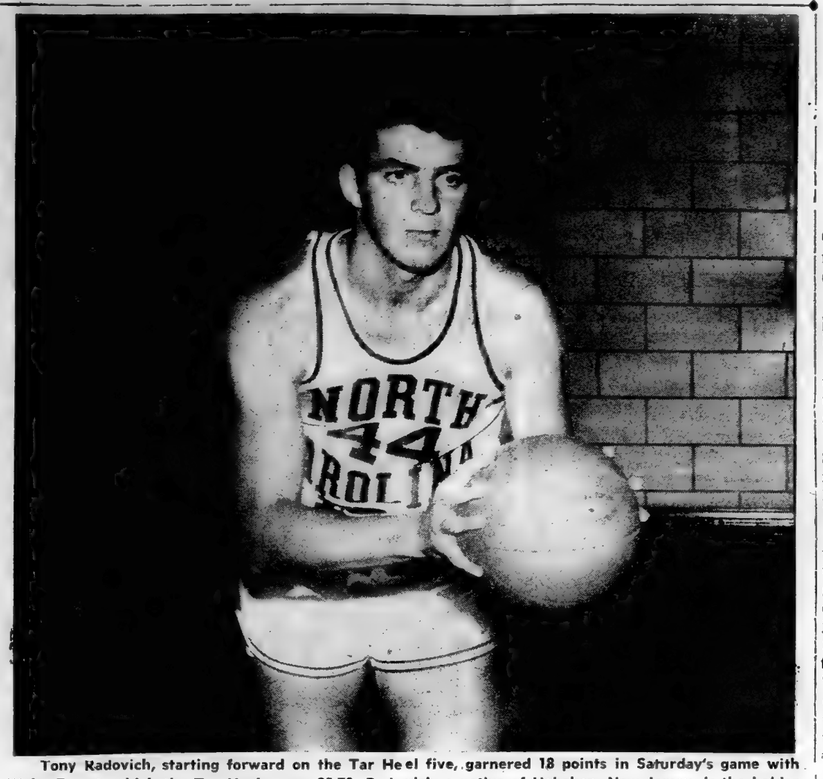
Lifson, Vayda, Rosenbluth, and Radovich never left the game. Paul Likins was the only sub used. Tar Heel mentor McGuire continues to win friends and influence people by such sportsmanlike gestures as going out of his way to tell Wake Forest guard Jackie Murdock to return to the game after the official scorer had ruled him out on five fouls. (Murdock and the Wake Forest coaches said he had committed only four.) He went back in and fouled out later.

The Tar Heels play only three more games here, including tonight's encounter. Ten games, plus the ACC championship tournament remain to be played.

The televising of the Wake Forest-UNC game is supposed to have caused a 2,000 drop in attendance at the Duke-State game in Durham. (Well, you can't please everybody)

Carolina was an underdog going nto the Deacon fracas. . . Furman, with or without Frank Selvy is a regular scoring machine. They set a new national scoring record last Friday night by trampling the Citadel, 154-67, scoring 84 points in the first half. . . Their scoring whiz,nationally second-ranked Darrell Floyd sank 50.



Third-ranked State stands an excellent chance of being No. 1 in the nation this week, No. 1 Kentucky and No. 2 Duquesne having been the victims of ignoble upsets Saturday night. . . Georgia Tech in defeating Kentucky 59-58, is the first team to down the Wildcats on their home court since Janury 2, 1943, 129 games ago. A Southeastern quint had not turned the trick since 1939. Duquesne was slapped down by little St. Francis of Loretta, Pa., 82-72.

Noticed a syndicated sports cartoon in a Virgnia newspaper on Paul Likins, Carolina's Rhodes Scholar-athlete. Whizzer White, Colorado's great All-America football and basketball player, and Boxing Commissioner Eddie Eagan were also Rhodes recipients. . . Likins, co-captain of the Tar Heel five and regular starter for the past three years, is being given a run-for-his-money by sophomore Bob Young. . .

A letter of thanks from Ed Patterson, senior guard on the Carolina grid team, appeared on the Greensboro Daily News sports page recently. . . Patterson was showing his appreciation for being selected on the Daily News All-State football team. . .

A month ago we all were admonishing the University not to even consider breaking football coach George Barclay's contract, since it had a year to run. . . it would be unfair, immoral to do such a thing, we said. . . Last Sunday Bowden Wyatt stepped out of a five-year contract at Arkansas, with three years to run, to sign another five-year deal with Tennessee. . . He had just received a pay raise from $12,000 to $15,000 at Arkansas and the fans had presented him with a shiny, new Cadillac and had raised a $20,000 cash fund for his assistants. . . Is it any less wrong if the shoe is on the other foot?

Tony Radovich, starting forward on the Tar Heel five, garnered 18 points in Saturday's game with Wake Forest, which the Tar Heels won, 95-78. Radovich, a native of Hoboken, New Jersey, is the holder of several New Jersey high school scoring records.

Wilkinson Will Make Cavaliers As Tough As Deacons—McGuire

Varsity Contest Will Follow Freshman Game Against Duke; Tar Babies Still Undefeated

Carolina's Tar Heels, riding along in the Atlantic Coast Conference race in a tie for second place, take on the sixth-ranked University of Virginia Cavaliers tonight in Woollen Gym to open a three-game week of conference battles.

Game time tonight is 8:15 o'clock, following a freshman preliminary contest at 6:15 between the Tar Babies and the Duke frosh.

Friday and Saturday nights the team travels into South Carolina to meet the Gamecocks and Clemson in that order.

The Tar Heels now possess a 3-1 loop record to Virginia's 3-3 mark. Carolina is deadlocked with Maryland (6-2) for the No. 2 spot behind N. C. State.

UNC head coach Frank McGuire, who was well satisfied with his team's showing Saturday night against Wake Forest, said yesterday that Virginia is liable to prove just as tough to conquer. "Virginia has a better balanced team than Wake Forest," he elaborated, "and the team is a good one because of ("Buzz") Wilkinson. I would feel a lot better if I knew we would have a shooting percentage like we did Saturday night."

Wilkinson, who holds nearly all the individual records at Virginia, was the fourth highest scorer in the nation, averaging 30 points per game, throught the first of the year. In a game last season against Carolina he tallied 45 points.

A senior from Pineville, W. Va., Wilkinson last year led the conference in scoring with an amazing total of 814 points.

The Cavaliers, however, have not fared too well this season despite Wilkinsons' work. They have lost to Maryland twice and Wake Forest, with league wins over South Carolina twice and Clemson. Their latest conquest, a non-conference victory, came Saturday night when they trounced V. M. I., 106-84.

Virginia's probable starters will be Wilkinson and Dick Lotts at guards, Austin Pearre at center, and George Grattan and Bob McCarty at forwards.

McGuire will start the same five with which he opened against Wake Forest—Len Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda at forwards, Bob Young at center, and Tony Radovich and Al Lifson at guards. Each one of these Tar Heels scored in double figures against the Deacons. Rosenbluth and Vayda tallied 24 apiece.

Rosenbluth, whose scoring average has dropped considerably since the beginning of the season, still carries a per-game mark of 26.6. Vayda has a 14.1 average while Lifson has a 12.3.

Young, a sophomore who has ben alternating with Paul Likins at center, was the Tar Heel spark until fouling out on Dick Hemric toward the end of the game.

Radovich, New Jersey junior, is improving with every performance. The Wake Forest game was his best of the year.

After tonight's game, there will be only two more home contests for the Tar Heels . . . Duke and N. C. State.

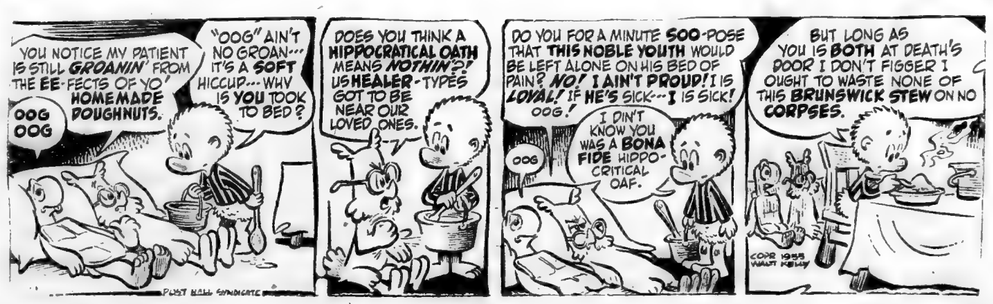
Wisconsin's Alan Ameche Offered Wrestling Pact

P. L. Pinky George, Des Moines sports promoter, said today he will offer Alan Ameche, Wisconsin's All-America fullback, a $100,000 a year guarantee if Ameche will become a professional wrestler.



George said he expects to confer with Ameche at Milwaukee Friday night to offer him a contract and "a 25,000 advance down payment to seal the bargain."

The Des Moines promoter, chief sponsor of wrestling bouts in Des Moines and some other Iowa cities, said he has had no direct conversations with Ameche. He said friends in Wisconsin have been acting as intermediaries in his preliminary contacts with Ameche.

"I don't have any fundamental objections if Ameche also wishes to play pro football," George said.

A Mighty Big Pine . . .

GREENWOOD, S. C., Jan. 10—They cut down the old pine tree here—and, brother, there was a lot of it to haul away to the mill.

Officials of the Millway Lumber Co. figured the giant pine will produce 5,433 board feet of lumber. They doubted that there is another pine standing in the state that would produce that much.

The tree was about 210 years old and measured 53½ inches in diameter. Its full height was 134 feet. The small end of the last leg cut measured 30 inches, and it was 90 feet from the base of the tree.

JAN SAXON (BACKGROUND) AND JOEL CARTER
. . . leads in The Marriage of Figaro, coming here Jan. 17 & 18

Figaro's 'Susanna' Destined For Part

Jan Saxon, who will sing the romantic role of Susanna in The Marriage of Figaro on Jan. 17 and 18, seems to have been destined for the part.

Arias from the opera have always been given to her for study in her voice lessons. She studied the entire Mozart opera in a music history course and sang the part of the Countess in a workshop concert version of the opera at the University of Michigan.

Jan has always wanted to sing two roles above all others. One was the part of Lucy in The Telephone which she sang last year in the Glee Clubs' presentation. The other wish will be fulfilled next Monday and Tuesday nights when she will play Susanna in The Marriage of Figaro.

In the future, Jan would like to interpret Gilda in Rigoletto and the title role in Lucia de Lammamour.

She considers The Marriage of Figaro to be Mozart's best opera aong with Don Giovanni. Jan has said of her role, "Susanna has more to her character than many operatic heroines. The music and plot characterize her. She is very changeful and exciting; the sweet and saucy type."

Jan began her music lessons in her home town, Charlotte, upon the family urgings of her. She spent one summer at the Transylvania Music Camp at Brevard and recalls the "atmosphere of music surrounding you is wonderful for someone in their teens."

While at Brevard, she met the lady who was to be her future music teacher at the University of Michigan where an studied for two years before transferring to UNC in 1953.

Jan has been studying voice with Walter Golde since that time She feels that he has given her confidence in her singing which lessens the stage fright she still feels.

Jan is excited for another reason with The Marriage of Figaro. "It will be a grand birthday present for me. I will be 21 on the day of the first dress rehearsal."

Jan, who was acting before she started in voice training, still regards the art highly and realizes its importance to any singer.

She is undecided about her future. She may continue her studies with the music department and Walter Golde for another year or she may make the big step and attempt to engage herself with one of the opera companies in the U. S.

SAE's Johno Joins George In Humane Society's Pens

By JACKIE GOODMAN

George, the dog who has been called by some people a campus institution and by others a menace to Chapel Hill, is no longer the only canine under suspicion of being the collie which has been biting people lately.

According to Clyde Burgess, a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Johno, the fraternity's collie, was taken Monday by the Chapel Hill police to the Humane Society's pens. Burgess said that Johno will be seen sometime this week by the people who reported that they were bitten by a collie so they may determine whether or not he is the guilty party.

Concerning the possibility of Johno's being the culprit, Burgess said, "We don't think he is, but he could be." According to him, the fraternity has had the collie for about two years.

The latest addition to the forces which have been gathering in George's defense is a sign which appeared yesterday on the front of the Intimate Bookshop and which is headed, "Who wants to help George?" The rest of the red, blue and white placard gives the Bookshop's advice to those who do want to help the dog regain the freedom of once again roaming the streets of town and the grounds of the University. It reads as follows:

"Write, phone, or see Chief of Police Sloan and say you think:

a) George is a good character

b) George is a campus landmark. George must stay!"

Mrs. Paul Smith of the Bookshop said yesterday that they "have been asked steadily" by many people about the fate of the collie who used to spend much of his time drowsing in the shop's doorway. She jokingly said that "George is interfering serious! with our business."

Mrs. A. M. Jordan treasurer of Chapel Hill's Humane Society who has been exerting all of her energy in producing evidence of George's innocence since his imprisonment, said yesterday that nothing new had happened as far as she knew. She did say that she "had been to the fraternity that owns the other dog and told them that they would have to shut him up." She said later, however, that she did not know that the police had taken the SAEs' collie to the pens.

Mrs. C. F. Poston, mother of Bobby Poston, who last week circulated a petition which was addressed to Chief Sloan and asked that George be returned to Chapel Hill, said yesterday that her son told her that he had turned the petition in to the police.

Mrs. Poston said, "I think that petitions like Bobby's stuck around in Y-Court and places like that would do more good than people going in individually to see him (Chief Sloan)."

Chief Sloan said yesterday that he didn't know what would happen yet. He added that both dogs will have to stay in the Humane Society's pens around 14 days according to law.

Due to a proofreading error in the story on George which appeared in yesterday's paper, Jerry Ashworth, who was taken Saturday by Mrs. Jordan to determine whether George was the collie that bit him or not, was reported to have said that the campus collie was the guilty dog. That is not true. Ashworth told her that George was not the dog that bit him.

High School Student Takes Life With Rifle

A Chapel Hill high school student shot and killed himself in his rooming house here late Monday night.

According to investigating police officers, Michael Mason, 17, apparently put a .22 rifle to his forehead and pulled the trigger. He left a note pinned on the bedspread in which he said he was "emotionally and mentally unable to cope with the problems of life."

The death was an "obvious suicide," according to Assistant Orange County Coronor, George A. Cannady. He said Mason died within a few minutes after firing the fatal single blast around 11:25 p. m.

Mason was a high school senior who came here from Charlotte last fall. He was rooming at the home of Mrs. C. C. Pickard, 121 North St. He had ben under psychiatric care at Memorial Hospital where he had an oppointment yesterday. Mason was a cousin of Mrs. Albert Suskins of Chapel Hill; his parents are divorced. His mother and stepfather, Mr. and Mrs. J. Weisman of New York City, flew here yesterday morning.

University students who also lived at the house immediately called police and an ambulance after hearing the shot in Mason's room last night.

Investigating policeman Graham R. Creel and Charles Etheridge said Mason had ben taken to the hospital when they arrived, but the rifle, an empty cartridge in it, was lyin on a rug on the floor near the bed.

In State Legislature:

House Told Integration Ramifications Stretched

RALEIGH, Jan. 11 (AP)—The House was told today that possible "ramifications" of legislation to give local school authorities complete control over the enrollment and assignment of school children have been "exaggerated."

This opinion was stated by C. R. Holoman, school budget analyist for the Budget Bureau, in answer to questions as he discussed details of appropriations recommended by the Governor and Advisory Budget Commission to operate the schools during the next two fiscal years.

Bills to give the local units complete control over assignment and enrollment of pupils were introduced in the House and Senate last Thursday after Governor Hodges delivered his "State of the State" message to the Legislature. In his message, the Governor endorsed recommendations of an advisory committee which recommended local control of enrollment and assignment. The committee was appointed to study what steps North Carolina should take as a result of the Supreme Court decision which held school segregation is unconstitutional.

While the House continued its study of the 637 million dollar budget proposed for the next biennium, the Senate began study of the state's tax laws and the request of the governor and Advisory Budget Commission for tax increases totaling 52 million dollars. Revenue Commissioner Eugene Shaw told how his department made its estimates of how much the state can expect to collect from its various taxes.

The House and Senate were told of plans to complete the budget study by Jan. 20 so that public hearings on the spending and tax proposals can be started. By then the House will have heard the tax proposals explained and the Senate will have studied the proposed appropriations.

New legislation today included a bill by Sen. Claude Currie of Durham, a member of the Advisory Budget Commission, to change the date for time for filing intangible tax returns from March 15 to April 15. Last week Currie introduced a measure, which has administration support, to change the deadline for filing income tax returns from March 15 to April 15.

Crack Baseball Player Lost When Brodie Turned To Drama

A crack baseball player was lost when Steve Brodie decided to keep his eye on the theatre instead of on the ball.

Brodie, co-starred in The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial, coming to Memorial Hall on Friday and Saturday of next week, is an all-around athlete. He played football, semi-pro baseball and semi-pro hockey after schooling at Wichita, Kan.

His first job was as an assistant golf professional at Meadowlark Country Club in Wichita, but grease paint interested Brodie more than golf. Determined to be an actor, he started his career as a property boy in a Salina, Kan. stock company.

After a summer with Colonel Fairchild's Stock Players in a traveling tent show, young Steve joined the Cape Stock Company in Boston, where he played every type of character role from boys to old men.

Coming to California, Brodie won a role in Money Girls at the Playtime Theatre in Hollywood. Shortly after, he was signed to a contract by MGM and handed a feature role in "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo." Brodie has given memorable perormances in such other outstanding pictures as "Walk In The Sun," "Crossfire" and "Story of Will Rogers."

Today, if it hadn't been for Brodie's hankering for greasepaint, he might have been playing pro-baseball, football, hockey or golf—any of which undoubtedly would have netted him a comfortable living, but none of the deep satisfaction he gets as an actor.

He'll be seen locally playing the role of Lt. Steve Maryk in the Paul Gregory production of The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial, a new play by Herman Wouk based on Wouk's best-selling Pulitzer prize-winning novel, The Caine Mutiny, with staging and direction by Charles Laughton.

Steve Brodie and Wendell Corey as they appear in The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial which The Carolina Playmakers are bringing to Chapel Hill this coming Friday and Saturday. Tickets are on sale now at the Playmakers Business Office in Abernethy Hall.

Memorial Hall For $1...

Basie, Boys Here Today

Count Basie and his orchestra will be the big attraction on campus today as they present a concert of jazz and blues in Memorial Hall under the auspices of Graham Memorial Activities Board and the Interdormitory Council Social Committee.

The concert, to last from 3:30 to 6 p.m., will feature the variations in jazz which have become well-known on college and university campuses throughout the nation.

The Count Basie Orchestra has been given top notices by critics for their Carnegie Hall concerts and have been titled "The Rythmic Rampagers" by jazz and swing specialists.

Harvard University further boosted the Basie group's reputation by its announcement that it "was its top choice among dance bands."

The Basie "All American Rhythm Section" has played for concerts and proms at colleges and universities all over the country including the University of Pennsylvania, University of Virginia, Amherst, Princeton, Yale, Michigan and many others.

Basie, who has been dubbed "the sepia Swing King," has been leading his group throughout the entanglements of jazz since 1936. His performances are unique in that they afford three variations: blues, boogie woogie and jump.

One of the high spots of today's performance will undoubtably be the "The Royal Suite" in three movements. This suite will feature Basie and various soloists of the band in their, as one commentator has put it, "steamy and rocking" style.

Duke Prof Says Cigs Cause Some Cancer

DURHAM, Jan. 11 (AP)—A Duke University pathologist said last night there is "no doubt" tobacco tars cause some lung cancer.

Dr. E. Stanfield Rogers, assistant professor in the Duke Medical School and cancer specialist, told the Durham Exchange Club that "definite evidence" exists to link cigarette smoking with cancer.

"A great number of substances have been taken off the market under the Pure Food and Drug Act where the evidence is not nearly so conclusive as cigarette cancer," he said. Cigarettes, he pointed out, are not covered by the law.

Dr. Rogers, who described himself as a "continuous smoker," gave a brief background of the cigarette—cancer controversy. He said people, "for some reason," have been "trying to hang something on tobacco" ever since it was discovered.

"We have absurd groups on either side," he continued. Those who say cigarettes produce no cancer and those who say cigarettes produce all cancer are equally absurd.

"The main problem," he said, "is how many tumors cigarettes are producing." He confessed: "We don't know."

Many agents can produce tumors and cancer, Dr. Rogers said. "In some companies," he continued, "where they have to work with known cancer producing agents, they put older men in the work." He said this was done in the belief the workers will die of something else before cancers develop and kill them. He did not name any of the companies.

The One In The Marriage Of Figaro:

Resembles 18th Century Orchestra

By WILLIAM EATON

The score of Mozart's comic opera, The Marriage of Figaro, was written for an Eighteenth Century orchestra. Therefore, in making up the 30 piece orchestra which will play this score for the UNC Music Department's production of the opera next Monday and Tuesday nights, Dr. Wilton Mason, musical director, has tried to establish the original balance of instruments for which the music was written.

Dr. Mason has done this by using a smaller number of string instruments and increasing the woodwinds and brassos. The latter, he points out, will, "throw into relief the careful, subite scoring of Mozart writing."

Also included will be a harpsichord, not generally used today in opera orchestras. Dr. Mason said this instrument is of particular importance to all Mozart music, and The Marriage of Figaro includes parts written for it, to accompany difficult passages of dry recitative. Miss Carolina Sites, graduate assistant in the Music Department, will play the instrument.

All of the instrument playing faculty and graduate assistants of the department are included in the orchestra. Lead clarinetist will be Dr. Glen Haydon, chairman of the department, who studied music in Paris and has played in leading symphony orchestras in the U. S. Dr. Haydon usually plays the viola, but has returned to his original instrument for this occasion.

The opera, a full length production, will be sung in English. Performances will be given in Hill Hall at 8:30 p.m. next Monday and Tuesday nights, and all seats are reserved for $1. Mail orders will be accepted and tickets will be held until the evening of the performance.

Dr. George Says Most Names In

"Practically all" copies of the petition calling for continued segregation in state schools are in, according to Dr. W. C. George, originator of the petition.

There are "still a few outstanding," said the UNC professor of anatomy yesterday concerning the copies of his petition which have been circulating since last Nov. 18.

The next step in Dr. George's campaign agains integration will be to present his petition to the State Senate and House of Representatives during the present Legislative session. However, Dr. George said yesterday that he could not say definitely when he would take the petition to the Legislature. "It will depend upon the situation in Raleigh. . . I anticipate before many days," he said.

The document, which has been circulating for almost two months, calls upon the Governor and the state Legislature "to do everything in your power to maintain separate schools for white and Negro pupils.' It termes segregation a "biological-social problem," and stated that "the members of the two races signing this petition wish to live on terms of peace and good will and helpfulness with one anoher under a program of separateness in social life."

Vim, Vigor & (Yawn) Vitality

The sign in Sutton's says, "Special: $1.25 Hadacol, now 89c. For Pep, Vim Vigor and Vitality! (Save 36c)" But pre-exam lethargy has set in and nothing Sutton's can do will save us.

The spurious spring, the late, phony June in January has had a lot to do with it. We saw the first cotton dress of the year worn by a coed on January 4 and yesterday, a week later, a crocus bud which ventured bravely above ground in the Arboretum got what it asked for—a rude dousing in a 33 degree rain.

An ancient law of physics, meanwhile, has come to apply: "If a thing's a-goin', it keeps on a-goin', but if it's a-settin', it keeps on a-settin'." To those few who last night turned out to hear Rise Stevens or to see the basketball game, our compliments. They were in a minority. The somnolent multitude merely stretched, their heavy eyes half-focused on a textbook, and contemplated an early slumber.

The surging currents of world power politics do not touch this shore. Tottering empires, clashing ideologies must get along without our attention. Pep, vim, vigor and vitality are for February or March or sometime—not for two weeks before exams, even at a 36c saving.

The True Nature Of The Struggle

President Eisenhower, in his State of the Union speech, explained the meaning of co-existence in words that deserve more than passing attention. They are worthy of remembering, because they lift the frustrating battle between communism and democracy above the peninsula of Indo-China and the plains of Germany and place it in a higher context.

It is of the utmost importance that each of us understand the true nature of the struggle now taking place in the world.

It is not a struggle of economic theories, or of forms of government, or of military power: At issue is the true nature of man. Either man is the creature whom the Psalmist described as "a little lower than the angels," crowned with glory and honor, holding "dominion over the world" of his Creator; or man is a soulless, animated machine to be enslaved, used and consumed by the state for its own glorification.

It is, therefore, a struggle which goes to the roots of the human spirit, and its shadow falls across the long sweep of man's destiny. This prize, so precious, so fraught with ultimate meaning, is the true object of the contending forces in the world.

Contessa Film Is Cinderella With A Punch

Louis Kraar

"LIFE IS sometimes like too many bad movies," Humphrey Bogart philosophizes in one of the opening scenes of "The Barefoot Contessa."

But the show on the shoeless contessa is one of life's unusually good movies, a Cinderella story with a sex angle. As one viewer remarked on leaving the Varsity, where the film played, "It's more like a novel than a movie."

Cinderella (Ava Gardner), a dancer in Madrid of little more than local fame, gets her big chance when millionaire producer Kirk Edwards (Warren Stevens descends upon a Spanish cafe to "discover" Miss Gardner.

Edwards, of course, brings his writer-director (Humphrey Bogart), a blonde "made in Hollywood," and his public relations man (Edmond O'Brien). Miss Gardner turns out to be as temperamental as she is lovely, and it is left to Bogart to persuade her to leave the Spanish cafe for Hollywood.

In the course of arguing, the viewer learns that Miss Gardner has lived in "dirt," but that she has never sold her charms. And finally, leaving her shoes behind as an excellent, though obvious, symbol, Miss Gardner agrees to a screen test.

"THE REST is an old story," Bogart says himself in the sparkling narrative, but it only applies to Miss Gardner's rise to movie fame. After that, it's anything but an old story.

As the personification of every male's dream girl, Miss Gardner is still an unhappy girl. She needs a prince charming, but even the rich (she soon learns) are dirty. So, aside from mysterious meetings with servant boys, the matinee idol is without a man.

Bogart, as a director and writer, becomes the sexy Cinderella's chief confessor, but he's more of a priest than a lover, having otherwise committed himself to a pert script girl.

Finally, prince charming arrives in the form of a count (Rossano Brazzi), and Miss Gardner, who heretofore had cold-shouldered even the well-heeled Romeos of the international set unfreezes.

BOGART

. . . confessor

On Miss Gardner's wedding night (she's now the contessa), her count tells her he was emasculated in the war. And the barefoot contessa knows she can never really have her prince charming.

The contessa, deciding . . . confessor that a child would make the count happy, takes steps toward having one. When the count learns of the affair, he shoots his wife and the would-be father, ending Miss Gardner and the story.

I HESITATE to talk about symbolism for fear of sounding arty, but the contessa tale is full of it. As a matter of fact, at times it perhaps hits one too obviously.

Miss Gardners penchant for leaving her shoes lying about drives home the cinderella angle down to the her last scene, in which Bogart removes the shoes from her lifeless body.

The rich and the poor are skillfully contrasted throughout in a manner that rivals author F. Scott Fitzgerald for depicting classes. The contessa becomes of a symbol of the poor girl who never finds her place among the rich.

And the dialogue is full of life, comments on life, and at times wit. Sample: A Hollywood blonde asks what Miss Gardner has that she (the blonde) hasn't got. And Bogart's girlfriend answers: "What she's got, you can't even spell."

'You Mean Li'l Ole Me?'

'Liberals' & 'Conservatives'

Rep. John Umstead

In The Chapel Hill Weekly

We hear more and more about whether this member or that member (of the state General Assembly) is a liberal or a conservative.

Having been accused from time to time of being an ultra-liberal I have, during the past several years, given some thought to what is meant by the two terms. Over the years I have watched those who were called liberals and those who were called conservatives in their reaction to proposed legislation.

In the main those called liberals have been those most apt to recognize necessary services that the state should render its citizens and who were willing to raise the money to pay for these services although it might mean more taxes for themselves as well as for others.

Those called conservatives have been those who seemed to minimize necessary services and who wished to raise only those taxes that were absolutely necessary even though such action meant sacrficing many services that make life worth living in our state.

The real attitude of these groups appeared when a bond issue for secondary roads and school buildings was passed on by the voters. The liberals supported the bond issue because they saw in it a better way of life for those who lived in the rural sections. The conservatives said that neither the proposed roads nor the school buildings were necessary and cautioned the voters about going into debt.

That bond issue took place in 1949, the people approved the bonds, and the program was almost completed within, a three-year period. Today there are very few of our citizens, even of the ultra-conservative class, who will not admit that this bond issue, instead of damaging the state's economy, has greatly improved it. . .

The basic attitudes of conservatives and liberals is also demonstrated by what has taken place in the field of agriculture in the last 15 years. When improved farm machinery came on the market the conservative attitude was that the mule and plow were good enough and that no farmer should go into debt for a tractor.

What has happened to the picture? Now the mule has almost been forgotten while the most prosperous farmer is looking for the most improved machinery although he may have to go in debt to get it. He has found that sound spending for necessities, and even for some things that are not necessary, is wisdom. . .

After giving the matter due thought and consideration I have come to the conclusion that a liberal is a person who thinks we should spend money for necessary services even though it hits his pocketbook. He definitely puts human values above monetary values. . .

As I stated in the beginning, I have been accused of being too liberal. Whether or not I am too liberal is a matter of opinion. I simply state that I am a firm believer in the Golden Rule. During the current session of the Legislature, I expect to be in the camp of the liberals.

Ike Can't Turn Down Draft If GOP Timetable Succeeds

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — The major parties have begun to compete with one another in the effort to wring maximum advantage from their "new look" Presidential nominating conventions and campaigns.

Democrats tentatively announced last Friday that they would open their 1956 convention Monday, August 27. This is about five weeks later than usual, but carries on the custom of a Monday opening by which delegate travel need no break into the previous work week.

A Republican subcommittee met next day and tentatively approved a September, 1956, convention to meet the week following Labor Day. If their timetable stands, it will be the first time since 1888 that they will hold their convention after the Democrats.

Democrats who had carefully canvassed the 1956 calendar before they set their own date are raising the question of whether Republicans can make their date stand because it runs into a period of historic Jewish religious observances.

Jewish religous authorities confirm the following schedule:

In 1956, their "Ten Days of Repentance" will begin at sundown Wednesday, September 5, with Rosh Ha' Shona, the Jewish New Year, and conclude Sunday, September 16, with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. It was said that the overwhelming majority of American Jews are of the orthodox or conservative faith and observe this rite.

It would appear therefore that the Republicans are squeezed during the first week of September between the national holiday, Labor Day, which is Monday, September 3, in 1956, and sundown Wednesday, September 6. All of the second week in September is embraced within the Ten Days of Repentence.

Unless Republicans can be reassured on this point, it would appear to fix their first possible September, 1956, date as Monday, September 17, or — making an allowance for travel time — Tuesday, September 18.

Democrats decided that it would at the very least not be tactful to meet during the first part of September, and the Jewish authorities consulted agree with them.

The fact that Republicans propose to re-nominate President Eisenhower does make it possible for them to run a very short campaign. Their candidate will necessarily be in the pubic eye up to that point.

They are indeed by design creating conditions which will make it impossible for the president to refuse a draft. The 1956 election will be held Tuesday, the campaign period would be very short.

A new candidate simply could not be built up in so short a time.

CAMPAIGN SMILE

. . . coming up again in '56?

It is permissible to wonder whether the President, a political novice, really understood this when he expressed approval in White House conferences of a September nominating convention. Of course, if he did understand it, that is tantamount to an admission that he is running.

Democrats certainly expect that they will have to defeat Eisenhower. Yet in the accidental game of politics there is always room for prudence and a second line of defense. When the Republican National Committee with its large number of experienced members meets, the present tentative proposal will get a searching scrutiny.

Reaction Piece

No 'Plotting' In Presidency Prediction

David Mundy

Any relation between this column and one that has been proofread is purely coincidental. I am not complaining about any special persecution, but I do still smart from the blow delivered a few columns back when my "repressed desires" came out as "depressed desires." I would like to assure everyone that I have none of the latter.

I hope that the rumored proofreader doesn't take this as a personal attack or an attempt at character assassination. Still, he has made me look more foolish than has anyone else.

And those headlines that "fly" over this column aren't my own compositions. After last week I'm even tempted to disclaim them entirely. I was really arguing a case against the hypothesis that intra-party divisions are bad for the country. The headline made it sound like an apology for divisions within the Republican party.

Lest the suspicion continue that I hold a political brief for potential president Manning Muntzing, I would like to staunch the vein of rumor.

I would go President Creasy one better, and say that campus government is a necessary evil.

It has a multitude of aspects that I abhor, but still it should have some competency at the top! My thesis, that Muntzing will be the next president, is based on logic of the situation:

Muntzing has a passable record of achievement.

He is almost the only campus politico who has done more than make glowing promises.

He is largely responsible for the successful activities of the IDC.

Considering that he is the "one" who has actually done anything, I can only foresee his being the next president.

And that was the sole basis for the prediction. Actually, I think that SPer Jim Turner would turn in a more efficient performance as president. And the potential of potentials, David Reid, is one of my best friends.

The only other alternatives which the SP can offer are its unknowns—the do-nothings and know-nothings with the bright and shining smiles, not to omit a glad-hand and a multitude of friends. But then the UP would carry the field, their party being to a greater extent organized on the "multitude of friends" principle.

I am no propagandist for Muntzing. Indeed, I probably owe him na apology. A propagandist would have been more subtle in even mentioning his name. There is no plot afoot. I've neither seen nor talked to Muntzing in at least a month. Plotting?

Who's a paranoiac? This is rapidly becoming one of the favorite questions in the strange little corner where politics and amateur psychology join. The thesis, which I have heard advanced by at least two professors, goes something like this:

'Paranoids (just use a big word—few will know what it means anyway) are people who have delusions of grandeur and the feeling that someone is persecuting them or leadng some kind of conspiracy against them. These people tend to project their attitude to a naional level. Someone is conspiring against the state, they say.'

Then comes the implication that, since a lot of people think the Communists are conspiring against the state, these people are paranoiac.

At this point the terms "McCarthyism" and "prevailing climate of fear," are interjected into the lecture. The professor has to do this, though; otherwise someone might not know that paranoiacs are something "bad."

Should the thesis hold that people who fear some conspiracy are paranoiacs, the label would have to be pinned on the very liberals who davance it. They are the ones who forever lambast the Wall Street gang, big business interests, Texas oil-millionaire fascists, Nixon, Dixon, and Yates, not to omit state patrolmen who follow one all the way from Zebulon to Raleigh so that they can catch you speeding.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others . . . . Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was scratching his platinum mane (he insists it is not gray, nor white) with a dainty hoof and perusing some . . . notes?

"It's supposed to be a femme reporter's story of the Dixie Classic Finals," The Horse said. "But it beats the oats outa me."

Oh,

"It is somewhat not to the point," The Horse elaborated. "Can you figure that?"

Well, hadn't The Horse said a femme wrote it?

"You've got something, Roger me bhoy." The Horse snapped gingerly. (His favorite food is Ginger Snaps.) "Here, read it."

A Woman Looks At Basketball, I started.

"To yourself," The Horse added quickly. This distaff-reporter went as follows:

A SOMEWHAT cynical visiting coach said when asked how he was treated at a basketball game in the Coliseum:

"Oh, everything was on the up-and-up, to be sure! The floor was flat, the ball was round, and the lights were on."

But the Classic held in post—Christmas week, any y-clept Dixie, was much, much more than that. First of all, our own Tar Heel team was in the finals and came out with third place;

Then there was "Showboat" Hundley, of West Virginia, a sight to behold when dazzling his opponents with nimble dexterity in ball-handling . . . and handsome as a matinee idol when he was still, but this was unfortunately seldom;

Then . . . All-America Hemric, of Wake Forest; Semonovich of Minnesota, and what a hunk of man! You had to see him to believe him, and even then you didn't And still more. . .

Well, you all know by now that we beat highly touted Southern Cal on the first day—played State to a state of jitters (and a 3-point loss for us) on the second day; and BEAT DOOK on the third day, as a happy omen of things to come.

The championship game, State vs Minnesota, was the finest exhibition of nip-and-tuck fast basketball ever seen in the Coliseum. It was a great Dixie Classic, with even 8th placing Cornell unveiling a great (and handsome!) player in Sheehy. And let me say that the State fans can rudely boo Al Lifson all they please, for my money he was one of the two best floormen in the Classic. And Minnesota's Mencel could outrun anything this basketball-rabid reporter of yours has ever seen.

From a speculative woman's point of view, the Classic queen—a West Virginia lass—was worthy of the wolf-calls she invoked from the crowd when she presented the trophies. The boys are sometimes discerning of something other than 38-26-36's. . . And it was a sort of Male Beauty Contest, as well, this Classic, with lots and lots of stunning men for the girls to gaze upon, when the teams took the floor.

Marty Daugherty of Duke is simply a dream . . . if you like tall dreams. Roy Irving, of Southern California, is another glamor boy, and should step from his campus right into a movie studio. And Hundley, of West Virginia, for all his fancy dribbling and ball-spinning shennanigans, has looks into the bargain. But by far the handsomest Apollo in sight was our own Bob Young. And Jerry Vayda would be the ideal man to be shipwrecked with because he imparts a feeling of security . . . as well. And Coach McGuire is shrewd in playing a slow-down game, because the fair sex will simply storm the gym for the games just to see how daring and dauntless Handsome Bob looks when he stands utterly still and disdains the State and Duke players' taunts for him to put the ball into play. Really, girls, you are missing something if you do not insist on your dates taking you to all the games. Hollywood Scouts, please stay away until 1958.

Why, even one of the referees was handsome! Tommy Bell. . . And just oodles of good-looking coaches, not to mention how cute the Deaks' Bones McKinney was when he would moan and writhe and groan as the play unfolded. His actions are fabulous . . . and he is so good-looking!

Among the audience, Consolidated President Gordon Gray was easily the most distinguished and romantic looking, as our eyes roved the boxes and galleries.

It was all wonderful. Even the basketball played was wonderful, and after all, that was what we went to see . . . after we had seen everything else more important, first. And what a thrill it was when our men walked out to get their trophies, with Tony Radovich and Lenny Rosenbluth getting the biggest hand of the crowd among our boys. Co-Captains Al Lifson and Paul Likens, our Rhodes Scholar received the large team-cup presented to our great team and wonderful coaches.

To the losers . . . tears; to the winners . . . cheers! They were all just out-of-this-world. And whoever designed Carolina's new uniforms should get some praise—the blue warm-up jackets piped with white were easily the best-looking there. State's red is . . . well, too red. I think Coaching assistant Butterball—I am told that is his name?—Anderson should consider Lelong Red when he restyles the uniforms. However, from the looks of things, State may not look too hot the next time our Tar Heels meet them. . . P. S., I do hope you strictly basketball buffs have already read your local sport-sheets for the unimportant details such as ratings, percentages and the like. We had meant to include this sort of thing, but there was just too much of other and first-importance interest to report. And who wants to make a bet that Maryland will not be the Conference Championship Playoffs? They should be! Are they good-looking. . . !

"So?" The Horse asked, when I had finished.

I thought it all the more reason the management of Case's Castle should set aside seats for us lads. I mean, how can you enjoy a game when a dame is cheering for some Tower of Pisa because he is so good-looking? And if you holler 'Ya bum!' at a good-looking blind man in a striped shirt, you'll get cold soup for three nights running!

"I'm contacting Dook, ugh, and Wake Forest on that," The Horse promised. "We'll get somewhere."

In Case's Castle Ho-ho. Ho-ho-ho-

Tar Heels Take Second In ACC With 96-87 Win

Over The Hill

By FRED BABSON

Staunch N. C. State basketball fans were probably hopping mad yesterday morning when the results of the national team ratings as conducted by the United Press came out. The UP poll, a consensus of coaches' opinions, dropped State from third to fourth place, despite its fine 13-1 record and the losses suffered by the top two teams, Kentucky and Duquesne during the past week. These two teams held onto their one, two ratings, respectively; and La Salle moved up to the third spot, the position occupied by State the previous week.

However, the Wolfpack rooters undoubtedly had their ruffled feathers smoothed by the Associated Press ratings, which came out last night. The AP poll lifted State to second place in the standings. Kentucky held onto No. 1, while Duquesne fell to third, and La Salle was fourth.

Carolina would probably be rated among the top 20 teams in the country, but for their disastrous journey into the deep South last week. On the heels of their excellent third place finish in the Dixie Classic, the Tar Heels suffered humiliating defeats at the hands of LSU and Alabama.

Mixed reports came back as to why UNC's showing was so poor on that trip. The two most cogent alibis seem to be that the weather was unusually hot and the Tar Heels were unusually cold.

The locals will have a chance to fatten up their record this week. They meet South Carolina (0-7 in the ACC) Friday and Clemson (0-6 in league play) Saturday. Clemson is sporting one of the conference's top scorers in Bill Yarborough, and is capable of pulling an upset on their home court.

The latest figures on ACC individual scoring show Buzz Wilkinson of Virginia, first, with a 31.2 average; Dickie Hemric of Wake Forest, second, with 29.5; Bill Yarborough of Clemson, third, with 28.8; Lennie Rosenbluth of Carolina fourth with 26.6; and Ronnie Mayer of Duke fifth with 23.1.

The only other UNC player in the top 20 is Jerry Vayda with an average of 14.1, good for fourteenth. Al Lifson's 12.3 average is twenty-first best in the loop.

Meanwhile, a big commotion is stirring to determine for sure if the televising of UNC home games is going to result in drops in attendance at neighboring schools' games. Duke claims they lost 2,000 heads to last Saturday night's State fracas in Durham.

This week's Sporting News All-Sports section, in a story by Harold Rosenthal, fired Carolina football coach George Barclay. The erroneous bit of misinformation in Mr. Rosenthal's story listed Barclay as one of the postseason casualties.

The fact of the matter is that Barclay was given a vote of confidence by the Carolina Athletic Council; his three-year contract, which has one more year to run, was honored.

Duquesne, last week's No. 2 and this week's No. 3 team in the AP poll, dropped another one Monday night, their second in a row. This time it was Dayton by a 68-67 margin. They are saying the Dukes are just another ball club with their All-America, Dick Ricketts, ailing. Ricketts has been bothered by a bad ankle for the past week or so.

Georgia Tech, the team that whipped Kentucky Saturday night on its home court for the first time in 11 years, was beaten by Vanderbilt in its next game, 71-69.

Eleventh ranked Maryland, sporting an 11-2 mark, moved into temporary possession of second place in the ACC with its Monday night, 68-52, victory over South Carolina. The Terps are 7-2 in the conference.

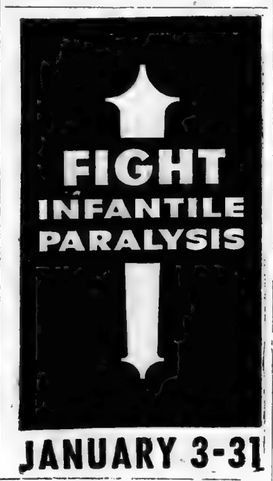
From the time Carolina lost to Alabama (giving UNC a 4-5 record) until the victory over Wake Forest, Tar Heel Coach Frank McGuire was operating below a .500 win-loss mark for the first time in his coaching career.

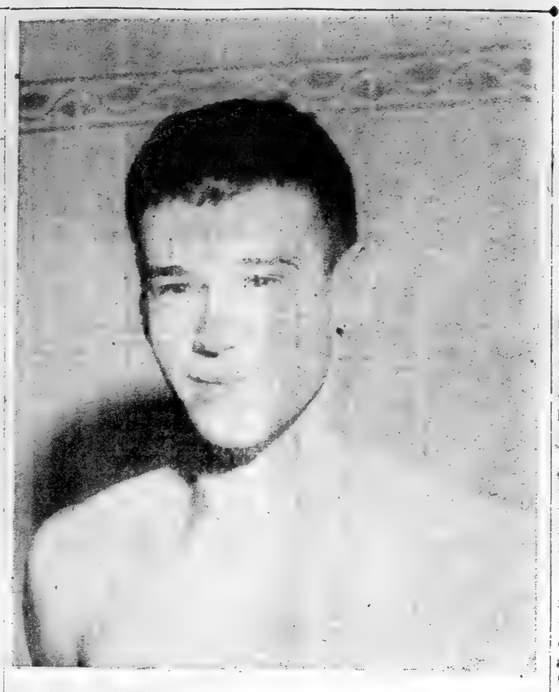
One of the more important, but rather unnoticed, rules adopted at the NCAA convention last week in New York was the one prohibiting college basketball and football teams from engaging in practice games. A football team is allowed 10 games a season, a basketball team 26. Any socalled practice games will have to count as one of the allotted number hereafter.

Duke Breaks Frosh Win Streak, 83-78

After winning nine straight games, the UNC frosh suffered their first setback of the year last night in Woolen Gym as the Duke freshmen turned them back, 83-78.



The Duke quint, whom the Tar Babies had defeated convincingly earlier in the season in Durham, overcame a 42-39 Carolina halftime lead at 3:50 of the second half, going ahead, 47-46.



The lead changed hands four time in the next three minutes, before Duke went out in front, 51-50, never to be headed after that. The battle remained close except for a point mid-way in the last quarter when the Duke lead was stretched to eight points. Carolina closed the gap to 77-80 with one minute remaining, but two free throws by Duke forward Allen and an effective freeze iced the game for the visitors.

UNC forward Pete Brennan poured in 27 points, before fouling out late in the game, to take scoring honors. Newcome led the winners with 22 markers. Carolina center Joe Quigg dumped in 21, and guard Tommy Kearns bucketed 17..

Four Duke players and three Carolina fouled out in the spirited contest.

Athlete Of The Week:

Krepp Breaks ACC Record In 200 Yard

Charlie Krepp, sophomore star of the Blue Dolphins, has been selected "Athlete of the Week" by the Tar Heel sports staff.

Krepp, who holds the ACC record for the 200 yard backstroke, with a time of 2:09.4 for the distance, along with pool records for that distance at UNC and Virginia, is a native of Baltimore, Maryland.

After a successful season as a freshman, Charley moved on the varsity at the beginning of this season, and immediately showed his potentiality as a swimming star. Previous to the South Carolina meet, in which his 200 yd. backstroke mark was officially accepted as an ACC record, he had already cracked that mark in practice.

Krepp first began swimming at the age of 13, and later became a varsity swimmer at Baltimore City College, where he attended high school. City College is the alma mater of such swimming greats as Jesse Grenbaum and Jimmy Thomas, with Thomas being recognized for a time as the best backstroke artist in the world.

Along with his individual records in the backstroke, Krepp aided the 300 yard medley team when they posted a new ACC mark of 2:47.8 for the distance.

Krepp has yet to be beaten as a varsity swimmer and a 300 yard medley team on which he swam as a varsity member has not been defeated.

Charlie is 18 years old, and looks toward Business Administration as his major, with plans to go into that field after his graduation in 1957.

Rosenbluth, Radovich, UVa's Wilkinson All Break 30 Mark

Rosenbluth Ties Own Rebound Record Despite Injured Hand; Radovich Has 66.6 Accuracy

Lennie Rosenbluth scored 32 points and Tony Radovich dumped in 30 to pace a second-half drive which gave Carolina a 96-87 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over the University of Virginia last night in Woollen Gym before 4,000 fans.

Buzz Wilkinson, the Cavaliers' scoring ace, took honors for the night with 33 markers.

Rosenbluth, the sophomore flash who sported a 26.6 average going into the contest, also equalled his own school rebounding record of 25, accomplishing this with a cut thumb. Monday night he accidentally shoved his hand through a glass pane.

Radovich, vastly improved since his early-season performances, was the surprise of the night. He tallied only eight points in the first half, but came through with 25 in the second to spark the Tar Heels.

Radovich was directly responsible for Carolina gaining the lead with two seconds to go at the end of the first half when he broke a one-minute UNC freeze with a hook under the basket. Thirty seconds after intermission he connected again to give the Tar Heels a lead which was threatened but never overcome.

For the second consecutive game Radovich came through with a "fini" basket in the closing seconds. With time running out, Rosenbluth fired a long pass to Bob Young (14 points), who hooked behind his back to Radovich under the basket. Tony dropped it through and that was the contest.

UNC had to battle all the way for the victory which put the team in second place in the ACC standings with a 4-1 conference record.

The Tar Heels gained possession and froze the ball to set the stage for Radovich's bucket. Tony, incidentally, tallied on 14 out of 21 shots for a 66.6 field goal average.

After Carolina gained the upper hand in the second half, the Cavaliers caught five too but were unable to put out their opponents' blaze. They drew to within three points of Carolina with 10 minutes remaining.

THEY'RE CLAMORING FOR THEM! Who? Students. What? Luckies. Coast to coast, dormitory to dormitory, college smokers prefer Luckies to all other brands, according to the greatest up-to-datest college survey. Again, the No. 1 reason for Luckies' wide lead: Luckies taste better. They taste better, first of all, because Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. Then, that tobacco is toasted to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' mild, good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better. So enjoy the better-tasting cigarette . . . Lucky Strike. were a number of Mason's personal belongings—a little money, social security cards, a birth certificate which showed he was 17 on Jan. 1, three large pocket knives, his portabl typewriter and radio, and an open box of hollow-point .22 shells with one cartridge missing. Also on the table was a stack of free-hand pencil drawings of various makes of pistols and rifles. Beside these was a pile of magazines, catalogues and booklets about firearms. On top of the pile was a new BB pistol in a box.

Mason's roommate, James Thomas Kirby, second year pharmacy student at the University from Wilson, was not at the house at the time. Kirby said the last time he'd seen Mason was that morninp when he left the room while he (Kirby) was still in bed.

Kirby and other students in the house said Mason gave them no immediate reason to feel he'd want to take his life, although they felt he was unhappy with his family and financial situations.

Patrolman Creel said his investigation showed the rifle had been purchased earlier in the day at a local store. It was the only regular firearm in the room and Kirby said he'd never seen it before.

Mason was a weapons enthusiast, Kirby said, and like to talk to him about firearms. Other than these conversations he had little to say to any of them at the rooming house, according to Kirby, although he was not unfriendly. Among the youth's belongings the officers found three new boyonets and a receipt for them from a New York weapons firm.

Charles Josey of Maiden and Julius Howard of Wilmington were the first into the room after hearing a shot "like a cap pistol, then a thud." They said they saw Mason slumped on the floor, his head wedged between the bed and a cabinet. The note, verified by the police as being in aMson's handwriting, was addressed "to whom it may concern." It made a brief reference to funeral arrangements and disposition of his few belongings and contained a statement that whatever people might thing he was "taking the easy way out."

No funeral arrangements had ben made as of yesterday.

Pharmacists Hold Pledge Party

Kappa Psi, Pharmaceutical Fraternity, honored its pledges last weekend with a cabin party Friday night and a formal banquet and dance Saturday night in the Carolina Inn Ballroom.

At the dance the pledges and their dates were introduced by President Jim Robinson. After forming Kappa Psi's Greek letters on the dance floor, the pledges sang the Kappa Psi Sweetheart song.

Music for the dance was furnished by Dick Levin and his orchestra. Chaperones were Dr. and Mrs. John Andrako of the Pharmacy faculty and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hammerness. Also present were Mrs. I. W. Rose, wife of the late Dr. Rose, former dean of the school, and several graduates on the faculty.

Jerry Rhoades social chairman, and Van King, dance committee representative, were responsible for planning the weekend.

Student's Directing 'Figaro'

By WILLIAM EATON

Charles Jeffers, stage director of The Marriage of Figaro, to be presented in Hill Hall Jan. 17 and 18, can't get away from directing musicals. Starting his directorial duties in high school where he was in charge of the All School Show, Jeffers was then selected as assistant director for Rose of the Rancho, in San Diego, Cal., his home. He worked in four other musicals in San Diego and was chosen to design scenery for another while still in high school.

Though only a few years out of high school, he directed Smetana's The Bartered Bride and Victor Herbert's Babes in Toyland for the city of San Diego. The Bartered Bride had a cast of 100, and Babes in Toyland 200 young people in the cast. The Marriage of Figaro has 11 in the cast, but he finds it more difficult musically and dramatically than any of his previous efforts.

His only non-musical duty as director was for Tennessee Williams' The Lady of Larkspur Lotion, but he used background when he found that it helped substantiate the mood which Williams attempted to create.

Born and raised in San Diego where his father operated a movie theatre and his mother was cashier, Jeffers was exposed to theatre work early by seeing movies that his father showed.

While still in junior high school, "Jeff," as his friends call him, heeded the call of the little theatre for volunteers and acted in minor parts as well as working backstage on many productions. Shifting his efforts to the San Diego Community Theatre, he was assistant technical director for Lady in the Dark, Harvey, Twentieth Century and two original musicals.

Since entering UNC in Sept. 1953, Jeffers has played the part of Dolan in the Carolina Playmakers' Mr. Roberts, and performed various back stage assignments.

The Marriage of Figaro is his first job of directing at UNC, and he considers it the most challenging in his busy career. Jeffers is perhaps the first undergraduate student ever to be assigned the stage director's job for a major musical production for either the Music or Dramatic Art Departments.

Charles Jeffers, stage director for The Marriage of Figaro is shown giving "stage business" to Patricia House, as Barbarina in the Mozart comic opera to be in Hill Hall, Jan. 17 and 18. Reserved seats are on sale for $1.00 in Hill Hall box office.

1,350 Had Brighter Christmas

Over 1,350 people were treated to a brighter and merrier Christmas thanks to the generosity of a number of campus organizations during the yuletide season.

In all a total of 21 UNC groups played Santa Claus to deserving families by virtue of their contributions to the Empty Stocking Fund, according to Marion E. Hill of the Chapel Hill Junior Service League, sponsor of the cause.

Families were "adopted" by of following organizations: YMCA and pharmacy girls; Spencer, Carr, Smith, Nurse's Dorm, Alderman and Kenan; Kappa Sigma, Sigma Chi, Pi Kappa Alpha, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Nu, Zeta Beta Tau and Kappa Psi; Tri Deltas, Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Delta Pi, Kappa Delta, Chi Omega and Pi Beta Phi.

George Can Return, Says Chief Sloan

Mrs. A. M. Jordan has finally found a means by which George the dog may regain his freedom in town and around the University's grounds.

"We have to find a resident of Chapel Hill who will assume ownership of George," she said yesterday, after talking with the Chief of Police Sloan and J. H. Claytor, county dog catcher.

Mrs. Jordan said that the assumption of George's ownership would "mean pay his city and county taxes, see that he is vaccinated and wears his tags, provide a place for him to live and be responsible for him if he misbehaves." she added that a student would not be allowed to accept these responsibilities.

"If we could find some resident who would do this we could have George back again," continued the treasurer of Chapel Hill's Humane Society.

"If anyone will do this so we can have George back please notify me," she asked. "This is the only was we can get George back," she said.

Expanded Program For Studies In Scandinavia Is Announced

An expanded program for the academic year 1955-56 has been announced by the Scandinavian Seminar for Cultural Studies.

Since 1949, both graduates and undergraduates have been offered the opportunity of living and studying for a year in the Danish folk schools or residential colleges. This year, as an alternative to Denmark, students may select Norway, Sweden or Finland as their country of study.

They may also carry out research in their particular field of interest during their stay at the folk schools. Each student will be assigned an advisor in his field and the February field trip will be used primarily for independent research or for visiting instiutions which pertain to his study project in any or all of the Scandinavian countries.

The Seminar members will, as previously, achieve an intimate contact with the people by learning a Scandinavian language while in the country of their choice. They will live with several families during the first few months and participate in a series of group seminars. These include intensive language study and courses in the cultural background of Scandinavia. During the five months at a folk school, students will follow the same curriculum as that of their Scandinavian classmates.

The cost of the entire nine month program including board, room and tuition is $800, plus travel. Two $400 scholarships are available.

For application blanks and further information write to the American - Scandinavian Council for Adult Education, 127 East 73rd St., New York 21, N. Y.

'Caine Mutiny Court Martial' Took A Long Time To Write

A chapter in the background of The Caine Mutiny Court- Martial, arriving at Memorial Hall tomorrow under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers, provides an interesting insight into what makes a stage hit.

When Herman Wouk, author of The Caine Mutiny, completed the dramatization of his own best-selling book, he began to cut out the unnecessary verbiage. But no matter how he tried, he found it difficult to shorten his play without losing its flavor and intensity.

Finally, almost in desperation, he went to Hollywood and laid his problem before producer Paul Gregory, who had commissioned him to do the dramatization. Gregory called in Charles Laughton, his partner, who was busy at the time directing the road company of John Brown's Body, but he listened intently as Wouk outlined his quandary.

Then, gathering around him those who were to be involved in the stage production, Laughton read the play as only he could do it. It took a full three hours to read.

"Well?" Wouk asked. "What now?"

Laughton made an immediate decision and withdrew the novelist to a hide-away where, for one week, he and the others worked 18 hours a day on the manuscript. At the end of seven days they came into Gregory's office smiling, and the young producer knew they had licked the problem. Now the play ran two hours, the length of the average stage production, and none of the flavor, color or intensity had been lost.

The Court Martial will play here tomorrow and Saturday nights in Memorial Hall at 8:30 each night. Tickets are on sale at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall.

Relations Meet Slated

Plans are rapidly taking shape for the annual District IV meeting of the American College Public Relations Association to be held here and at Duke University on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 3, 4 and 5.

Rudolph Pate, head of the North Carolina State College News Bureau, is the director of District IV. The program committee is composed of Pate, Robert W. Madry, Tom Bost Jr. and Dr. Sylvester Green, all of UNC, and Earl Porter, of Duke University.

A variety of topics are on the agenda of the program, including news bureau management, enrollment, alumni relations, sports, educational and commercal television, fund raising, science reporting and scholarship service.

One of the highlights will be a panel of college presidents and chancellors to discuss the topic "What college presidents expect of their public relations and publicity programs." This session is scheduled for Thursday, February 3, here.

The convention will get underway here at 2:30 on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 3, and will be concluded here at noon Saturady. One of the feature events will be a luncheon session on development programs to be held at Duke University Friday afternoon.

Representatives of the non-member as well as the member institutions are invited to attend the three day session. Member institutions are UNC, NC State, Duke Universty, Davidson College, Queen's College and Lees McRae college, all in North Carolina; Washington and Lee, University of Virginia, Sweet Briar College, Mary Balwin College, Mary Washington College, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Longwood College and Richmond Professional Institute, all in Virginia; University of Maryland, John Hopkins, State Teachers College (Towson) and Goucher College, all in Maryland; West Virginia Wesleyan and Marshall College, both of West Virginia; and George Washington University, Georgetown University and Gallaudet College, all in the District of Columbia.

This marks the first time that the district meeting has been held in North Carolina since 1948. Last year's convention took place at the Greenbriar Hotel in White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia.

Clausen Talks To Prof Club

Comparing national character and education in Europe and in America, Dr. Sven Clausen, professor of jurisprudence at the University of Copenhagen in Denmark, spoke to members of the Carolina Faculty Club this week.

Clausen said "In America I have noticed a friendliness and kindness not apparent in countries where distinction is the guiding principle. You have also developed a teamwork that is not possible under the principles of distinction. And your traffic here is polite."

He also said that the American national character was sometimes misunderstood from the European point of view and the help extended through the Marshall Plan is suspected by European of hiding some secret motive.

In IDC-GM Concert:

Count Really Wowed 'Em

By JERRY REECE

The curtain wasn't closed, the Count and his Boys just came on and played it anyway you could have wanted it for two hours.

Jump, swing, slow, mambo, blues, they played them all. And the audience of some Carolina males and coeds ate it up.

They opened up with a couple of the band's originals called "Why Not" and "Basie English" and then swung into their own version of "How High The Moon" called "The Moon is Not Green."

The group proved very versatile with their switch to the slower numbers which included "Danny Boy" with an alto sax man who resembled the fabulous Earl Bostic in both looks and sounds.

For the sixth number on the program, the Count introduced Eddie Jones on the string bass in a number called "Nails," which Eddie proved to be as hard as.

Other of the Count's stars featured were Joe Newman on trumpet, Frank and Foster and Frank West on tenor saxes, Sonny Paine who took a nine minute ride on the drums just before intermission, Charlie Hokes on baritone sax, and Freddie Green on guitar.

The second half of the IDC-Graham Memorial co-sponsored show opened with "Perdido." The group then played some more favorites which included "Aoril in Paris" and "Moonlight in Vermont."

Then the Count introduced his vocalist, Joe Williams. Joe proved to be a real jumper and had the audience screaming for more after his renditions of "Every Day I Have the Blues," "Teach Me Tonight," "Shake Rattle and Roll," and "I've Got a Gal Who Lives On the Hill."

The orchestra was making its second trip to the campus (first was for a Pharmacy School dance last year) and is made up of five saxes, four trumpets, three trombones, drums, string bass, guitar, and of course the Count on piano.

Backstage before the concert the Count admitted to being 50 years old and to having been in the music business for 35 years. He says he was born in Redbank, N. J. and got his start with the Sonny Thompson group.

The band came to Chapel Hill from Favetteville and traveled on last night to Norfolk. From there they go to Portsmouth, Va. and Cambridge Maryland which will conclude their Southern tour. After that they will play a two-weeks' stand in New York's "Birdland."

Korean War GI Bill Benefits Not Available After Jan. 31

No educational benefits under Public Law 50, the Korean War GI Bill, may be earned after Jan. 31, 1955. All benefits will be based upon active duty beginning on June 27, 1950, up to the ending date of Jan. 31, 1955, according to an announcement yesterday.

Col. F. C. Shepard. UNC veterans' advisor, said benefits which were earned during the period indicated above may be used by the veteran if he commences his educational training within three years of his date of discharge.

All training must be completed within seven years of Jan. 31, 1955, or his date of discharge, whichever is the later.

Korean GI benefits were started by an Act of Congress. The law stated that benefits could be earned until the date to be set by Presidential proclamation.

The President issued a proclamation on Jan. 1, 1955, establishing the date of Jan. 31, 1955, as the end of the period during which Korean GI benefits could be earned.

Stop Giggling, Woman...

SLAGELSE, Denmark, Jan. 13, (UP)—Telephone company officials here have warned a woman to stop laughing over the phone because her giggling plays havoc with the local dial system.

They explained the unidentified woman's high-pitched giggle is just like the automatic dial cutoff tone and breaks the connections on lines that can carry 48 conversations simultaneously.

The Fault

Student-faculty relationships were never worse. If you don't believe it, ask the next student you meet his troubles; he'll lead off with "that blankety-blank pedant (or worse) in Bingham (or Murphy or Venable) who thinks he's a teacher."

This strained state of affairs might be expected, since there remain only ten days until exams. But the cleavage goes deeper. We listened, only yesterday, to a student deliver himself of the opinion that the University may as well close its doors for a year or two, stock up on new professors, and then try again. "And the administration," he said, "is worse. It is dealing in administration for administration's sake. Students are forgotten."

Well, it is true we have our pedants (or worse) and it is true that South Building has its lunkheads. However, (and we will probably get thrown out of the League-For Protection-of-Students-Against-All-Comers for saying it) most of the University's shortcomings are not thrust upon the students but are, instead, nourished by them. And sometimes, created by them.

Item: Entire class is invited by genial professor to eat supper at his house. All accept invitation eagerly. One-sixth of class appears.

Item: Two Negro members of the student body live in segregated rooms in Steele Dormitory. Student body remains indifferent.

Item: While students complain of "nothing to do", art exhibits go unattended, stimulating speakers talk to near empty halls, Library books gather dust, concert series tickets remain unsold.

Item: George the dog, a symbol of the campus, nears the end of his rope in the Humane Society's pens, but is yet to have an energetic student champion to help save his life.

All this is not to say that there aren't encouraging signs here and there. Cobb Dormitory's recent invitation to President Gray, and his subsequent well-received speech there, is as hopeful as anything this year for a re-birth of easy student-faculty-administration cordiality.

But if a teacher is not stimulating in class, it's likely that the class members are not stimulating, themselves, and everybody goes to sleep. The answer to this one is with the students; they should gang up and agree on a batch of loaded questions.

If a teacher is cold, he's probably tired of wasting warmth on an unresponsive class. We've seen more than one enthusiastic teacher beaten down by a room full of cross-word-workers.

The point of our wandering little homily is this: The one group that can accomplish reforms, that can put life in the University's weary carcass, that can revivify the valuable old student-faculty friendships and make life richer on the campus is—the students.

Shakespeare said it in a sentence: The fault . . . is in ourselves.

Bucks For The Band

The student Legislature will act tonight on a bill to appropriate $11,000 to the Band for new instruments and uniforms.

The Daily Tar Heel agrees that the Band needs the money, but feels the Legislature is not the place to get it.

It can't come from the University, which is almost broke; if it comes from the Legislature, the student body will be broke.

The clear way out of the dilemma for the Band is the Playmakers' way—sponsor some top-notch student entertainment at a profit. The Playmakers should make a mint from "Three For Tonight" and "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial."

There's still time for the Band to go and do likewise.

'Burnt Bridges' & 'Color Notes' Are Different

Louis Kraar

REMEMBERING Woman's College Chancellor E. K. Graham's statement that uninhibited self-expression belongs in art galleries, I padded across the muddy campus yesterday to view the current crop of expressions in Person Hall.

John Rembert, an artist who formerly taught here at Carolina, has on display a group of drawings that to me seem unusual. They seem to illustrate what's called uninhibited self-expressions too.

Hembert has a series of seven paintings called "Burnt Bridges," which are scenes from the past as seen by the artist. I'm no art critic, but Rembert's drawings of "Adam and Eve," "Atlasburden," and "Susan and the Blindmen" are different.

Incidentally, many of the drawings show the human figure undrapped, both male and female. I trust Chancellor Graham, who censured the WC literary magazine for a male nude, won't be offended by the Rembert works since they're in an art gallery.

WHILE IN an art-viewing mood, I stopped in on the Morehead building's exhibit by Chapel Hill artist Floyd Hunter.

"Color Notes" is a series of pictures on the race problem that says more than the most avid National Association for the Advancement of Colored People member could say.

Hunter's exhibit is "intended as a current set of notions on passing scenes of color in a region long noted for intense relations of color," according to a poster.

Examples of Hunter's editorial in pictures are paintings like "Communication 1954." This one shows a Negro trumpeter playing for a white man. "The message is simple and clear to the listener," says the caption.

ALL THE WORLD is a stage department: Joel Fleishman, whose main love has been politics since his freshman year, has turned his head and interests to the field of drama.

Fleishman's friends are surprised. His enemies, who have learned to expect anything from the versatile student leader, don't believe it.

PRIVILEGE I doubt four men still enjoy:

According to the last issue of the Carolina Quarterly, Oxford and Cambridge eventually attained a position "of such importance that two representatives from each were granted a place in Parliament, a privilege these four men still enjoy today."

Only catch to that statement is that the two universities have enjoyed the privilege of sending representatives to Parliament for over a century. I doubt if even Oxford or Cambridge men live that long.

The Subtle & Magnetic Ways Of The Cultural Arts

Kermit Hunter

(This is a condensation of a speech to the Piedmont Arts Conference at Winston-Salem. For an analysis of some of Mr. Hunter's own work, see the column by Ed Yoder on this page.—Editor.)

Why should a community be interested in the cultural arts?

We can all think of a hundred good reasons, but altogether we can group these reasons perhaps under three major headings.

Let us look first at the simple matter of pleasure and entertainment.

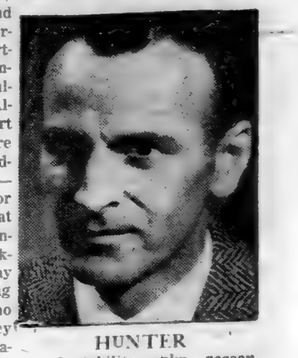
What do we do these days in America when we are not working? Mainly, we sit. Movies, radio, television, therter, sports events—we are a nation of watchers and lookers. Fred Allen suggested that television represents the triumph of equipment over people, that the next generation will have eyes like cantalopes and no brains at all.

But we need not take out our spite on television; we must take it out on ourselves for becoming a race of lazy lookers who demand entertainment at an ever-increasing tempo. No one can deny that a generation or two more of this sit-and-look kind of entertainment will have a profound effect on the creative energies of our people. Gradually we reach the point where we accept whatever—and all—that "they" (whoever they may be) put before us. We lose taste, discrimination, and inspiration—and we come to think in terms of what someone else suggests.

Then why don't we stop this eternal sidelines existence and get out on the playing field? Simply because we have not taken the time or the effort to set up the means for it.

One very plausible solution lies in the local arts council. And I do not mean the building that sits somewhere on a local street; I mean the ideals behind it, the knowledge that whatever we want to do is potentially available there, if we will make it so. You want to write? Then insist that the arts council stage seminars and conferences in creative writing and bring in guest experts to discuss it with you. You want to paint? Then get some brushes and paints and start painting, then see to it that the arts council has someone to criticize and help you. You like the idea of making trinkets in glazed pottery or enameled copper? Then get the arts council to do something about it.

All this leads, of course, to the creating of opportunities for active participation, the opening of new fields of interest, with the final result that we have six hobbies instead of one or two hobbies in which we are taking an active part. Suddenly we find ourselves busy, but in a different way: not the busyness of tension and strain, but the busy-ness of entertaining pursuits, hobbies that fascinate and occupy the mind and soul, that leave us feeling rested and uplifted. Pleasure? We don't know what it is until we start dabbling in painting, in music, in writing, in sculpture, in pottery work, in handicrafts of all kinds.



So much for the factor of sheer pleasure in the cultural arts. Let us turn briefly to another matter — the idea of a life purpose. I do not mean the choosing of a career—whether we shall be a doctor or a lawyer, a nurse, or a laboratory technician. I mean a life purpose, and end toward which we will go as a means of finding peace of mind and spirit.

Perhaps the most satisfying goal we can strive for is truth—or, if you prefer a more definite term, oneness with man and the universe, a sense of fulfillment, a feeling of having accomplished something noble and lasting in life.

If this is the end, then everything else we do is actually part of the means toward that end. Making a living, buying things, finding entertainment, worshiping God, doing our daily round of activities—all these are means. The end is truth.

Then what is happiness? Perhaps it lies simply in the realization that we are in progress toward some ideal, that we are busy at the matter of life and not sitting as it passes by. Happiness is surely a process. We find deep pleasure in being alive and active, and this is perhaps what happiness means, because it is a fleeting thing that comes in scattered golden moments. The final end must forever be some ideal toward which we always are going, but which we never quite attain in mortal existence.

If any of this is valid, then, it behooves us to follow those pursuits which tend toward ultimate truth, which give us a feling of fulfillment, that sense of onenes with God and man. And for this purpose, I heartily recommend the cultural arts. Although art pursuits are individual things — one man or woman at work at a canvas, or working with clay or practicing at the piano — still they are cooperative things, because they draw us toward other men and women who seek these same rewards, and they draw us into communion with the greatest and best minds the human race has produced.

HUNTER
. . . stability, calm, reason, decency.

Let us choose one other factor in addition to pleasure and a life purpose—the matter of moral regeneration. There is no village so small, no city so large, that we are not faced this morning with what appears to be a headlong plunge into moral decadence.

Are we really a nation of maniacs? The clever talkers from Moscow stand before audiences of Chinese, Indonesians, Hindus, and Mau-Maus and explain these things to them, and how can we blame these confused people for choosing communism? We say, "Well, that's only one side of America." But must we have two sides? Must we have this ugly insane side also?

Religion is one answer, a return to the faith that gave this nation stability and strength—at least a return to some sort of religious idealism. But the burden of cleaning house is not the sole responsibility of the church. Those six days a week when we are not in church are even more important. The everyday pursuits, the jobs we work at, the pleasures we seek, the ends we have in view down deep in our individual subconcious—they are the things that need attention.

We need active participation in things that make for stability, for calm, for reason, for decency, for inspiration. There is no better answer, no more immediate and effective answer, than in the field of cultural arts. The ways of painting and music and craftsmanship are subtle and magnetic. Our sickness is a soul-sickness, and these things have a way of sifting into our souls in a quiet way, making us whole again.

The man who leaves his office with a headache can sit for half an hour listening to Schubert or Mozart, and be refreshed. If he cannot, then for the sake of his health he had better try it. The housewife who finds herself harried, uncertain, put upon, and purposeless, can pick up her pallette and work for an hour on her canvas, and all of a sudden the world is new and white once more. If she cannot do this, then she had better learn how.

Why? Because, as the words were spelled out on the sundial in Alfred Tennyson's lawn, "For lo, the night cometh."

(Mr. Wallace, a member of the Student Entertainment Committee, upon being requested to submit a review of the Rise Stevens concert night before last, complied with the following gray impression.—Editor.)

It was a cold night, last Tuesday, and there was a basketball game, but the faithful gathered at the Rise Stevens show in Memorial Hall.

By 7:40 the house was almost full, and there was a crowd of 200 faculty members and townspeople standing outside, waiting for the magic moment when a buck would get them inside—to warmth, and to Rise.

They got in, got warm, and promptly at eight o'clock, exactly on time, they got Rise. She swept onto the stage, her eyes flashing, her red petticoat swinging, and behind the pancake, one could glimpse her face, set in a tentative smile, then a pout; and, after a moment, the look of a stricken Camille came over her.

STEVENS
. . . sad

Brightening quickly, and with a wave of her hand, she included James Shomate, the accompanist, who stepped forward into the picture.

They bowed.

He sat, fingers poised, looking at her intently from the corner of his eye. She made a little moue at the audience, caressed her bunch of roses lovingly, gave the barest essence of a nod to the accompanist—whose hands reacted like released springs—and began to sing some Handel.

After Handel, there was Mozart, and Greig. Then the concert lapsed into some passable German, which eventually ended with Nichts, by Richard Strauss.

Off in the distance could be heard the faint, metallic croak of a radiator frog, like a summer's night in Pittsburg, out near the blast furnaces. Then some Saint-Saens and Intermission, and the audience drifted to the smoking rooms. The smoke drifted back into the hall, the audience followed, and it all began again. Mr. Shomate, modest and thirty, caressed the Steinway, caught in the blinding lights, along with the beautiful floral arrangement and the candelabrum.

Miss Stevens returned, sweeping out on a piece of white muslin left over from the Sound and Fury show. There was considerable applause, but the seats were hard, and many were sitting on their hands. There followed five musical fragments, and, at long last, the role arrived which the artist had been playing all evening, the role of the tragic and beautiful Carmen.

But now the small radiator from Little Steel, was joined by a large, more clanky, radiator from Big Steel, and the artist, and the audience, began to feel the effects of competition. Occasionally a clear, sustained, fairly high, note could be heard without benefit of industrial syncopation. Miss Stevens now showed more haste than ever before, to get the thing over and done with as soon as possible. The audience, much of it, showed signs of being cooperative in this enterprise. The concert ended in a burst of arched eyebrows, taut lower lips, perfectly formed circles and beautifully executed ellipses, and brilliant teeth.

The stunningly-dyed blond hair, magnificently coiffed, flung itself high and then low in the smoky upper atmosphere of the stage, making it reminiscent of Brunhild's immolation or Carmen's cigarette factory just-caught-afire, and to add to this Vulcanic design, the radiators, encouraged by their previous operatic successes, struck up an off-beat Anvil Chorus, to send the concert into a fiery encore.

A songlet called "Hey, Edwin," ended too abruptly, and the applause signalled for more. Then a spell-binding "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord" left the audience in rapt attention, held them in a mood of silent appreciation, listening for pins to drop, or radiators to clank.

And, finally, Miss Stevens' rendition of "Because" partially redeemed her for her earlier inattentiveness to the business at hand. By now, it appeared that she no longer felt she was doing the audience such a big favor by making her highly lucrative appearance here.

And there were those recurring traces of sadness in her face, more so near the end of the evening. Looking toward the floor, her hands clasped, she would seem in deep thought, her mind far away, and then, as if she were awakening from a brief dream, she would look up, her eyes smiling, and gazing straight into the lights, she would give that little nod again, and the accomplished Mr. Shomate would once more provide background.

The attitude of sadness lingered. But after the sadness with that flash of fire from the coquettish, the snapping eyes, and with a pursing of the lips, the younger form would return for an instant, and a beautifully-produced note would round itself, gather strength, and fill the crowded house.

And then, it was over. The audience drifted away, the autograph people went backstage; and then everyone had gone home, out into the cold night.

And inside the big hall, the hard seats sat silently, listening to the rhythms of the radiator frogs which would not sleep.

Green, Hunter Dramas Pose Influence Of Grass Roots Against Broadway

Ed Yoder

The death of Dr. Howard W. Odum, for years a leader in the creative work of the University, brought speculations as to whether that creative work is growing or waning.

The outdoor dramas now making a widening sweep of the U. S. have their real seeds in Chapel Hill. Yet, when speculations about creative actibity here were being made, mention of them was sparse.

The credit for these striking additions to the American theater must go first to Paul Green, formerly a member of the philosophy department and a Pulitzer-prizewinning playwright, and to Kermit Hunter of the English department whose pen has produced excellent outdoor plays for the western parts of the state.

Paul Green's first outdoor drama, "The Lost Colony," has been playing annually on Roanoke Island since 1937—a long run in the history of any theater. Mr. Green's other continuing play, "The Common Glory," draws thousands of spectators to Williamsburg, Va. There, among restored colonial architecture, hoop-skirts, top hats, phaetons, on the old tramping grounds of Tom Jefferson himself, "The Common Glory" recounts the American Revolution.

Both "The Lost Colony" and "The Common Glory" recounts the American Rebolution.

Both "The Lost Colony" and "The Common Glory," are uniquely American dramas. So are Mr. Hunter's western North Carolina plays—"Horn in the West," the story of Daniel Boone, and "Unto These Hills," telling of the white man's shameful banishment of the Cherokees to Oklahoma.

Not only, then, can the outdoor plays be accounted real products of the creative force in Chapel Hill and the University of North Carolina. They symbolize a new movement in the American theater: a movement that stands in direct ranks with the folk theaters, a movement repudiating the idea that Broadway is the focal point of the genuine American drama.

Mr. Hunter, in eloquent and outspoken article for the New York Times on theatre section last July, set forth the credo of outdoor drama:

"The plays," Mr. Hunter wrote, "speak for the people themselves, their ancestors, and the ideals of American freedom which inspired the pioneers. The plays thus emerge with a firm religious tone, a sense of moral and intellectual integrity, a richness and a verve which, though hardly typical of the Broadway mood, are solidly characteristic of the American mind."

Mr. Hunter believes that "great national drama can rise only out of the people themselves. . . Here in the summer outdoors is being born the greatest and newest and most important movement yet seen in the American Theatre."

Mr. Green affirmed that belief in his recent collection of essays, Dramatic Heritage: "Where there were once five thousand theatre stages in the country and all an extension of Broadway and its syndicalists, now there are . . . fifty thousand, built and created by the people themselves for their own . . . purposes and vision. . . . Though many of these plays and their productions are crude and unfortunately naive, they are still their own and have an enriching meaning to them. And always the quality is improving."

A feeling possibly lies behind the success of these outdoor dramas that America has served too long an apprenticeship to the older ways of Europe—that the theater arts in this country must sever the ties of imitation and begin to incorporate into their work what is distinctly native.

The outdoor dramas are dramatizations of American ideas and ideals. They pose what is native against what is foreign; they pose the influence of the grass roots against the metropolitan influence of Broadway. They have succeeded in gaining integrity and respect without playing the role of copycats. They are national without being nationalistic.

The outdoor drama of Mr. Green and Mr. Hunter is young. From the beginning it has won respect from the critics; but best of all, it has been greeted with enthusiasm by millions of people whose enthusiasm for drama would ordinarily be nil—but who feel in the outdoor drama a revitalization of ideas they can claim as their own.

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

The welcome mat was out, as usual; so I strolled into the office. Carolina's congenial basketball coach ,Frank McGuire, flashed his ready smile, and we were off, talking.

"Planning on beating State next week?"

McGuire parried this one deftly with, "I sure would like to."

A few more simple questions like this led into a discussion which covered everything between here and Madison Square Garden. While at the Garden, Tuesday night's Wake Forest victory there over Seton Hall was mentioned, during which someone wandered into the room and commented that Dickie Hemric didn't show him much.

"No. Well, I'd like to be taking him over to State with me next Tuesday," McGuire quipped.

Lennie Rosenbluth, Carolina's sophomore hardwood wizard, came up next on the agenda, and it was generally agreed that he was pretty much in a class by himself. McGuire explained how his scoring ace incurred the cut hand which held him to 32 points against Virginia Tuesday night.

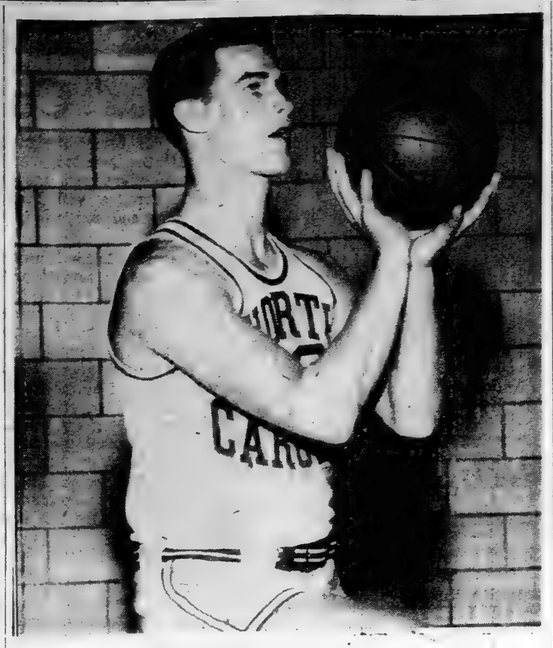
"I was showing the boys some game movies Monday night before practice. We finished up, and I told them to go on downstairs, get dressed, and take a few shots while the freshmen were still practicing. They went on downstairs, but I forgot to give them the key to the locker room. Rosenbluth was the first one there; he tried the knob, then banged on the glass part of the door once, and his hand went right through. Ben Lubin (student manager) ran up the stairs and told me, all out of breath, that Rosenbluth had cut his hand." McGuire reproduced Lubin's frenzied actions for effect, then continued: "Well, how bad did he cut it? Is the hand still on, or is it hanging there?"

"I don't know, but it's bleeding all over the place," was Lubin's answer.

"Well, tell him to get it bandaged up. He can shoot with his left hand," said the coach casually.

McGuire said he walked down onto the gym floor and was there when Rosenbluth came up, ready for practice. "He took five shots, with his right hand, and every one of them swished."

"A cut on the hand won't stop that boy. He's got it here," the coach said, with his hand over his heart.



I asked McGuire what he thought about the televising of Carolina's home games, and the claims that it is causing drops in attendance at neighboring schools' games.

"It's really too early to tell whether that's the cause for the attendance drops," he answered. "But, frankly," he added with a smile, "it's great for my recruiting—kids all over the state seeing my team on television.

When asked what he thought of the bonus rule, since many coaches are grumbling about it, McGuire commented that he agreed with them that the game should be won from the floor, not the foul line, but that we should wait until after the season is over to plan on any changes.

During the conversation I noted how amazingly well the amiable Irishman from New York City has managed to preserve so perfectly his Brooklyn accent, after having been in the South for almost three years.

The funniest of the amusing anecdotes he had to tell was the one about an out-of-town game, in which the opponent assigned to guard Rosenbluth was giving the Tar Heel star an exceptionally rough going-over under the basket. Everybody but the ref seemed to see it, so at halftime McGuire made his way over to the official, and in his inimitably polite fashion said: "Look, all I ask is that you don't let that number 54 kill Rosenbluth. That's all I ask. I'm gonna need him for the rest of the games this season."

BOB YOUNG, 6'6" Tar Heel center, who has come into his own in the last two UNC victories. His 15 points against Wake Forest and 18 against Virginia, plus some invaluable rebounding, seem to have added a new spark to the locals.

Lamley Sparks Duke To 82-64 Win Over SC

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 12 (AP)—Two free throws by sub forward Herky Lamley with eight minutes remaining put Duke ahead to stay, and it went on to widen the breach for an 82-64 basketball win over South Carolina here tonight.

A crowd of 2,000 kept up a constant roar as the lead changed hands 14 times and was tied four times until Lamley's two charity tosses began the Duke winning splurge.

Lamley went on from there to hit eight more free throws and connect nicely on some floor shots despite close guarding, to figure biggest in the Duke Atlantic Coast Conference win, its fifth in seven starts.

Duke star forward Ronnie Mayer wasn't able to do much against the close defense, fouled out halfway through the final period, as did South Carolina's ace forward, Joe Smith.

Guard Benny Fannin of South Carolina was the most impressive shooter, hitting on one hand push shots from far out. His 25 points was high for the night.

Tar Heels Invade SC, Clemson This Week

Chapel Hill, N. C., Coach Frank McGuire's University of North Carolina basketball team, after playing host to conference foe Virginia Tuesday, swings further South this weekend for two more Atlantic Coast Conference games with Clemson and South Carolina.

The Tar Heels will move into Columbia, S. C., Friday night for a tilt with the Gamecocks, and will journey from there to Clemson Saturday night.

North Carolina has already met both foes once this season, swamping Clemson 99-66, and beating South Carolina, 88-67. The 99-point output against the Tigers was the highest the Tar Heels made in their first 10 games.

Sophomore sensation Lennie Rosenbluth, who has been pacing the North Carolina scoring attack since the opening whistle, used the initial tilt with South Carolina to set an all-time university record for rebounding in one game when he grabbed in 25.

In addition, the 6-5 forward hit the nets for 15 field goals against the Gamecocks, the best any Tar Heel has been able to do in any one game thus far in that department. The 37 points that Rosenbluth netted in that tilt stands as his second-high best performance thus far this season.

"We expect South Carolina to be a much better club in this one than they were when we met them up here," McGuire said. "They've been improving right along, and they will have the advantage of playing on their home court."

The veteran basketball coach also singled out Gamecock center Lee Collins as one of the most improved and dangerous players in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The big center bucketed 24 points against North Carolina when the two teams met here earlier in the season, and has been pacing his club in scoring.

But while McGuire has been putting out the danger sign for the game with South Carolina, he isn't ignoring Clemson. "Clemson has had a tough season thus far, but you can never count a basketball team out until the game is over," he said.

Erdelatz To Stay At Navy

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 11 (AP)—Eddie Erdelatz decided today to sail along for another five-year hitch with the Navy football team he restored to glory in his first tour as skipper.

The 41-year-old coach abruptly brought serenity to the Severn which has ben flustered by reports he was shipping out to the Los Angeles Rams.

"I'm very happy and proud to continue as head football coach at the Naval Academy," he said in accepting the proferred five-year contract at a reported pay raise from $15,000 to $17,000.

To further emphasize his contentment, he said he'd like to stay on for as long as he coaches. "The way I feel, I'd like to end my head coaching career where it started."

The Navy raised Erdelatz from assistant coach of the San Francisco 49ers to its command post in 1950 and Capt. Elliott Loughlin, athletic director, voiced the feeling that he's run a "happy ship."

"As stated previously, Eddie's value to the Naval Academy is not confined to the mere winning of football games," he said, "but also commendable is the manner in which he coaches and the fine leadership qualities demonstrated in his handling of the squad."

Navy had won only five games in the first four post-war years. They've won 23 under Erdelatz, hitting the jackpot last season by going to the Sugar Bowl and beating Mississippi 21-0. Most satisying to the blue and gold people, however, is the fact he beat Army four out of five times.

The last previous victory over Army was in 1943.

The decision by Erdelaty to stick with Navy came as a surprise to many in the wake of reports he was offered twice as much money by the Rams.

But Erdelatz said that while he discussed the "possibilities of coaching the Rams" with Dan Reeves, the pro owner, "no committments were made or agreed upon by either party."

Frosh Down EMI, 94-63

The University of North Carolina freshmen rolled over Edwards Military Academy in Clinton last night, 94-63. It was Coach Buck Freeman's Tar Babies' tenth win of the season, coming on the heels of their lone defeat Tuesday night here at the hands of the Duke frosh.

A detailed report of last night's encounter was unavailable late last night.

The frosh journey to Wilson tonight for a tilt with the Atlantic Christian College junior varsity, losers to the locals in a pre-Christmas game here.

Carolina's Indoor Track Team Meets Wolfpack Here Saturday

By RAY LINKER

After two weeks practice since the holidays, Ciach Dale Ranson's freshman track team is rounding into shape for its opening indoor meet here on Saturday with N. C. State. The varsity will also run the Wolfpack, with the field events coming at 2:15, and the track action a 2:45.

James Varnum looks sharp in the 60-yard dash, although several others—namely Bill Lackey, Merritt Sugg, Wendell Eaves, and Daley Goff—also will be bidding for top honors in this event.

Ronnie Austell, a holdover from the freshman cross country team, appears to have the 440-yard dash well in hand, but Ray Montgomery, another cross country runner, and Hubert Clemmer are improving.

All the men contending for positions in the longer distances were members of the cross country team. Ben Williams, Everett Whatley, and Richard Rigsbee will set the pace in the 880, mile, and two-mile, respectively. John Sylvester, Lloyd Lohr, and Rand Bailey will back Williams in the half-mile, while Jim Rose and Phim Hamrick will assist Whatley. Bailey Liipfert and Gene Nichols will give depth to the two-mile.

Solons Attempt Wyatt Censure

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 12 (AP) — Former Arkansas football coach Bowden Wyatt was sharply criticized in a resolution introduced today in the Arkansas Senate.

The resolution, offered by four senators, asks the Senate to censure Wyatt for "deliberately, intentionally and wholly repudiating his contract with the University of Arkansas."

Wyatt resigned as coach at Arkansas last week to return to his native Tennessee as head coach at its university. His contract with Arkansas still had three years to run.

The resolution first was placed on the Senate calendar, but after several senators objected to this procedure, it was withdrawn and sent to the Resolutions Committee.

CLOTHES MAKE THE BMOC

A few weeks ago I discussed fashions for coeds. I pointed out then that any girl who really wanted to go places on campus had to be bold and ingenious when it came to clothes. This is no less true for the male student.

Believe me, men, you'll never get anywhere if you keep skulking around in those old plus-fours. What you need is some dash, some verve, some inventiveness in your apparel. Don't be imprisoned by the traditional conservatism of men's clothing. Brighten up your appearance with a single earring, or a cavalry sabre, or a gold derby.

However, guard against gaudiness. If, for instance, you are wearing a gold derby, do not also wear a cavalry sabre. This is too much. Wear a dagger instead, or, for informal occasions, a Bowie knife.

(Speaking of Bowie knives, I wonder how many of you know what a great debt this country—indeed, the whole world—owes to the West Point class of 1836? You all know, of course, that Colonel James Bowie of the Class of 1836 invented the Bowie knife, but do you know of the many other important contributions to cutlery that were made by classmates of Colonel Bowie's? Are you aware, for example, that Colonel Harry Clasp invented the Clasp knife? Or that Colonel Harry Jack invented the Jack knife? Or that Colonel Harry Putty invented the Putty knife? Or that Colonel Harry Cannon invented the towel?

By a curious coincidence, every member of the graduating class at the U. S. Military Academy in 1836 was named Harry, save for Colonel James Bowie. This coincidence is believed unique in the history of American education, though, of course, quite common in Europe.)

But I digress. We were talking about men's campus fashions. Let us turn now to a persistent rumor that a garment called the "suit" is on the verge of making a comeback. Some of you older students may remember the "suit." It was an ensemble consisting of a jacket and trousers, both of which—this'll kill you—both of which were made out of the same material!

The last "suit" ever seen on an American campus was in 1941—and I ought to know, because I was wearing it. Ah, 1941! Well do I remember that melancholy year. I was an undergraduate then and in love—hopelessly in love, caught in the riptide of a reckless romance with a beauteous statistics major named Harry Sigafoos. (She is one of the two girls I have ever known named Harry. The other one is her sister.)

I loved Harry though she was far too expensive a girl for me. She liked to eat at fancy restaurants and dance at costly ballrooms and ride in high priced cars. But worst of all, she was mad for wishing wells. It was not unusual for her to drop coins into a wishing well for two or three hours on end. My coins.

Bit by bit I sold off my belongings to pursue this insane courtship—first my books, then my clothes, until finally I was left with nothing to wear but a "suit." One night I came calling for her in this garment.

"What is that?" she gasped, her lip curling in horror.

"That is a 'suit'" I mumbled, averting my eyes.

"Well, I can't be seen around campus with you in that," said she.

"Please, Harry," I begged. "It's all I've got."

"I'm sorry," she said firmly and slammed the door.

I slunk home and lit a Philip Morris and sat down to think. I always light a Philip Morris when I sit down to think, for their mild vintage tobacco is a great aid to cerebration. I always light Philip Morrises when I don't sit down to think too, because Philip Morris is my favorite cigarette, and I know it will be yours too once you try that crazy vintage tobacco.

Well sir, smoking and thinking thus, my eye happened to fall on an ad in the campus newspaper. "WIN A COMPLETE WARDROBE" said the ad. "Touhy's Toggery, the campus's leading men's store, announces a contest to pick the best dressed man on campus. The winner of the contest will receive, absolutely free, a blue hound's tooth jacket, a yellow button-down shirt, a black knit tie, a tattersall vest, gray flannel trousers, argyle socks, and white buck shoes with two inch crepe soles."

My mouth watered at the thought of such a splendid wardrobe, but how could anybody possibly pick me as the best dressed man on campus—me in my "suit"? Suddenly an inspiration struck me. I seized pen in hand and wrote a letter to the editor of the campus newspaper:

"Dear Sir, I see by the paper that Touhy's Toggery is going to give a complete wardrobe to the student picked as the best dressed man on campus. What a ridiculous idea!

"Obviously, to be the best dressed man on campus, you must first have a lot of clothes. And if you have a lot of clothes, what do you need with another wardrobe?

"Touhy's Toggery should give a new wardrobe to the worst dressed man on campus. Me, for instance. I am an eyesore. There isn't a crow in town that will come near me. Three times this month the Salvation Army salvage truck has picked me up. Esquire has cancelled my subscription.

"I submit that a vote for me is a vote for reason, a vote for equity, in short, a vote for the American way."

With a flourish, I signed the letter and sent it off, somehow feeling certain that very soon I would be wearing a complete new wardrobe.

And I was right—because two weeks later I was drafted.

The first film directed by France's renowned Jean Cocteau, Blood Of A Poet, will be shown on Feb. 24. Cocteau's world of symbols and objects grown familiar to him are to be found in this film and will serve as landmarks to those familiar with his books, plays and drawings.

On March 10, the J. Arthur Rank production, Rocking Horse Winner, will be shown. The movie, starring Valerie Hobson and John Mills, is the story of the effects on a young boy of the spendthrift habits of his parents.

Buxom, torchy and lovable Mae West plus drunken and henpecked W. C. Fields! Quite a combination! Give them a topnotch script, and you have a terrific movie. My Little Chickadee, to be shown on March 24, is a burlesque on westerns and stars two of the all time great of the silver screen.

The first complete filming of Verdi's opera, Rigoletto, will be shown on April 14. The Italian film, produced in 1952, stars singers from La Scala di Milano.

The movie that won five Academy Awards in 1934! It Happened One Night, starring Claudette Colbert and Clark Gable, was voted Best Production of the Year. Best Actor, Best Actress, Best Direction and Best Screenplay Need more be said. You'll be able to see it on April 28.

The series closes on May 12 with the showing of the film acclaimed as the most successful attempt to take the spectator on that distant journey into a distorted world—the portrayal of insanity. The Eternal Mask, starring Mathias Wiemna, was produced in Switzerland and is the story of the guilt obsession of a young doctor.

Showings will be held in Carroll Hall auditorium at 8 p.m.

Tickets for the Spring Film Series are on sale at the information desk of Graham Memorial, Ledbetter-Pickard's and will be sold at the door. Tickets are priced at $2 for the complete series. No individual admissions will be sold.

The afternoon's program will feature lectures on new trends in surgery. There will be five lectures.

Wednesday's program will concern problem discussion of sterilizations with representatives from the commercial sterilization companies.

Commercial exhibits will be open throughout the Institute displaying new equipment and supplies particularly concerned with the operating room.

Cuts Finger, Time...

RALEIGH, Jan. 12 (AP)—A convict who lost a finger while working in Central Prison's plant turning out automobile tags has been given his freedom, the state Board of Paroles has announced.

Jenkins was sentenced from Mecklenburg County in April, 1954. His sentence was commuted to time served.

Blazers Are A'Coming

"Blazers" are to make their debut on the campus sometime near the middle of the spring semester. Such was the unanimous decision of the Interdormitory Council at a Tuesday night session devoted principally to the pro and con discussion of the UNC monogrammed coats issue.

The "coat sale" proposal was first introduced for the approval or rejection of the dormitory student body in the form of a referendum during the early months of the fall semester. The results of this vote showed 62 per cent favored the sale.

With this encouragement, the council negotiated with the Robert Rawling's Blazer Co., to whom the contract was finally let.

As what the Rawling's Company representative called an "introductory offer," the men's garments, available in charcoal gray and navy blue, will be priced at $26.95 for the duration of the spring semester. The price will shift to its normal level, $28.95, at the beginning of the 1955 fall semester.

The "dance per semester" Brigadoon by-laws, revised by the council's Rules Committee as a result of its failure to meet the unanimous approval of dorm residents, were read to the council, which will vote on the issue at next Wednesday night's session.

The primary alteration of the by-laws calls for a approval of 80 per cent of dorm residents rather than the original unanimity before the "dorm men's dance" will go into effect.

In other action, the Coed visiting Committee made known plans to establish a "basketball visiting agreement" similar to the "football agreement" which allowed coeds to visit in the men's dorms social rooms during home games and the Social Committee said "no more dorm socials would be held until the spring semester."

Ed. Fraternity Talks School Evaluation

Phi Delta Kappa Educational Fraternity presented a panel discussion last Wednesday evening on the topic of "More Adequate Community Evaluation of Its Schools."

Members of the panel included Dr. Gordon Ellis of the School of Education; J. E. Honeycutt, superintendent of schools of Rockingham, and Dr. H. Arnold Perry, dean of the School of Education. Dr. W. Carson Ryan of the School of Education served as panel moderator. Dr. Reuben Hill of the department of sociology was special guest.

Dr. Perry pointed out that the current adverse criticisms of public schools represent evaluations of the educational system, and the wide range of opinions concerning how well the public schools are functioning indicates the basic problem.

According to Honeycutt, more adequate community evaluation of its schools depends greatly upon the initiative of public education to fulfill its purpose by rendering educational services to each citizen as long as he lives, not merely from the first grade to graduation.

Dr. Ellis referred to the phenomenal way advanced communication has given opportunity for the public all over the country to evaluate the advance of public education in any particular community. Within the community itself, the public is making armchair evaluations from various points of view.

Dr. Hill, assuming that not only is evaluation necessary for change to occur, but that mechanisms strong enough to bring about changes are needed as well, pointed out that principals and teachers are reluctant to go it alone in the cause of public educational. They want to be pressured by a community which, by reason of a continous evaluation survey, is experiencing a build-up of ideas concerning the needs for constant development of its educational system.

Arboretum Founder's Wife Gives S. C. Fund

Mrs. William Chambers Coker of Chapel Hill has set up a series of $750 awards to be known as the William Chambers Coker scholarships at Coker College in Hartsville, S. C.

The scholarship fund was established by Mrs. Coker in honor of her husband who was head of the botany department here. It is expected that income from the fund will provide four or more $750 grants per year, beginning with the 1955-56 session.

Coker's largest scholarships, the new annual awards are open on a competitive basis to resident students in all four college classes. Each class is to be represented among the recipients. Holders below senior rank will be eligible to reapply.

A son of Coker college founder Major James Lide Coker, Dr. William Chambers Coker was a leading benefactor of the Hartsville college. The school's new quarter of a million dollar science building is named for the UNC scientist.

Dr. Coker headed the Carolina botany department for 36 years. He also founded, developed and long directed the University's Coker Arboreturm.

Ike Would Extend Draft Four Years, Pay Raise For 'Career' Servicemen

Tells Congress He Wants 'Proper Military Posture'

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP)—President Eisenhower today asked Congress to extend the draft law four years, grant pay increases to "career" servicemen and create a powertul military reserve to deal with any "aggressor so criminally unwise as to attempt an atomic attack."

The President set out the administration's military manpower program in two special messages to the lawmakers, saying the measures he proposed would give this country the "proper military posture" for the first time in peacetime.

On pay, he proposed increases only for men willing to serve longer than a minimum time, saying it is necessary t omaintain "the experienced hard core of a modern fighting force."

Calling for a "selective" rise, Eisenhower said there should be no increase for officers in the first three years of their service and none in the first two years for enlisted men.

This would mean no pay rise for two-year draftees or for young reserve officers putting in only their obligated time.

The President said the aggregate increase he proposed would hike the present service pay roll by about 6.7 per cent for salary and allowances.

At present the government is paying out about $10,530,000,000 for those purposes. On that basis, the added cost would be about $705,000,000 a year.

ONE ON PAY

Eisenhower devoted one message of 1,800 words to the pay question and a second of 2,000 words to his request for continuation of the draft law and establishment of an improved reserve program.

He said extension of the Selective Service law, due to expire June 30 "is necessary because experience demonstrates that active armed forces of the size we must maintain cannot be raised by voluntary enlistments alone."

He said too an effective reserve program to provide a pool of trained fighting men is necessary because:

"We cannot possibly keep armed and in uniform the total forces that might ultimately be required in an all-out war. The inescapable burdens would endanger the liberties and the economic system we are determined to defend."

Major parts of the proposed reserve program had been disclosed late last year by the Pentagon. The chief feature is a plan for six months' training each year of about 100,000 young men who would go directly into the reserve.

In his manpower reserve message, the President told the lawmakers:

"The penalties of our unreadiness have been mainfold—in treasure, in blood, in the heartbreak of a mighty nation buying time with the lives of men. Now, in an uneasy peace, we can and must move toward this proper posture—at tolerable cost, with due regard for tradition, without disruption of human plans or the material economy.

"Korea and Indochina are bitter reminders ot the ever - present threat of aggression. The masses of armed men and the vast array of warmaking machines, maintained by the Soviets and their satellites along the frontiers of the free world, sharpen the reminders.

"The first purpose of our defense planning remains the maintenance of a just, secure peace. If, however, unwanted war should come, it should find us ready with every resource at our command to repel and defeat the enemy. And, at home, we must have forces trained for every emergency, should an aggressor be so criminally unwise as to attempt an atomic attack.

"In seeking to attain these goals, we must remember that the active military forces are only the cutting edge of our nation's full strength. A vigorous economy, a strong mobilization base and trained citizens are the invincible element in our military striking power."

In asking a "selective" pay raise for military men, Eisenhower said the problem is to keep trained men in the service. He said only 11.6 per cent of Army personnel reenlisted in 1954 compared with a rate of 41.2 per cent in 1949.

He added:

"Since 1949, there has been one increase in pay which, along with increases in allowances, amounted to an aggregate advance in compensation of 5.7 per cent. Military pay, nevertheless, has fallen behind that of industry. In addition, supplementary pay practices, health, security and retirement benefits and bonus systems are now widespread throughout industry, and this fact tends to neutralize such advantage as the military services had in these fields.

Debate Spikes Long Session

Solons Vote Band Funds

By NEIL BASS

In a lengthy session last evening, the student Legislature approved by a vote of 22-15 a bill to appropriate $1100 to the University band. The University Party introduced measure was debated upon strenuously by both its backers and the Student Party opposition.

The SP opponents called the bill an "open door measure" which would encourage other financially limited groups to appeal to the legislature for aid. "Our budget," they went on to say, "is now operating with a deficit of $500 and we cannot afford assistance to any group who asks for it."

Ken Pruitt, president of the band, appealed to the legislators before debate began that "the band is composed of volunteers who generously devote their time, and therefore they should not be forced to play instruments which are obsolete and wear uniforms which are frayed and worn." The SP retaliated that "there were numerous methods which the band could employ to raise funds, such as the sponsoring of symphonies and concerts and the legislature simply does not have the money."

PARKING VIOLATIONS

In other action of the evening, a SP proposed bill to "establish a committee on parking violations" was passed unanimously. The bill calls for "the appointment of three legislators to investigate the possibilities of acquiring the money paid for fines for the use of student government."

Elections of the session resulted in the filling of numerous vacancies on several campus commissions and boards. Named to serve on the Housing Commission were Representatives Hardin (UP), Manning Muntzing (SP) and Lewis Brumfield (SP). Selected to fill posts on the Student Welfare Board were Representatives David Reid (SP), Susan Fink (SP) and Bower (UP). Jim Monteith (UP) was selected in a closely contested battle over Sonja Bergman (SP) to assume a seat on the Publications Board.

"Progress reports" were given to the body of the three legislative supported publications, the "Yack," the "Daily Tar Heel," and the "Quarterly."

Both the "Daily Tar Heel" and the "Yack" reported that their expenses had been underestimated and that they were facing difficulties." The "Tar Heel" has been forced to assume a five day per week publication.

As for the "Quarterly," the report was that the publication was "acting within the limits of its budget."

Executive Says Transportation Offers Adventure And Benefit

"No greater field is open or more inviting to the young man who seeks adventure and benefit from experience of the past than that of the development of transportation," a Greensboro oil company executive told an audience here this week.

The speaker was H. B. Carlisle, superintendent, Friendship Terminal Station of the Esso Standard Oil Company, who was presented here by the University Transportation Club in its fourth in a series of lectures for traffic and transporation majors and other interested students.

Carlisle said, "There is no more thrilling and inspiring story of the background and expansion of civilization than the development of transportation. The wealth of a nation is gauged by its highway, railroad, airway and marine transportation facilities. The backward people are those who do not have the means of coming into contact with others, of carrying on transportation within their boundaries and trade and commerce within the family of nations. No country and no people develop faster than their ability to promote transportation.

"The transportation system of America, rich in heritage and experience of every conceivable mode of transportation, has become truly four dimensional, on land, on water, in the air and under the ground," Carlisle said.

The speaker pointed out that for the student interested in transportation, "whole new fields await him, new methods, new handling equipment, new enterprise and greater amounts of goods to be handled."
